I said to Daddy, "Please ask Uncle James if I may read some of his books." Soon I was having the nicest time. I read and read, but I found that I would never be able to read even a small fraction of the books in that room. Daddy said to me one day, "Tomorrow we start for home," and I felt so bad, for I wanted to read more and more books. Then daddy said to me, "The most of those books are hard to understand. When you are grown maybe Uncle James will let you come to visit him and read his books." Then he showed me some of the big books and I found out that the books I had been reading were children's books and that most of the books on those beautiful shelves were grown people's books.

The next day when we were on the way home, daddy said, "I wish that I had a lot of money so that I could buy you all the books that you want, but I think that you will appreciate them more if you work for them. When we get home you may start working for books."

The very second day after we got home, daddy and I started making a book case. Of course we could not make it pretty like Uncle James, but we made it as nice as we could. When we had finished it daddy said, "Now I am going to give you your first book for your book shelf. This book was once your mother's. It is a book that ought to be on every book shelf. I want you to get many more books of course, but I hope that you will never find a book that you like better than this first book. You have read a little of this book, which is really a book full of books."

Then he handed me my mother's Bible. I am now twelve years old and I have read lots in that first book on my book shelf. Daddy has helped me earn money so that I have been able to buy more and more books each year. Daddy helps me pick my books, so that they will be good ones and then he helps me read them, for he says, "It is better to have a few books and know a lot that you have learned from them, than have a whole lot of books and not even read them."

I hope all you Juniors will start book shelves and enjoy them as much as I have mine.

Your friend,

GEORGE.

Survey and Lecture Trip

By William A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary

For several months there has been considerable correspondence between Executive Committee members of our National Mission Board, District Mission Board and officials of the Grafton, West Virginia church, relative to financial support for the Grafton work. The Executive Committee of our Board decided to send the Secretary to make a survey of the field and to visit several other churches in the District.

I left Dayton Saturday morning, April 16th, 1927 in my Chevrolet and arrived in Grafton on Easter Sunday in time to teach an Adult Bible Class. After the Bible school session a splendid program was rendered by the children. An old fashioned basket dinner was served on the church lawn. The weather was ideal and the dinner was even better than that. Brother Howell, the pastor, preached an inspiring and uplifting sermon in the afternoon and in the evening I gave the Historical and Missionary Stereopticon lecture. The house did not hold all the people. We were royally entertained by Brother and Sister Vandergrift in their beautiful home on the mountain side, overlooking the city. We visited a number of homes and were favorably impressed as to possibilities for a strong Brethren congregation if the field is properly worked. There are many of Tunker persuasion in and around Grafton. The location of the church building does not seem to be ideal. It doubtless will be for better after the main highway, which will adjoin the church property, is completed.

Terra Alta

On Monday, Brother Howell accompanied me on the trip to Terra Alta, where we met and conferred with Brother Will Miller, who is faithfully serving the church with part time preaching. We took our noon and evening meal in the home of Brother Anzer Whitehair and were taken by this good brother to a number of homes. The high altitude of this place and the congenial spirit of the folks, made one wish he could remain there as Peter wanted to remain on the Mountain after he witnessed that inspiring transfiguration of our Lord. We gave the lecture to a fair-sized audience and returned to Grafton, where we lodged in the home of our dear Brother and Sister Howell. We learned to know and love them better because of our visit with them. Sister Howell's health is rapidly improving and she will doubtless soon be able to do a much larger service for her Lord than she was permitted to do in the past six or eight months. Brother Howell is a tireless worker and he seems to have won the confidence and respect of the Grafton people, who prefer very much to retain him as full time pastor. This may be impossible due to lack of funds, and consideration is being given to allow Brother Howell to serve the Terra Alta church with part time pastoral work and preaching. If this can not be done we shall present the matter of financial aid to our National Board for due consideration.

Gatewood and Oak Hill, West Virginia

On Wednesday night we gave the lecture to another crowded house at Gatewood and on Thursday night, while rain poured down, we lectured to a good audience at Oak Hill, where Brother Freeman Ankrum is doing splendid work. They are getting ready to build a new church. I felt very much at home with them in their modern, beautiful parsonage. They treated me just right. Brother Ankrum took me to a number of homes and places of interest. They surely have some picturesque scenery in West Virginia.

The roads were fine, but the great amount of rainfall caused many slides, especially on Cotton Top Mountain, which is quite a mountain—six miles up and six down.

Liberal offerings were made for our mission interests. The offering at Oak Hill is to be used at Lost Creek, Kentucky, for the construction of a poultry house, which Brother Early is so anxious to build as soon as the Lord opens the way with sufficient funds.

The trip was an enjoyable and we trust a profitable one.

*There's a little, old lady, whose hair is gray,
 Whose shawl is blue in a sombre way;
 Who sits by the window and looks and looks,
 As the people pass like picture books;
 Whose face is wrinkled, whose lips are thin,
 But whose eyes have seen God from the light therein.*

*Children may laugh and children may play,
 And Youth is for love without allay,
 And work and success may mark each stage
 Of progression through the middle age,
 But only the old may live to see
 The presence of divinity.*

*So, some may sing of the smile of a boy,
 Who can romp and run in pursuit of joy;
 And some may tell of the virgin bliss
 Of a maiden fair and her lover's kiss;
 Or extol the path of achievement trod—
 But I reverence her eyes that have reverenced God!*

A VISIT TO KLARYSEW

"High on the hill of Klarysew is a light that cannot be hid," writes Rev. Charles T. Hardt in speaking of a recent visit to the Methodist orphanage in Poland.

Mr. and Mrs. Hardt, who made the journey from Warsaw to Klarysew on All Souls' Day, saw hundreds and hundreds of people walking beside the railroad tracks or even in front of the diminutive train, all headed for the cemeteries, where they were to hold services in memory of their dead. In every village cemetery crowds of people were standing about the recently cleaned graves upon which flickered innumerable candles. The countless candles shining in the cold, misty twilight among the tombstones, the shrubbery, and the slowly moving throngs made a beautiful and impressive picture, says Mr. Hardt. In one village a great procession was setting out for the cemetery, headed by numbers of priests dressed in their robes and carrying a cross, while a band played a beautiful but melancholy air.

But what a contrast at Klarysew! "Here," says Mr. Hardt, "one finds abundant life. In the midst of a people long overcome by a lifeless, dogmatic traditionalism these children in the orphanage at Klarysew are tasting of life in its fullness. By their constant activity one could see that they actually were glad they were living. These orphans, many of them lost among the refugees in the wake of the war and some found beside their dead unknown mothers, are becoming alive to an appreciation of what life really means. I remarked to Director Dropiowski that I had never before seen youngsters so lively, so cheerful, and so much at home in an institution. He replied: "Sometimes we have to caution them to be careful, but we try to give them a happy home. We want them to have pleasant memories of their childhood." A religion pointing only to the dead past, a religion which glories in funerals, whose Christ is forever on the cross is not a religion of life and joy, but a religion of graves, of gloom, and of dead morals."—Christian Advocate.

THE MISSIONARY TASK

By Mary E. Ewing

Missionary Superintendent of the New Jersey Christian Endeavor Union

As missionary superintendents and chairmen, and as members of missionary committees of Christian Endeavor societies, we have a twofold task. We must first make our society members know the need of the world, and then we must show them how to satisfy the need of the world.

To make known the need of the world, we should—

1. Emphasize Bible-study, for the Bible is the great missionary book.

2. Make our Christian Endeavor missionary meetings as interesting as possible. Have you tried debates, "legacy meetings," dramatization, etc.?

3. Promote mission-study classes.

4. Encourage the reading of missionary books.

5. Give missionary plays and pageants.

6. Get in touch with actual mission work through letters from missionaries.

To satisfy the need of the world, we should—

1. Give our time—to charitable work of all kinds, to work among foreigners, etc.

2. Give our money—in the way best suited to your local conditions; to your own denominational work. Give at least fifty cents per member annually.

3. Give our lives in full-time Christian service.

4. Pray for the world—using your own prayer list made up of missionaries whom your society knows or supports.

Rahway, New Jersey,—C. E. World.

Every trouble is an opportunity to win the grace of strength. A trouble is a moral and spiritual task. It is something which is hard to do. Strength is increased by encounter with the difficult. Every day we are blessed with new opportunities for the development of strength of soul.—George Hodges.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Milford Church Gives to Endowment

This church is well known to the brotherhood and for the past few years has met some discouragements. At one time it was the strongest church in the town. They have a good brick building and well located. They have lost in membership by death and removal and the community suffered financially from a bank failure.

The past year they have been served by Brother Nicodemus as pastor, who is a member of the Church of the Brethren and who has also been giving part of his time to one of his own churches in the town. I found him a very congenial companion and who gave me every aid he could. He is a man of ability, a Bible teacher and a good preacher and well thought of. His services to our people have been appreciated and satisfactory. I found a great deal of indifference, a lack of enthusiasm and spiritual fervor, which I was told was a characteristic of the entire community.

We have, however, a fine group of people here, with ability to lead out in a bigger work than they are doing. They have strength enough, if all got in the harness and worked, to make a good strong church. I was received very kindly and found several that were interested in the school and who gave cheerfully to the Endowment.

Under the circumstances I consider their gift very good, the total was $760.00.

Gravelton Church

This church is located in the country about six miles from Nappanee. There are only five or six families here, but are doing a fine work in the Sunday school and making it possible for those to attend who could not otherwise. Brother Whetstone has been giving them preaching services in the afternoon and held a good meeting here last winter.

These small country churches have rendered a big service to our work, for when you check up on WHERE THE PREACHERS have come from, you will find a large per cent have come from the country. GRAVELTON has contributed its share, among them being Brother Stuckman of Goshen.

These churches should be kept up and given every encouragement, for it is not always big numbers that count most. The people here are not rich in this world's goods, and with the few they have it means sacrifice to keep the work up in the local church. I received $100.00 for the college.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

A New Mission Field

Harrah is a rural town about centrally located on the Yakima Indian Reservation, thirty-seven miles west of Sunnyside.

Nearly five years ago a Sunday school was organized by the American Sunday School Union. The sessions of the school were for several years held in the Harrah school house. A year and a half ago prayer meeting was started. Faithful members of three or four families in the community kept the weekly prayer meeting alive. It was finally decided to erect a church building on a lot which was offered if used for church purposes. On Washington's birthday, 1926, the ground was broken and excavation work was started for a full basement 36 by 48 feet. The plan was for the erection of a $5,000.00 building of the dimensions of the basement. The building consists of an auditorium and two class rooms on the ground floor and four class rooms in the balcony. Rev. Holland of White Swan, pastor of the Methodist church of that place, conducted the groundbreaking service. Dinner was served in a vacant store room by the women of the Sunday school for the men and boys who were working. The women were glad to do this as a part of their contribution to starting the work.

During all this time there had been no regular minister in charge of the work. Gospel Hall men from Yakima came twice each month and Rev. Hoagland of the Evangelical church of Outlook came on the first Sunday of each month. Rev. Hoagland held a week's meeting during the month of February, 1926. Two persons made a public confession during this meeting. Occasionally ministers from other localities conducted services for us. All these meetings were held in the school building.

The new building was ready for use in the early fall, but the dedication did not officially take place until the month of January just past. The building was dedicated with an all-day program. The regular Sunday school session was held. This was followed by a sermon by Rev. J. C. Beal of Sunnyside. A basket dinner was served in the basement of the church. Rev. Ingram, pastor of the First Baptist church of Yakima, gave the dedication address at two o'clock. At this service a free-will offering of $750.00 was received. This leaves an indebtedness of $780.00. An offering is taken the first Sunday of each month to help liquidate this debt. Lunch was served after the afternoon service and Rev. Hunt of the Yakima Gospel Hall preached the evening sermon. Special music for this special all-day service by the local choir and the men's double quartette of Yakima.

For seven years there was but one Brethren family in this vicinity. We were isolated members, being able to only occasionally attend services at the home church at Sunnyside. We endeavored to attend all the Communion services. During the last two years seven more Brethren families moved to the Reservation and we have prospects of still others in the near future.

The need of the field and the opportunity presented by it was brought to the attention of the First Brethren church of Sunnyside at their annual business meeting on New Year's Day. Owing to the fact that Brother Earl W. Reed is now living in Sunnyside and agreed to preach in the absence of the pastor, the church voted to loan their pastor to the Harrah people once each month. This was very much appreciated by the Harrah people and such interest was shown that when he had made two trips, it was decided to have a short series of special meetings. Rev. J. C. Beal led in this special service of one week. During this week Bible studies were given in the afternoon and sermons were preached in the evening. Despite the very busy season the interest was good and the crowds large. As a result of this short meeting seventeen persons took a definite stand for the Lord. Eleven of these came at the last service. The following Sunday evening was the regular time for Brother Beal to preach for us and at this service five more confessed Christ as their personal Savior. Twenty-seven persons from this community have already been baptized by the Sunnyside pastor. Twelve of the number have already become members of the Sunnyside church and at least ten more are planning to identify themselves with that organization. A few of those who have been baptized were the results of the Billy Sunday campaign in Yakima, while others were already Christians, but were convinced of the Brethren position. Three of those who came forward have been baptized by Rev. Elder of the Gospel Hall at Yakima. A number of these converts were heads of families and their stand has meant much to their families and the community.

With the Brethren people already on the field and those who just recently identified themselves with the Brethren church we deem it advisable to have services oftener than once each month and we are making plans to that end.

The Sunday School attendance has increased from an average of around 125 in February to an attendance in March of 160. On the closing Sunday of the special meetings the attendance was 187.

We request the prayers of the entire brotherhood for the Lord's work at Harrah that we may be definitely led. We are hoping to hold Communion services here this spring. MRS. E. B. GOULD.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

Nothing spectacular has been accomplished but there is cause for rejoicing since the Lord has seen fit to place his approval on the effort put forth. The auxiliaries of the church are all doing good work. The finances are in good shape and the attendance at the regular services is good. Our Easter offerings for Foreign Missions while not so large as last year, due to financial conditions prevailing just now, is well beyond the thousand dollar mark. Offerings are still coming in and if all our churches do as well we will have a fund that will enable our Board to send additional workers to our force on the field. The work at Sunnyside has not advanced as rapidly as it might have done due to the fact that we have not been able to have any special campaigns during the past two years. After expending quite a sum for evangelists from other than our own denomination without any large addition to the membership, it was decided to get, if possible, one of our own men, to lead in a campaign. We were unable to make such arrangement, and the church has held no special meeting for the past two years. But despite this, people have been won to the Lord and have identified themselves with our church. As reported by our church correspondent, during the year 1926 thirteen persons were baptized and received into the church. Since the first of January I have had the privilege of baptizing thirty-six persons. Twenty-two of these have already been received into the church and there are still ten more of those baptized who are planning to place their membership with us. A part of these came from a short meeting at Harrah, Washington, a place where we have had a number of families for some time. This special meeting lasted one week and during this short time seventeen persons took a definite stand for the Lord. Eleven of these came the last service. The meeting should have continued longer, but owing to some hindering causes it was deemed wise to close.

On the following Sunday evening, which was the time for my monthly visit to these people, five more confessed Christ. A few of these went to another organization while others who have been Christians for years came with us, being drawn because of our distinctly church doctrines, but in private ditions, it was not possible to preach our distinctiv echurch doctrines but in private conversation the opportunity came to let them know what we believe and practice as a church. Faithful, consistent living on the part of those who have been on the field for some time made this work possible. Counting the families which were in the community before this special meeting, we now have fourteen families of our own faith and a number of other families stand ready to come with us if an organization is perfected. Harrah is more than thirty miles from Sunnyside and although the automobile has, in a measure, eliminated distance, yet it is readily seen that thirty miles is farther than people will travel every Sunday to services. Some arrangements must be made to take care of these people. A Union Sunday school has been doing work in the community for several years. Our people have a large share in this Sunday school work, several being teachers. Brother Conrad Stover has the honor of being teacher of a Young People's Class of fifty-eight members. Since the week's meeting, already mentioned, the attendance in the school has increased from around 125 to 185. Last Sunday, Easter, their attendance was 227. It is hoped that some plan may be devised whereby we may have an organization where the prospects for a self-supporting church in a very short time are good.

My work at Sunnyside closes not later than the first of October. I am waiting the Lord's leading as to just what line of work I am to follow. It is possible that some time may be given to Evangelistic work and definite Bible teaching. It shall be pleased to correspond with any who may be interested in securing my service in any line. I have had a desire to be near our own College, and it seems the Lord may be planning to make this possible.

J. C. BEAL.

AN ITINERATING EVANGELIST

Dear Evangelist: We had a splendid communion service at the Third Brethren church, April 14. Brother Elwood Braker was in charge. The attendance was not very large but all seemed to enter into the spirit of the service.

I preached three sermons on these ordinances on three Sunday mornings previous to the communion.

They have not yet hired a pastor. I have been filling the pulpit on Sundays and Brother Braker takes charge of the Thursday night prayer meeting. While the attendance is not very large, I think the interest has been gradually increasing, also the attendance. What they badly need is a lot of pastoral work which I am too busy to give them. I do a little visiting on Sunday afternoons, also I aim to do some one day each week.

They have had some setbacks but I believe this a splendid field for a hard working, consecrated pastor.

I still go to Delaware every two weeks and give them four services over a radius of 30 miles, and preach in the homes of these noble people.

We are entering new homes, with a greatly increased interest. The attendance has been increasing and we are having confessions right along. We had a crowded house last night. Two children confessed Christ, and an Italian lady asked for prayers.

We expect to conduct a communion service, this trip. Hope to have some good news to report in the near future.

Pray for the Third church, and the Delaware work, especially for me that I may be physically as well as spiritually able to take care of this Delaware work.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

P. S.—I forgot to mention the splendid Foreign Missionary offering at the Third church. The Sunday school gave $50 and the church $70, making a total of $120. This is exceptionally good for a small, poor congregation. I. D. B.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

The Lord's work in this section of his vineyard is going forward, all of the auxiliaries of the church being in good condition. All glory to Christ the Head of the church. The whole church working together with him to bring glory not to ourselves but to him brings sure success.

A recent friendly attendance contest between the first Brethren Sunday school of "The City of Brotherly Love" and the First Brethren Sunday school of "The Gateway to the South" resulted in much benefit to both schools, although the laurels came to "Maryland My Maryland" at the end of the eight weeks. Philadelphia forged ahead at the start like the fabled hare but on the third Sunday was only four ahead, and on the home run was quite hidden by the dust of their southern competitor, the final count showing Hagerstown 196 ahead.

Both schools broke all former records, Philadelphia's average attendance for the eight weeks being 315 against 340 here. Their average attendance for the last quarter in 1926 was 265 and ours was 263, giving the two schools an even start. May the benefits abide. It was a pleasant race, no trouble with the umpires and no accidents. It should be said that an epidemic in Philadelphia acted as a hindrance to that school. Their banner attendance was 337, while ours was 394, but since the contest ended they report a record attendance of 390 on Easter Sunday. Let the good work continue. Both schools are doubtless anxious to reach the 400 mark. Which one will arrive first? Come on, Philadelphia!

Our communion on Easter Sunday was one of the best. A splendid spirit prevailed and a large number gathered in the upper room. Eleven new members were received during the Easter season, eight by baptism and three by letter. May they be numbered among the faithful.

Recently the church accepted with regrets the resignation of Prof. Charles McClure who has served the church faithfully as organist nearly nineteen years. His is an unusual record and many were sorry at the parting on that last Sunday when the church presented him a beautiful bouquet of flowers and when many expressions of appreciation were heard. We were fortunate in securing at once a very efficient organist to fill the place, Mr. Kemp Kretzer. A man at the organ seems to be the rule here. Since last fall the church has had the services of a chorister, Mr. W. S. Remsburg. He is giving splendid service and is well liked and much appreciated by the choir and the whole congregation. The choir gave a special concert recently, presenting an attractive program of much merit. How thankful we ought to be for good music! What a help in the service of worship!

These days ought to remind man of his dependence upon God. How weak and helpless man is in the midst of the elements, cyclone, lightning, flood waters, earthquake. How important that all men should keep the commandments of the Lord and be found faithful to the church which he purchased with his own blood. How important that all people refuse any compromise with the world, seeking rather to live daily as becometh children of God. May our whole brotherhood seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness.

G. C. CARPENTER.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

Our revival meetings closed on the 19th. We had some excellent sermons, and with the exception of several rainy nights, had good crowds. At the beginning of the meetings, several gentlemen from Washington, D. C., were with us. Their presence and help, especially with the special music, were very much appreciated. We also had Brother Kent from Washington here one night. His pictures of the Holy Land were very much enjoyed by all present, and especially the explanation he gave of each scene. Brother E. L. Miller preached for us one night, and Brother E. B. Shaver preached five sermons for us, and Brother Rohart our pastor, very nicely handled the rest of the time.

The result was five were baptized, and we feel sure greater zeal was aroused among the membership. Yet we had hoped to gain several others for whom special prayers were being offered, and we still hope they may come later.

Our Sunday school is still growing; we have 140 enrolled now, but 98 is the largest attendance we have had yet. We are hoping the attendance will reach one hundred real soon. The interest that is now being taken in the Christian Endeavor is very encouraging. We are trusting the Lord may bless all the efforts that are being made to lead people closer in his ways.

MRS. IDA KELLER.

THE WORK AT COLUMBUS, OHIO

I am sure it will be a pleasure to many of our brethren to learn that the work at Columbus, Ohio, is going forward. The Sunday school and church are in better condition than for years. There is new life and a very good influence is spreading over the community because of this new vigor. Brother Gotschall and his family have the high esteem of the people both in and out of the church. It is wonderful to see how this work is being kept together and growing when the pastor works six days a week in a foundry to support his family and then, tired and worn, is able to hold two mid-week as well as the Sunday services. This strain caused Brother Gotschall's breakdown and he had to be under the doctor's care three times in less than two months. In spite of the suffering and the confinement, this brother and his wife were always cheerful, knowing nothing but to press on, having the assurance that the Spirit of God is with them leading them on.

We have stated that this brother is doing a noble work, and it is true, but let the members as well as the pastor unite in doing this noble work, so that the burden may not be so one-sided. No organization of the world would expect its executive officers to give so much time leading it on to success and victory and yet require them to be entangled in other activities for the winning of a livelihood. I do believe the Apostles were right in holding to this ideal, "We must give ourselves to the study of the word and to prayer." Study of the Word gives light (knowledge) and prayer brings power from on high. The Apostles had no time but for God and his plan of salvation, and I think our churches should not require their ministers to spend so much time in secular pursuits. Notwithstanding his burdens, Brother Gotschall is doing a fine work; I found him to be a man of great energy, a man who leads while he works.

As I went through the church last week I found painters refinishing the church interior, so that Columbus will soon have a nice place in which to worship. The pastor and a few helpers solicited and collected over $300 for this purpose. Another piece of good news is that during the month of May the mortgage on the church will go up in smoke and the congregation in this city will be free of debt. This will furnish an incentive for our brethren in Columbus to go forward to greater things. May God bless pastor and people with a great ingathering of souls.

"MODEL CHURCHES"

I was very much impressed with Brother C. W. Mayes' article on the "Model Church" which is based on the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible. We readily see by reading, that God means the Bible to be sufficient. Revelations 22:18 and 19 tells us no man shall add to or take from the words that are written. It is sad to know we get forms and ceremonies into our churches that we do not read of in the Bible and some of the things we do read of there are being dropped. Now who is responsible for these conditions?

When we ask about the salutation, the answer is, it is not sanitary now. Dare we be ruled by such excuses, when it comes to obeying our Lord's commands? It seems clear that the amount of joy we get out of obeying any or all of the commands is proportioned by the amount of love we put into his service.

What about reading the Bible? Now are we reading it for ourselves, or are we depending on our preachers reading it for us? Acts 17:11 Paul commended the people of Berea for searching the Scriptures daily. God grant that we all may do like they did and that we may be guided by the Word, rather than by what other churches and people are doing. Let us keep our churches based on pure Bible teachings, and not let worldly amusements take the place of worship. If we are followers of Christ we are expected to follow in his way. Lord, help us to be true followers of him and that our churches will be really model churches.

God does not always judge us by the amount of work we accomplish, but rather by the motive back of the work."

"THE CALL TO ADVENTURE"

simply because we have not heard the call. But Abraham was living so that he could hear the call. It was a normal and natural thing that God should speak to this young man. Abraham did not hesitate, because his heart was receptive to the best influence. Neither can we afford to hesitate. Let's begin now. Adventure into the realm of real life service for God.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

TEN LITTLE DUTIES

Ten little duties! Does no good to whine;
Skip about and do one; then there are nine.
Nine little duties: it never pays to wait;
Do one quick, and, presto! there are eight.
Eight little duties: might have been eleven;
One done in no time; now they're just seven.

Seven little duties! 'tisn't such a fix;
Do one more, and—bless me! they're only six.

Six little duties, sure as I'm alive!
Never mind, one's over; now there are only five.

Five little duties knocking at our door;
Lead off one to Doneland; that leaves only four.

Four little duties, plain as plain can be;
Can't be shirked—one's over—leaving only three.

Three little duties: like a soldier true;
Meet them and vanquish one; then there'll be but two.

Two little duties between you and fun;
In just a minute longer there'll be only one.
One little duty: now what will you do?

Do it! Why, surely; now you are through!
—Reformed Church Messenger.

MABEL'S NEW NURSE

Out on the piazza the block forts were going up beautifully, while just inside, where the breath of the flowers and all the pleasant summer sounds could come, mother was reading to Mabel.

It was not "a-very-sick," but just a "sick-enough-to-have-to-stay-in-bed" that was the matter with her, Mabel said. It was rather nice when it came time for cream toast, and while mother read to her; but it was hard to lie still when mother had to go away and when Mabel could hear the other children playing with her. By and by Bridget looked in at the door.

"The washer-woman's little boy has hurt his foot, ma'am, and she wants to know will you come down a bit?"

"Oh, dear," said Mabel, "everybody wants you! Who'll take care of me while you're gone?"

Mother thought a minute. "I know some one who can help you to be the best kind of a little invalid, if she will," she said. "I'll write her name on this slip of paper, and you can open it after I'm gone, and see if you want her."

Mabel waited only long enough to hear mother's steps pass out of the hall before she opened the paper and read, "Mabel Gray."

"Why, that's just me!" she said. "I thought it was going to be somebody."

At first her lips pouted; but then at the thought of being her own nurse, funny little dimples and smiles began to come. She told herself to be good. "Lie still, my dear, and try to sleep now." And soon she laughed outright. Then she began to tell herself stories, and by and by she was sound asleep.

"Well, how did the new nurse get along?" mother asked.

"Pretty well," answered Mabel. "She asked me wasn't I 'shamed of myself to be so selfish, when I had you all the time and that poor boy only wanted you a little while. And then she said I must be good and keep still; she didn't just tell me to; she made me do it."

"I thought she would," laughed mother. "Little girlie, I am glad you have learned that, for it is true when you are well just the same as when you are sick."—Ex.

IN MEMORIAM

Elmore J. Worst—An Appreciation

Another of the pioneer Brethren has passed to his reward. Perhaps the most humble and inconspicuous of all the men who had a major part in the making of the Brethren church, was E. J. Worst of Ashland. It may be that I am not old enough in the denomination to pass an opinion, but now that it has been put into this article, it shall stand. I do not believe that the "Doctor" as we had learned to call him, was known enough by the younger people of the church to be appreciated. A man of few words, his deeds were not exploited by himself and never by another, so far as I have heard. Located here at the head of things, near the college and near the men who largely had to do with the prominent and public things of the denomination, his advice and counsels were doubtless written in the actions and doings of others. For several years a victim of shaking paralysis, he was not lately seen anywhere save the church-house where he went despite the chagrin his disease gave him.

Dr. Worst was a man of strong convictions. No man admonished me more in all my ministry to remain true to the things that make us a separate people than Dr. Worst. He was a thorough Dunker in all its meaning and believed that the preachers ought to be more diligent in preaching the peculiar doctrines of the church at whatever cost. Uncompromising in his belief of the necessity of the Brethren teachings, it was hard for him to believe that a preacher did his whole duty unless he often stressed them, in the pulpit. He had no time for the half-way Christianity of many denominations and did not hesitate to say it in the most outspoken fashion.

The title of "doctor" came to him because of his life-time efforts to help to alleviate the ills of humanity with some remedies, all of the older brethren will remember. He believed in them thoroughly, also, and was convinced that he was doing a worthy work in advertising and selling them. Thousands testify likewise. He told me that he had spent more than a thousand dollars for a single recipe.

His relation to the college was his greatest public interest and it will be hard to find one to fit into the shoes he wore, in that capacity. He was a Trustee, I think, from the beginning and was elected only a few days before his death for another term. He was its treasurer for many years; in this capacity, he believed that he had actually saved the college to the church when its friends were so few that an Endowment would have been scoffed at. Yet, he went down into his pocket to make up deficits more than once. Be it said to his honor that once when the deficit was $800, he gave half of the amount and the late Elder Jacob Cassel convassed the churches for the other half. Thus he stood against the whole brotherhood in his interests in the college, when friends were few. There was small limitation to his generosity.

After his family, the local church will miss him most. Its progress was his delight and its future of great concern to him. At one time he had donated a lot on Main street for the erection of this church and had his keen foresight been accepted, this church would now be far ahead of its place both in the brotherhood and the city. It would doubtless be out of debt with a good many members who, in the meantime, slipped into other satisfactory church relationships and are permanently lost to our faith.

The end came peacefully and quickly. He desired to go if he could not recover, and no doctor gave him any hope. It seemed an answer to his prayer that he went away to be with his Lord, quickly, after he had surrendered to the inevitable. He had a wonderful body and a rugged constitution and had not this malady set upon him he doubtless would have lived to a very advanced age. This, I believe, was his hope. And why not? But to go and "be with Jesus is far better." He was ready. The Lord took him. But the place of a faithful, genial, lovable, generous Christian man waits to be filled. May the Lord raise him up.

CHARLES A. BAME.

Elmore J. Worst—An Appreciation

"Now thou art gone and never must return." When our friend and brother E. J. Worst, well known to the church, had closed the volume of his earthly career and the Recording Angel had posted the last item, it was recorded to his lasting credit that he had been an indispensable link in the chain of circumstances that made possible the present Ashland College. It is no diminution of the mead of gratitude due him to say that there were a few other indispensable links, for a link he was still. For a quarter of a century he contributed sympathy, service, money, prayers, to the promotion of the College, as well as to other high interests. Many a struggling church has felt the ministration of his kindly hand, and no worthy cause, as he understood them, appealed to him in vain. In contributions to the higher spirit life, he found a special joy. Often have I been touched with the thrill of his satisfaction as he saw the fruition of his sacrifices and the realization of his hopes. On more than one commencement occasion have I observed him "a gladness fed with (more than) secret tears," and told him that the success, the achievement, the glory of the hour was his as well as that of others. To the College he was doubly a blessing because of the circumstances at the time of his giving. When the College was hardly more than a name and a glorious ideal, when endowment there was none, when resources were negligible, when friends were few, his was the encouraging word, the kindly hand, the willing sacrifice that helped us preserve, endure, and carry on. He was modest, unostentatious, self-forgetful. "He never scrambled at the shearer's feast to shove away the worthy bidden guest." He never denied to others the honor due them, nor appropriated to his own vainglory the fruits of their toils and sacrifices. As Wordsworth said of Milton, so might we say of him,

"So didst thou travel on life's common way
In cheerful godliness; and yet thy soul
The lowliest duties on herself did lay."

SHIPSHEWANA BIBLE CONFERENCE

The Bible Conference at Shippshewana Lake will begin on July tenth. Instead of a two weeks' session as usual, it will be concluded on the second Sunday, in order to give place to the Young People's Training Conference, which will begin on the 18th of July. The committee has arranged a rather more intensive program than usual, because of the shortened period of time given to it. Dr. Miller will be with us throughout, and Brother Harley Zumbaugh will direct the singing. There will be three periods of worship; prayer hour at eight o'clock, as well as an afternoon and evening meeting. Ministers and laymen of Indiana should plan to attend as many sessions as possible. The Lodge will be open this year to men and women both, and conducted as any Hotel would be conducted. You can drop in for any period of time, and find accommodations at a very reasonable price, and as good as you would get at similar places.—H. F. Stuckman, Secretary Program Committee.

BRETHREN YOUNG PEOPLE'S CAMP

Shippshewana Lake, Indiana—July 17-24, 1927

With this initial announcement we are glad to call attention to the Young People's Conference that is to be held at Shippshewana Lake, July 17-24, immediately following the week of the Bible Conference.

This summer camp is open to Brethren young people of fifteen years and over and their adult leaders. A strong faculty of instructors is being secured for the presentation of interesting courses. In addition ample provision is being made for a complete recreational program.

Indiana churches and schools are planning to give large support to this worthy undertaking. Brethren young people from other sections will be accorded a hearty welcome. It is believed that the response will be sufficiently large to make this an annual summer feature for Brethren young people. Further information may be obtained from Professor J. A. Garber, Ashland, Ohio, or Reverend Harold D. Fry, Oakville, Indiana.

"Honor Thy Father" Also

Mother's Day has rapidly become a universal institution, and it is good for the world that it is so. Nor is it to the best interests of all that its observance be turned into a mere "Mothers' and Daughters'" affair; mother's influence is too broad and deep and her responsibility too universal, to be limited to one sex, the son being the recipient of her love and care as fully as the daughter, especially during the earlier years, and needs as much as does she the day to remind him of the honor he owes his mother, and of the appreciation that he has been all too negligent or careless about expressing. Mother's Day is a most significant event for us all, and one of which we have all become familiar. But that there is such a thing as Father's Day is not so widely known, nor so universally observed. There are some churches that observe such a day in similar manner to Mother's Day, but more widely the idea has spread in the form of "Fathers' and Sons'" celebrations. We may be grateful for the growth of this movement and it promises untold blessing by way of improving the relations between Father and son. But there is need also of a special day set apart for the doing of honor and reverence to fatherhood by all the members of his household, and when father may be reminded of the sacredness and responsibility of his relation to his family and be inspired to nobler fatherhood.

The divine requirement is to honor thy father as well as thy mother, both are accounted worthy according to the scriptural injunction, and both daughters and sons are included in the obligation. Fathers and mothers stand side by side in their responsibility and in the honor due unto them, and both of them, if they are true to their office, have put us all—sons and daughters alike—greatly in their debt. This is a lesson we all need to learn, and one that is essential to the maintenance of a sense of home unity.

The honoring of father implies respect and reverence both for father and the office of fatherhood. It is an attitude that the affections inspire and the relationship requires. And the former, that is, respect and loving reverence for father, the individual, is most natural and easily produced when conditions are normal. Where love abides and justice and kindness rule, reverence for father comes easy; under such conditions it flows naturally and spontaneously from the heart of the child. But even when the home life may not be so harmonious and father may not appear to be always high motivated and consistent, yet the very office of fatherhood requires respect though the one occupying that office may not show himself to be worthy. No young man or young woman is excused for being disrespectful of father's place and position, even though father himself may not seem to possess those elements that merit respect. The very relationship demands the right attitude—an attitude of respect for fatherhood—on the part of the offspring regardless of parental life qualities, though, of course, there cannot be that warmth of feeling and expressive regard for the person of father that there ought otherwise to be, when his attitude is persistently uncongenial and uncompanionable and his life is lacking in admirable qualities. But we need to get a fresh understanding of what the relationship requires; our day is sorely in need of a revival of genuine youthful reverence for the office of fatherhood—and motherhood as well.

The honoring of father also requires obedience; that goes with the relationship. There is of course a limit beyond which obedience cannot be expected to go to the father whose life and wishes run counter to the principles of right and truth. The Christian requirement is that children shall obey their parents "in the Lord", and we are told that such obedience is "right", and is "well-pleasing unto the Lord." Parents who are not "in the Lord" must know that there is a moral limit beyond which the child cannot be required to give obedience. The parent has no right to violate the Christian conscience of the child; he cannot expect obedience to a command to do something morally wrong; he must be "in the Lord" and his wishes in harmony to the divine will, if he is to insist on full and implicit obedience. And on the other hand, the Christian ideal is that children shall obey "in the Lord." That requires a particular type or quality of obedience. It implies, as Sylvester Horne so splendidly states, "obedience in the spirit of Christ. It is Christian obedience, happy, cheerful, loving, eager. If I do just what I am told to do in a slack, reluctant, or even resentful way, that may be obedience of a sort, but it is not obedience in the Lord. No one could believe that to be the spirit of Christ, who was subject to his parents, and grew in favor with them day by day. It is the hearty and cordial acquiescence which does so much to manifest the honor due to fatherhood and motherhood."

But a fair treatment of this theme requires us to make a suggestion or two regarding the other side of the relationship and responsibility—the father's. Though the father's office must be respected, his own person will not command that genuine regard and warmth of devotion and high reverence that is the father's delight, unless he himself is worthy in life and conduct. An important element of right conduct on his part is a proper consideration of the rights of the child. He is not to be looked upon as a chattel, a convenience, a mere tool in his hands to meet his every whim, and on whom he can spend his wrath and provoking conduct without protest or resentment on the part of the child. Paul says, "And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath." Fathers forget that side of the relationship too often in their insistence upon proper obedience and respectful consideration by their children. They speak with roughness, with disrespect and depreciation of them and conduct themselves in an irritating, lionish attitude, and treat them in a manner in which they would not attempt to treat any one else, merely because they are drunk with the consciousness of power and imagine that the child has no right to complain. Such treatment provokes disrespect and makes rebels of children. Many a boy has run away from home and plunged out upon the world to face its problems and trials without counsel and alone because his father has been a petty tyrant in the home, or because his mother has jaded him with constant and unsympathetic criticism. Hear the admonition again, and let us take it to heart, "And, ye fathers (and mothers also), provoke not your children to wrath."

"But bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." That is the positive side of the obligation. That forbids an easy-going, yielding, weakly-indulgent attitude on the part of parents. In all too many homes, instead of ruling his children, the father is ruled by them. Instead of providing for their needs and directing them in the gratifying of their wants, they tell him what to provide and order their wants supplied and let him pay the bills, and father submits without regard to what he can afford or what is best for his children. That parent is not faithful to his responsibility who grants his child its every want. Such indulgence is not real kindness to children; it is rather injustice to them. They are thereby denied one of the most fundamental rights of every child—a disciplined, well-directed, and wisely-controlled childhood and youth. That is a social heritage to which every child has a right to lay claim, and of which he cannot be deprived except at the disgrace and condemnation of the home, or society, or both. A disciplined life is one of the most essential elements to success and personal worth, and the father is no more excusable for failing to make provision for such a well-regulated and disciplined life than he would be for failing to provide for the health and strength of the body.

Religious education and spiritual nurture constitute a very vital part of that positive contribution to the child's life, for which the father, along with the mother, is responsible. Generally the responsibility is thought to rest almost, if not wholly, on the mother, but that is not the divine view of the matter. If one or the other of the parents bears the greater responsibility at this point it is the father. He is the head of the household and as such is supremely responsible for directing the worship and religious instruction of the home. The old patriarchal view of the father being the prophet, priest and king of the home has never, in its essential meaning, been entirely annulled. There is every reason to believe that its high spiritual significance has been carried over into the Christian dispensation, and that as Jehovah honored Abraham by saying, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him and they will keep the way of the Lord", and by confiding in him his divine purposes, so he will honor the fathers of this day when they will set themselves with strength and wisdom to the high purpose of teaching their children the things that pertain to the kingdom of God and commanding them "to keep the way of the Lord." If the father is thus faithful, the Lord will confide in him also, and he will be able to discern the will of God in large measure for his children, and will thus be enabled to guide them wisely. No duty of the home is more bounden and no responsibility more far-reachingly significant than the religious training and instruction of the children. It is a duty that cannot be shifted, and no parent can be released from it. The church and its various auxiliaries may seek to make up for parental negligence, but they cannot excuse it, nor can they wholly make good the loss to the child who comes from a household of unbelief and paganism, when he had a right to a start in a household of faith. May the challenge of this responsibility come to fathers with such force that it will jar them out of their carelessness and indifference, and cause them to hear with an aroused conscience the words of Paul, "And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Then will children with greater unanimity rise up to call them blessed, and more universally and sincerely will they obey the scriptural injunction, "Honor thy father and thy mother."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

President Jacobs presents the commencement week calendar of Ashland College in this issue. The Baccalaureate sermon is to be preached by Professor McClain, and the Commencement Address is to be given by President Zook of the University of Akron.

Brother W. S. Baker reports his work at Jones Mills, near Johnstown, Pennsylvania. He speaks of six souls having united with the church as a result of the evangelistic meeting conducted by Brother Eppley some weeks ago, and one received since. He closed his pastorate there on April 17th and is open to a call elsewhere.

You will be greatly interested in Dr. Florence Gribble's report of the activities on the African mission field. The progress of the work and the fine spirit of the workers is most encouraging. Dr. Gribble is looking forward anxiously to the time when she will be able to return to Africa. But that time will be also a time of separation for her and Marguerite; she requests prayers for God's sustaining blessing in that hour.

Dr. Bell reports a gift of the Warsaw, Indiana, congregation to the College Endowment Campaign of $1,710.00, which makes a total for the present campaign of $107,554.74. Brother C. C. Grisso is pastor of this splendid congregation, which is the editor's home church and to which we look with pride and affection. Brother Bell says the Mens' Glee Club did themselves proud at this place, which harmonizes with the reports that are coming in concerning both Glee Clubs from the points visited.

On Monday, May 23rd at from 10:30 to 11:00 A. M., Dr. Charles A. Bame and Daughter Dorcas will broadcast a program for the Pocket Testament League of Columbus, over Station W A 1 U. Some of Dr. Bame's friends have requested announcement, and doubtless others will be glad of this opportunity of tuning in.

Educational Day, June 12, is the next special offering date for the brotherhood, and none in the year's calendar is more important than this and no need is more urgent. Plan and preach and pray to make the most of it in your church. Don't wait till the morning of Educational Day to mention the offering. Put it in your announcements every Sunday till then and preach a sermon sometime before that date with the purpose of stirring your people to their responsibility. Let the people get their ears tuned to the greatness of the need and it will drive them to their task.

Good news of success in evangelism at Peru, Indiana, comes to us from a correspondent of that church. Brother G. L. Maus, the pastor, served as evangelist and the music was in charge of Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer of that city. Forty-six souls were added to the church and the membership and community greatly stirred. Aside from the strong preaching and effective singing during the campaign, one noteworthy feature was the careful preparation for the meetings. This is a phase of evangelism that is often overlooked and that many times makes the difference between success and failure. The brotherhood will greatly rejoice over this remarkable victory for the Peru church.

Brother N. W. Jennings writes of his evangelistic work on the Pacific Coast, the first in this report being the campaign with the Brethren at Manteca, California, where Brother J. Wesley Platt is the faithful and much-loved pastor. He also reports this meeting as well as other phases of his steadily growing work. Thirty confessions were received and twenty-one added to the church as a result of this and other effort. Brother Platt has done a most substantial piece of work during his fourteen years of service in this field and it is not yet finished. Brother Jennings' evangelistic services were highly appreciated and successful here and God also greatly used him in a similar campaign in a neighboring city for a church of another communion.

Announcements

The following announcements reached the Evangelist office too late to be included in the regular department on page 16: Brother Homer A. Kent, pastor of the church at Washington, D. C., writes that they will observe Holy Communion on Sunday night, of May 22 and the usual cordial invitation is extended. Dr. Charles A. Bame announces that on Sunday, May 22, the Ashland church will celebrate the first anniversary of the dedication of their new church building with a special morning program and a communion service in the evening. He states that "Brethren and friends from far and near are invited to enjoy the day with us in thanksgiving and fellowship."

GLOVER IN AMERICA

Professor T. R. Glover of Cambridge, England, will spend the months of July and August, 1927, at Columbiana-on-Lake George, New York, in collaboration with College, Theological Seminary, and University professors and presidents on the problem of "The Functioning of the Group" with special reference to more efficient functioning of the Christian Church."

Columbiana—the word commemorating Columba and his work on the island of Iona—is the name of a fine estate located just north of Silver Bay, Lake George, N. Y., and recently acquired by the Biblical Seminary in New York. The purpose of President Wilbert W. White is to provide a place appropriate for group conferences every year, upon religious and related questions. Attendance is by invitation, and it is arranged to have leaders present in groups which succeed each other during the summer, each group remaining ten days.

The size of these groups is large enough for generous contributions of facts and views, but small enough to insure a delightful informality. The same subject is taken up by these different small companies during the summer, so that the subject for the summer is thoroughly surveyed by the conferences as a whole, and the findings are duly recorded. It is proposed to publish the findings for the first three years at the close of the sessions of 1927.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Wanted---Christian Fathers

By George C. Pontius

The story is told of a young lad, who in the early spring, eager to take his first swim of the year had plunged into the chilled waters. Being overcome by cramps after a short time in the water, he was heard to cry out, "Papa, oh Papa, come quick." Today humanity and the moral forces of the world are crying out to the fathers of the world, "Papa, oh papa, come quick." Help to stem the wave of crime that seems to be wending its way over our country by realizing your responsibility as fathers and by so shaping your lives that through your influence those who follow in your footsteps may find God, and in finding him may find their work in life.

Not so long ago a young man who had been sentenced to pay the supreme penalty of his life of sin and crime was waiting his day in the penitentiary. In those last hours a minister was talking and pleading with him. Resigned to his fate and feeling that all hope was gone the man only responded with these words, "If my father had been a father to me; if he had tried to help me and teach me when I was young, I would not be here today." What we need today are fathers in the real sense of the word—true Christian fathers. Father need not be rich; he need not be a man of great power or influence in the community, but he must be a father and realize the responsibility of fatherhood.

"There are little eyes upon you, and they're watching night and day.

There are little ears that quickly take in every word you say.

There are little hands all eager to do everything you do,

And a little boy that's dreaming of the day he'll be like you.

"You're the little fellow's idol, you're the wisest of the wise;

In his little mind about you no suspicions ever rise; He believes in you devoutly, hold that all you say or do He will say and do in your way, when he's grown up just like you."

Knowing the great influence that a father has over a child it behooves every father to so live that none can point the finger of shame at him and say, "You have failed as a father." Jesus in giving us the revelation of the Father, lifted fatherhood to its highest plane and gave to it the great responsibility of love, sacrifice and service. Thus beside providing the necessities of life every father should feel that certain other responsibilities rest upon him. He should give to the new born babe the heritage of a loving and happy home. This would do much in shaping the life of the child while young in the preparation for facing the responsibilities of later life. A father should give to the child the heritage of an untarnished name. A child facing life hampered by a name blemished with sin and crime begins life with a handicap that in many cases cannot be overcome. Every father should feel it his duty to make his child eager to learn. He should lead him into fields of investigation that will arouse his interest and curiosity and make him want to go on. He should talk with him, play with him, and instruct him in the simpler problems of life that when the more difficult arise . . . he may be able to face them without flinching.

Most of all I think that a father should leave to his children the heritage of a Christian home. For without the Christian home these other things would be impossible. Many are the times when young men and women who have enjoyed the heritage of a Christian home, will stop in their meditation and lift their faces to God in gratitude for those homes. Sometimes parental authority seems strict; sometimes we hesitated ere we obeyed the voice of our father and sometimes we failed to appreciate our father as we should have appreciated him. But now as we look back we are glad and thankful for that Christian home, for we know that what we are today and what we may be in the years to come, is largely due to a Christian home with a Christian father and mother.

We realize that to live up to the high ideals of love, of sacrifice and service many fathers will be forced to give up their ambitions in life; they may not reach the high pinnacles toward which they strove but may come to their end with that spirit of love and sacrifice for their children still uppermost in their mind. What then shall be their hope? What then shall be their consolation? Your joy shall be in the fact that your children have had their way made easier. The rough places have been leveled. Your hand was in theirs as they ascended the heights and your prayers sustained them at times when failure seemed imminent. And again the words of the Psalmist give us added joy when we realize that "We spend our years as a tale that is told." Each one writes a part of that great story of life. Your part was only a continuation of that which your father started and our part is only a furthering of those plans and ideals which youth instills in our minds and hearts. The story shall not end until that time when God calls us home to be with him.

Youth craves companionship and should you fathers hold forth beckoning hands, they would gladly turn to you. Could they look upon you as a real pal, they would be eager to let you share their joys and sorrows; their play and their study; their plans and their problems.

TO FATHER

*Underneath a rough exterior
There I found a heart of gold;
Often stern and yet so tender,
Is the memory I hold.
Not too prone to show emotion,
Not too late to set aright,
When my wandering feet misled me
Or my judgment failed me quite.*

*But I knew he always loved us,
Toiled and wore his life away:
To provide to make us happy
Gave himself, his best each day.
Tho uncrowned with fame or glory
As the world would echo fame,
In the book of my immortals
On page one is father's name.*

—By One of the Boys.

The Divine Requirements

*Children obey your parents in the Lord; for this is right. Honor thy father and mother (which is the first commandment with promise), that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long on the earth. And, ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath: but nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord.—
Ephesians 6:1-4.*

Moral and religious forces would drive back that wave of crime that threatens the youth of our land but they know that they cannot do it without the help of the fathers of this land, and it is to them that they throw out this challenge

"Be more than his dad,
Be a chum to the lad;
Be a part of his life
Every hour of the day."

And the world knows that if you fathers do your part, there will be a great change because of your influence.

"You can inspire him
With courage, and fire him

Hot with ambition
For deeds that are good;
He'll not betray you
Nor illy repay you,
If you have taught him
The things that you should.
Father and son
Must in all things be one—
Partners in trouble
And comrades in joy.
More than a dad
Was the best pal you had;
Be such a chum
As you knew, to your boy."

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

X. Elder John P. Wolfe

By Martin Shively, D.D.

In a ministry covering a considerable term of years, and a service given over a wide area of our country, it has been my privilege to meet many men of outstanding qualities of mind and soul, both in the ministry and out of it. By far the greater number of the men who served in the pulpit, have been worthy of the high place which they held in the hearts of those among whom they wrought, and all have left a decided impress for good. But the man about whom I am now writing, was most unusual in all the qualities of goodness which characterized him. I have even said that he was the best man whom I have ever known. At any rate he made an indelible impression on my life, and led me to wish, many times, that I might be at least as good as he, but since no such achievement has yet been attained, I am a bit fearful that it is getting pretty late to expect it. Brother Wolfe was born in Lee County, Iowa, in 1844, and as a lad of twelve years, he went to California, by way of the Isthmus of Panama, with his father and the rest of the family. His father was Elder George Wolfe, widely known as "uncle George", and like the son who succeeded him, he was also a man of sterling character and a devout soul. The family settled first at Watsonville, but after a residence of four years there, a new home was located, this time in the San Joaquin valley, near Lathrop, and from this community, both father and son were called to the "rest which remaineth for the people of God." John became a Christian at twenty years of age, accepting Christ at a Camp Meeting held by the few Brethren there, a service which for many years was held as an annual event. Ten years after his conversion, he was called to the ministry, with his brother, Joseph, and one of the keenest sources of regret, to the subject of this sketch, was the fact that that brother died soon thereafter, for he regarded him as being most promising material for a great preacher. This brother's death left him alone as his father's assistant in a preaching ministry, which covered many square miles of the then sparsely settled coast country. The father died in 1887, and after that time, the son was the recognized leader among our people over all that section of the state. From time to time, helpers were called in from the country outside, some of whom spent periods of various length as pastors, but no one could take the place which this wide section, accorded to Brother Wolfe. California had a sparse population even when I entered the field, in 1896, but sparse as it was, this man of God, as the people held him to be, was called to preach over 200 funerals in a ministry which covered twenty-four years.

He was a farmer preacher, and one who worked hard to earn a livelihood for his family of four children, and to enable them to get the education which was denied to him, but he made a success of his farming, as he did also with the bringing up of his family. Exacting as the demands of his farm were, there were few Sundays when his voice was not heard, as he pointed men to the Savior,—their only hope, and the hope of the world. His sermons were brief expositions, and these given with a smile which never faded out, and a charity for human frailty, which never waned, made him among the most beloved of men, whom it has ever been my lot to know. He fell a victim to an acute form of tuberculosis during the winter of 1897-8, and died April 16, 1898. I was with him almost every day during the last two months of his illness, and shall never forget what happened on the day when he gave up to die. Until then, he had hoped, and even expected to recover his health, but when he suddenly awoke to the fact that there was no ground for such hope, he said, "Not my will, but thine be done." It was not an easy thing for a man of 52 years, and a man with four children all at home, and a wife, as well as an honest desire to further serve his church, his family and his community. But during the afternoon of the day when he had looked death in the face, he said to me, "Brother Shively, I would like to live a while longer, for I think my family needs me, and I believe I could still do some good for the church, but if it is not God's will that I do so, I am fully resigned to that will." He then gave me, his successor, his blessing, and told me about his plans and hopes for the church, and also a few things which he wished me to say to the people, when I should stand in the presence of his cold body, offering the consolations which the Word stands to give. I loved him as a father and the reader may try to imagine my feelings when that hour came. Only one other time, in a ministry of forty years, during which I have conducted almost four hundred funeral services, have I seen a whole community engulfed in sorrow and tears, as I saw on the occasion of his funeral. I think his death revealed to the people, the place which he had been filling in their lives, and like the Ephesians of a much earlier day, wept because they know they should see that kind face no more in this world. The people erected a monument over the spot in which we laid his body, and so long as I continued as their pastor, they joined me in a brief service at his grave, annually, on the Sunday nearest the anniversary of his death. The family is scattered now,—Aunt Annie, his good wife, has gone to be with him, as has Laura, a daughter. Mayme is in Southern California, Homer in Northern California, and Rua,—Mrs. George Ronk, is in Iowa.

I suspect that if I should go back to Lathrop, I would be a stranger, and feel like one, but after the almost thirty years since he went away, I should still expect to find him living in the hearts of those whom he so greatly influenced in the days of long ago, and through them, his ministry of love would still be functioning. He was not a learned man, nor one possessed of outstanding qualities of intellect, but a good man, an honest man, a helpful man, a clean man,—a man of God, whose very life was a benediction to all who knew him. Would that we all might be like him, in both the negative and positive qualities of character which were so conspicuous in him.

Ten Ways of Being a Bad Parent

1. A parent is bad whose imagination is colored by an uncritical belief in the vague rumors of scandal about young people. Such parents have no sense of proportion, are ready to accept the worst because it fits in with their theories. They are the largest contributing factor to the breakdown of reputation, even of their own children.

2. A parent is bad who accepts "fate" blindly and cannot see behind present handicaps the background of latent strength.

3. A parent is bad who does not realize that with adolescence comes a tremendous pull of loyalty toward friends outside the family group.

4. For a parent to become prematurely stabilized, so that he loses a sense of proportion and cannot distinguish between major and minor values, is to become a bad parent.

5. A parent who makes a faulty characterization of a child is likely to produce bad results.

6. A parent may be bad if the goal placed before the children is too immediate and too easy, or is so concerned with money and "comfort" that the children become bored with life.

7. A parent is bad who is a parent only spasmodically, and then usually at the wrong time.

8. A parent is bad who cannot shield a child from premature exposure to adult anxiety or perplexity.

9. A parent is bad who builds up in the child a feeling of inferiority.

10. A parent is bad who will not let a child grow up; who does all the talking; makes all the decisions, and meets all the issues.—Miriam Van Waters, in The Survey.

"The Garden of the Heart"

By Thomas Gibson

"The flowers of grace appear only when the garden of the heart receives the proper cultivation." This is applicable to the natural and spiritual world.

The tiller of the ground is careful to remove from the soil everything that is a hindrance to the life, growth and development of the seed or plant which he intends to put in the soil, all weeds, thorns, briars and thistles are carefully removed.

So in the spiritual life, everything that is a hindrance to the life, growth and development of the "Divine life" is carefully removed from the "garden of the heart." "Out of the heart proceedeth all manner of evil; said Jesus. Some things necessary to be removed from the Garden of the heart, before the fruits of the spirit can be grown, and developed are malice, envy, strife, hatred, contention, sedition, wrath, drunkenness, and many other crimes and vices.

One doesn't need to practice all these things to be brought under condemnation. Just entertain and cherish the evil thought, and condemnation is sure to come. When Jesus interpreted the Old Covenant in the spirit of the New Covenant, he showed how the entertaining of an evil thought was equal to having committed the very act. "He that looketh upon a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery already with her in his heart." Because the cherishing of the thought had gratified the fleshly desire. "He that hateth his brother is a murderer," the harboring of the thought to kill being equal to the committing of the very act.

So there must be a cleansing of the "Garden of the heart" "from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God" before the fruits of the life. A partial cleansing will not avail anything in the complete and absolute deliverance from sin. Our experience will be like that of Paul, when he found the "two laws warring in his members" and found that he was helpless in effecting a deliverance from "the law of sin and death."

"Oh, he was a wretched and miserable man. Until God through Jesus, brought him deliverance. Then with great assurance, he could confidently say, he was "free from condemnation, being no longer under the law of sin and death." Then the "Garden of the heart" was in a condition to produce "the peaceable fruits of righteousness," to grow, develop and mature, even "unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ" "A perfect man." "The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, meekness, temperance," and the like. (See 1st Cor. 13 and 2nd Peter 1:5-7. For the adding of the Christian Graces.)

DOUBT AND DUTY

Do not, for the sake of all you hold sacred, allow the existence of intellectual difficulties to interfere with the progress of your practical religious life. Many men think that, unless all their intellectual problems are settled, it is impossible to live a truly religious life. A more mistaken notion never entered a man's head. If you are a thinking man you will always have difficulties; new ones are apt to come forward even more rapidly than old ones are settled. Be not too greatly disturbed. If you are not a Christian, do not put off becoming one until they disappear. Such a time will never come. Go forward in Christian work and service. Follow the paths pointed out to you by the Scriptures. Let the difficulties be settled as your faith grows stronger and your Christian character becomes more firmly established.—Dr. William R. Harper.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Triumph of the Upper Room

By S. C. Henderson

(This address was given at the Good Friday afternoon union service of eight churches at Fremont, Ohio).

It was Thursday of Passion Week. The Passover season of the Jews was near, and the Holy City was being filled to overflowing with pilgrims from the four quarters of the globe. Sometime during the day, Jesus sends two of his disciples into the city to make reservations for the Passover season. You will recall that they were to enter into the city and follow a man bearing a pitcher. This man was to show them a large Upper Room or guest chamber for their accommodation. It is very likely that the citizens of Jerusalem were in the habit of furnishing rooms like the Upper Room to guests during the different feasts of the Jews. The inns were inadequate to care for the vast throngs of people who came to the Passover year after year.

This man with a pitcher is one of the mysterious figures of Passion week. Was he bearing the pitcher to advertise the fact that he had "rooms to let?" It would have been an excellent suggestion to the tired, thirsty pilgrims who had traveled from afar. They would likely follow a man with a pitcher. It may have been that Jesus had a friend with whom he had made such arrangements before hand. Or it might have been a divine intuition that led Jesus to point out "The man with the pitcher" to the seeking disciples. Traditions say that this man with the pitcher was none other than the youthful John Mark, the writer of the second Gospel, and that the Upper Room was at the home of Mary Mark, a follower of Jesus.

An Upper Room was an ideal place for the Master and his disciples to withdraw from the jostling multitudes that were thronging the streets of the city. There they might have peace and quiet. As the shades of evening were drawing near, the Lord and his twelve disciples wended their way to the Upper Room and found it in readiness.

The meal in the Upper Room was a supper, and not the Jewish Passover for Jesus had died upon the cross before the Jewish nation observed their great Passover Feast. You may call it the Christian Passover. While there was no Passover Lamb to be served, for Jesus himself died at the very hour that the passchal lambs were being slain. Yet Jesus himself symbolized it in the communion service to follow. THE FEAST THAT JESUS AND HIS DISCIPLES ATE THAT NIGHT WAS THE AGAPE OR LOVE FEAST. Leading church historians and scholars tell us that the early Christians during the first centuries kept just such a feast with their communion service. It was like the old, old Oriental "breaking of bread." A feast of love and fellowship.

The Triumph of the Upper Room was the triumph of love and loyalty. John says "Jesus having loved his own that were in the world he loved them unto the end." A materialist might say that Jesus was a failure because he left no estate and that his followers were the "nobodies" of that day—publicans, fishermen and a zealot. None of the chief priests or Rabbis followed him—just the common people who knew not the law and were accursed. Three years before the Lord had chosen twelve men that they might be with him and that he might send them forth to preach. They were with him continually. They journeyed over the hills of Galilee. They heard his teachings. They had left their occupations in order to be with him. They were with him during the days of popular favor when the multitudes pressed him on every side. They were with him when the crowd talked of taking him by force and making him their king. Those were great days for the Apostles. Great visions of fame and glory arose in their breasts. Then came the year of opposition. The rulers began to plot against him. The multitudes melted away. Only the faithful remnant were left. Jesus turned to them and gave them the opportunity to follow. It was Peter who voiced the attitude of the disciples by saying: "Lord, to whom shall we go, for thou hast the words of eternal life?" They were loyal. They hoped when others failed. He was the One who was to redeem Israel. As the little group sat about the common board at this eventide, he washed their feet, and as he sat at meat it was his soul's supreme satisfaction that he had kept them all save Judas, who was to betray him. Having loved his own, he loved them unto the end. Before him lay the awful agony of the garden and the cross. His great heart went out toward them. He knew the dark hours of grief and despair that they would have to pass through when "the shepherd was smitten and the sheep would be scattered." It was the crucial hour of tragedy. They must be strengthened and prepared for it. While they ate he said, "One of you shall betray me." He is eating here with us. He that eateth bread with me has lifted up his heel against me. A breach of fidelity that no desert barbarian would do. "One of you shall betray me. It was a heart searching time. Had they not been loyal? "Lord, is it I?" Then Jesus gave the sign by dipping with Judas in the dish and giving him the sop. The betrayer then slunk away in the darkness to accomplish his treachery.

Jesus is left alone with the faithful eleven. It is to them that he opens his burdened heart. He speaks about his leave-taking and of the heavenly home and his resurrection.

Then while the supper was in progress, Jesus took bread and blessed it and in like manner the cup. There he instituted the communion or Eucharist—a service that has been universally held dear to the Christians in all the lapsing centuries. I well know the Upper Room has been a battle ground of differing Theological opinions. But every communion is a sacred service. We may differ in methods of observance and design, yet it speaks a lesson to every loyal Christian heart. Not long ago, I heard of two dear old ladies who lived far from their church, yet they felt the need of the sacred service. So without a minister, they went through the service of their church. Even though not regular, I doubt not that they had satisfied the spiritual desire of their souls.

Briefly I wish to speak on this service which each of us cherishes according to our own custom. FIRST IT WAS A SERVICE OF REMEMBRANCE. "DO THIS IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME." It is a memorial. Monuments are erected to famous men and events to perpetuate their memory. In eastern lands travelers tell us that they find memorial stones set up on every hand. It may be the place where a treaty was made, a battle fought, a fallen leader or as a place where a covenant was made with God. We here preserve the homestead of an ex-president (R. B. Hayes' home at Fremont) and the site of Fort Stephenson. Churches have memorial windows and bronze tablets, and communion sets for the same cause—memorials. We need them to keep our minds refreshed. One of the sad things is that folks so soon forget. Our social memories are so short. I never wander through a deserted grave-yard but I think—Folks are soon forgotten. Very few in this great congregation will be remembered beyond the century in which we are living.

But it is all important that Jesus be not forgotten. We must keep that memory alive. It will not be many weeks until we have Memorial Day for the heroes that gave their lives for their country. But let us each remember that Communion Sunday is a memorial day for him who made the supreme sacrifice for us who have named his name. We cannot be reminded too often that the good Lord Jesus lived and that he died upon the cross. Amid the brush of business cares, the grind and sameness of everyday life, in the excitement of youth, we are all too apt to forget Calvary and Easter. We need to remember.

THE COMMUNION IS A SERVICE OF PROCLAMATION AS WELL AS A REMEMBRANCE. "As oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do proclaim the Lord's death. Our coming to the Lord's table is a kind of preaching. We are telling forth the Lord's death. He was the passover of the last Supper just as truly as the slain lamb was in the first Passover in Egypt. Jesus offered himself. The eucharist denotes our allegiance. As a lad I can remember of leading my aged and almost blind grandmother to her church at Communion time. She made it a rule of her life, as long as she was able, not to miss this service, although she was denied the other services of her church. We need loyalty in our churches for this service. It is not enough that we pause on this Good Friday afternoon to pay our tribute. The Lord's death must be translated into our individual, and social actions as well. We cannot go on living as though Jesus never lived and as though he never died. We must stamp the atonement upon our commercial, social and international relations.

Finally THE LORD'S SUPPER IS A SERVICE OF EXPECTATION—"Ye do show forth his death till he come." The Jews commemorated their deliverance from bondage in Egypt in their passover. It was a backward look. The communion service not only has a backward look to Christ's death but also a forward look to his coming. "The one great far off divine event to which the whole creation moves." A spiritual triumph to which we all may labor, and await with great expectation.

Some time ago, I heard Dr. Frendick Taylor of Indianapolis tell of his visit to the new republic of Czechoslovakia. He said that one thing that impressed him was that everywhere he went he saw the symbols of the cup and the book painted on their churches. Four hundred years ago, John Huss, who was a reformer before the days of Luther, began a reformation in Bohemia. He gave the common folks the Bible in their own language and the cup in the communion service. This same John Huss died as a martyr at the stake in the old city of Prague. His followers were scattered and persecuted. Yet for four hundred years, the Bohemian folks cherished the heritage that John Huss had given them. When the iron hand of Austria fell from their beloved land, they remembered the cup and the book.

And may we still remember Jesus Christ and be kept as he kept his disciples in the triumph of the Upper Room.

ST. PAUL'S CONCEPTION OF CHRIST

It is open to us all to recognize that the Pauline conception of Christ, in his pre-existence as the eternal Son, his ideal, archetypal humanity as the Heavenly Man, and his voluntary self-abasement as made in the likeness of sinful flesh, had for Paul supreme moral and evangelistic value. It is open to us to recognize that to make Christ Bethlehem birth the upspringing out of the unconsciousness of a life which had no antecedent being and therefore no elective purpose, no will-to-be, until it fashioned that will out of its own infant appetites, would be to take all the color out of Paul's Gospel; it would muffle the majestic organ tones of grace which accompany and interpret the entire recitative of Paul's narration of Christ's earthly ministry; it would deprive us of the glow and radiance of a redemption wrought for us at infinite cost by One who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor.—"The Life of Christ," by Gwilym O. Griffith, Published by George H. Doran Co.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

A SYMBOL OF CLEANSING—John 13:1-17. This event teaches, and purposely, far more than humility, much as that is needed; its great lesson is the constant and urgent need of spiritual cleansing, which we may have of Christ freely. It is a symbol as baptism is a symbol and as the supper is a symbol, and we do well not only to practice it but to see back of the act the truth symbolized and to appropriate the divine grace thereby vouchsafed unto us.

TUESDAY

JEHOVAH'S REQUIREMENTS—Micah 6:1-8. Jehovah is not satisfied with mere forms and ceremonies, however good in original intent they may be; the heart must go out to God in them and the life must show the fruit they would inspire.

WEDNESDAY

THE CHILDLIKE SPIRIT—Mark 9:30-37. Place-seeking, selfishness and egotism have no rightful place in Christian thought and life; the entire teaching of the Master by word and example is against it, and he who gives place to it, is to that extent lacking in being a Christian.

THURSDAY

THE REWARD OF HUMILITY—Prov. 22:1-9. "By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honor, and life." Such "riches" are not material, but spiritual; not the things that are temporal and fleeting, but those that are permanent and of abiding worth are the things that proceed from the life of a humble and devout worshipper of God. And to such an one is true honor and eternal life.

FRIDAY

REST WITH THE LOWLY ONE—Matt. 11:28-30. Here is the greatest invitation that any one could imagine when the soul is weary and heavy laden and in need of rest, it is the opportunity to betake oneself from the feverish display, the passionate pleasure seeking, and from the excitement of money chasing and the grinding tasks to the quiet, soul-resting fellowship of the lowly One.

SATURDAY

HAVING THE MIND OF CHRIST—Phil. 2:1-11. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." And what was the mind of Christ? It was to "empty" himself and "humble" himself "and to become obedient unto death," that he might accomplish the work he came to do. And how can the disciple possess that mind? By complete emptying of self and full obedience unto the will of God.

SUNDAY

THE LORD RESPECTS THE LOWLY—Psalm 138:1-8. If lowliness and respect for the lowly is one of the choice characteristics of the Lord God who is so highly exalted how earnestly ought we to seek to possess that quality in our own lives, that we may have the divine favor. For "the proud he knoweth afar off."—G. S. B.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Call to Sacrifice

By Floyd Taber

OUR SCRIPTURE

From that time forth began Jesus to shew unto his disciples, how that he must go unto Jerusalem, and suffer many things for the elders and chief priests and scribes, and be killed, and be raised again the third day. . . . Then said Jesus unto his disciples, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me (Matt. 16:21, 24).

He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me: and he that loveth son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me. And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me (Matt. 10:37-38).

And when he was gone forth into the way, there came one running, and kneeled to him, and asked him, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life? And Jesus said unto him, why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is, God. Thou knowest the commandments, Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy father and mother. And he answered and said unto him, Master, all these have I observed from my youth. And Jesus beholding him loved him, and said unto him, One thing thou lackest: go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come, take up the cross and follow me. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved; for he had great possessions (Mark 10:17-22).

OUR MEDITATION

The Cross is the heart of Christian experience, both for the Master and the Disciple. The Cross was necessary for Jesus Christ, and it is just as necessary for every follower of his. "No cross, no crown" is a fundamental maxim of Christianity.

The rich young ruler who came running to Jesus seemed to have everything in his favor: wealth, honor, and position were his; he was a social leader, a political leader, and a religious leader; he was a master of the law of Moses and a model for morality. The average pastor today would welcome him into the church with open arms and without a question. The disciples were exultant at the prospect of gaining a person of such influence as one of their number. And Jesus beholding him loved him. But he refused to relax or pass over the challenge of the cross even to win such a follower as this. His demand was inflexible: "Come, take up the cross, and follow me."

The rich young ruler and the disciples of Jesus had seen men bearing crosses scores of times, and they knew that it meant just one thing: the man who was carrying the cross was going to be crucified on it. The challenge of Jesus meant nothing less than this: "You must be ready to die for me—to die the agonizing death of the cross." It is almost sacrilegious to talk about our petty grievances and sacrifices and trials as crosses. The cross means death, and nothing less. Unless we are willing to die for Jesus Christ, we cannot talk about bearing a cross.

But when Jesus challenged the rich young ruler to take up his cross, it meant more than the willingness to die; it meant immediate death in a very real sense—in the sense in which Paul said, "I die daily" and "I am crucified with Christ."

In the first place, it would have meant death to his worldly possessions. It would have meant giving up every cent of his vast wealth. His home, his servants, his luxuries, would be gone. And following Jesus meant just the same thing today. It means the sacrifice of every worldly possession—that we cannot own a thing in the world. It means that we cannot have the barest necessities of life as our own. Every bit of property that we did call ours is now his . . . His to use just as he desires. We have nothing to say about its disposition. If he tells us to give it all to the poor, as he did the rich young ruler, we have no other choice, because it is his anyway. If he tells us to keep it for him as his stewards, then that is our duty; but it is still his, not ours. And we must use it as we would use money which is entrusted to us by someone else, not as we would use our own.

In the second place, if the rich young ruler had followed Jesus, it would have meant death to his worldly position. His position as a religious leader, as a social leader, and as a political leader, would all go. He would be an outcast—an alien—from his own nation. The Christian is always a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth. His citizenship is in heaven. He is dead to worldly position.

Again, following Jesus would have cost the rich young ruler death to his worldly relationships. To this day the orthodox Jewish family reckons the member who falls to Christianity as dead—or rather, they blot his name from the family records as if he had never been born. So the challenge of Jesus, "He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me," cut to the very heart of the rich young ruler. Not in just the same way, but in a very real way, the challenge comes to us today. If we are true followers of Jesus, we must be willing to sacrifice every human relationship to go where he wants us to go and do the work he wants us to do; but harder still, we must be willing to send those we hold dearer than life to do the work he wants them to do.

Following Jesus Christ is not easy. It costs. It costs life, and what is dearer than life. To the rich young ruler, it would have cost every worldly possession, every worldly position, and every worldly relationship; and it costs the same today. But it is worth the price. In his famous book, "In His Steps", Charles M. Sheldon says, "After all, the strongest appeal is the call of Jesus, Come and suffer." "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

OUR PRAYER

Gracious Father, God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, thou who in thine infinite love didst make the sacrifice of thine own dear Son, to be separated from thee and come among us to save us, we praise thee for the fathomless love which prompted thy gift, and for the love which made our Lord willing to leave thee and the glory he had with thee, and suffer untold shame and agony to redeem us. We pray that that love may be shed abroad in our hearts, that it may make us willingly and gladly pay the cost of discipleship, that we may answer to the challenge to take up the cross and follow our Lord Jesus Christ wherever he may lead; we pray in his name. Amen.

It takes greater and finer heroism to dare to be a devout Christian in America today than to charge the cannon's mouth.

It is difficulties which give birth to miracles. It is not every calamity that is a curse; and early adversity is often a blessing. Perhaps Madame de Maintenon would never have mounted a throne had not her cradle been rocked in a prison.—Sharpe.

I have a Captain, and the heart
Of every private man
Has drunk in valor from his eyes
Since first the war began:
He is most merciful in fight,
And of his scars a single sight
The embers of our failing might Into a flame can fan.—Anon.

Introduction

The gospel work prospered and grew so rapidly that the rulers arrested the apostles and put them in prison. But God confounded all the persecutors' plans by sending his angel to liberate the apostles, thus showing that the leaders were fighting against God (v. 39), and were defeated. It was not only deliverance for the apostles, but a warning and a lesson to the rulers which should have brought them to investigate the claims of the Messiah. With the deliverance was the command to go right on preaching the gospel in the most public place.

The First Persecution of the church was very useful in showing who were true believers. None else could stand up bodily, as Peter and John did first, and then all the apostles, before the Jewish council. Moreover, the troubled helped to make the apostles stronger and braver. Like the storm that beats upon the tree and seems likely to uproot it, but only causes its roots to strike more firmly into the ground. Recall some of the brave words of these witnesses for Christ, 4:19, 20, 29; 5:29. It gave them opportunity of preaching the gospel to some who otherwise might not have heard it, 4:12; 5:30, 31. These are golden words, spoken not in sermons, but by prisoners at the bar, speaking to their persecutors and to the people of all time.—The Illustrator.

What Is Persecution?

It is "harassing or oppressive treatment, the infliction of injury (as loss of property or civil rights, physical suffering or death), as a punishment for adhering to some opinion of course of conduct as a religious creed or mode of worship, which cannot properly be regarded as criminal."—Century Dictionary. To punish a criminal is not persecution. But all slander, opprobrious epithets, misrepresentations, on account of differing opinions, are of the nature of persecution, while argument is not. Persecution always has in it an element of meanness.

Among young people there are many forms of petty persecution which ought to be carefully avoided—sneers and ridicule for anyone who is trying to do better, who is strict in morals, who refrains from some popular amusement, who refuses to touch intoxicating drink, who is trying to live a religious life. Hazing is often a form of persecution, especially when inflicted on the weak or inexperienced.

The Ministry of Angels

"I believe that angels wait on us as truly as ever they waited on Abraham, or Jacob, or Moses, or Elijah, or Mary, or Jesus himself. The medieval painters were fond of filling the background of the Infancy with countless angels; the representation, though literally false, was morally true. I believe that angels are encamping around them that fear the Lord."

"Flitting, flitting, ever near thee,
Sitting, sitting by thy side,
Like yon shadow all unweary,
Angel beings guard and guide."

May not Milton's conjecture have some truth in it—

"Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth Unseen, both when we wake and when we sleep?"

Compare Elisha and his servant, with opened eyes, seeing the mountain round about filled with unseen horses and chariots of fire (2 Kings 6:17), and Christ's declaration that twelve legions of angels were at hand to help him when needed (Matt. 26:53).

Reasons for this Intervention

1. The apostles and the church were still in training for greater battles and harder work. Hence by this deliverance they were taught faith in God, and courage, and assurance that their bold, defiant course was approved by God.

2. It was a great advantage to the cause, as they went on preaching the gospel, impressing the people that it was God's cause, and the apostles were his messengers, speaking his truth.

3. It was a direct refutation of the Sadducees' doctrine, a blow at their position.

4. It tended to impress the minds of the enemies of the apostles with respect for them as under God's special protection, and probably suggested to Gamaliel (vs. 34-39) his fear that by opposing the apostles the rulers might be opposing God himself.

5. Hence, it influenced the result of the trial, and made the escape from prison a type of their greater deliverance from the power and wicked desires of the rulers.

Various Ways of Deliverance

"Generally speaking, it is true that the Lord delivers those who fear and trust in him, but it is not always so. He brought the apostles out of prison, but he suffered Stephen to be stoned. He delivered Peter, but he permitted James to be slain with the sword. There are circumstances where death is worth more than life. Whether he delivers or permits one to suffer, God acts toward his servants in the best, the wisest, and the tenderest way," and gives them triumphant joy when he calls them to suffer.

The Three-fold Victory

First. The arraignment of the apostles gave them an opportunity to preach the gospel faithfully to the rulers, who could not easily be reached in any other way.

Second. They were released from their bonds, and were free to continue their work with all the more power because of the outcome of the efforts to put a stop to it.

Third. They themselves received a new inspiration of power. They rejoiced in their sufferings for Jesus sake, and in public and in private, in the temple courts, and from house to house, they preached that Jesus was the expected Messiah.

HONEST NOW

(A Soliloquy)

Am I really and truly interested in my church—in helping it to achieve its objects and ideals—or do I just think I am? What do I do to prove my interest—that it's half as vital, for example, as I think it is?

How do I look to the man on the outside? Could he tell that I am interested by what I do? How do I look to him?

Am I a good example for anybody to follow? Or do I just think I am? Or do I think about my responsibility in this connection, at all?

Do I attend church service as often as I think I do?

How many times have I been to prayer meetings during the past year?

How would the minister classify me? As interested? indifferent? cold? as a friend and helper, or just as—one of the congregation? Would he be justified by what I do?

Do I really give as the Lord hath prospered me, or do I just think I do? If I should add my contributions to local church support and to missions, would they represent as large a part of my total income as I think they do?

Would a stranger think me as liberal as I think I am, even if he had all the facts of my other responsibilities?

Do I really believe it more blessed to give than to receive, or do I just think I do?

What kind of a church member am I anyhow? Am I the kind I think I am, or do I just think I am?

Try a little introspection along these lines.—Rev. Willard Glenn Purdy, Grace Presbyterian Church, Montclair, N. J.

TAKE TIME TO PRAY

The great people of the earth today are the people who pray—people who take time to pray. They have not time. It must be taken from something else. That something else is important, very important and pressing, but still less important and pressing than prayer. There are people who put prayer first and group the other items in life's schedule around and after prayer. These are the people today who are doing the most for God in winning souls, in solving problems, in awakening churches in supplying men and money for mission posts, in keeping fresh and strong their lives far off in sacrificial service on the foreign field, where the thickest fighting is going on, and in keeping the old earth sweet a little while longer.—S. D. Gordon.

We should never talk or think of failure until we have done our level best; then we shall find that failure is not apt to come our way.

Inspiration from a Planned Life

By Orville Don Ullom

Jeremiah 1:4-10. Now the word of Jehovah came unto me, saying, before I formed thee I knew thee, and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee; I have appointed thee a prophet unto the nations. Then said I, Ah, Lord Jehovah, Behold, I know not how to speak; for I am a child. But Jehovah said unto me, Say not, I am a child; for to whomsoever I shall send thee thou shalt go, and whatsoever I shall command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid because of them; for I am with thee to deliver thee, saith Jehovah. Then Jehovah put forth his hand, and touched my mouth; and Jehovah said unto me, Behold, I have put my words in thy mouth! see, I have this day set thee over the nations and over the kingdoms, to pluck up and to break down and to destroy and to overthrow, to build and to plant.

For many reasons we young people are prone to hesitate in accepting willingly the plan of God for our life. It may be that we feel incapable of doing right and well the task set before us. Nevertheless there is hesitation present and many times complete refusal. God revealed to Jeremiah his life task when he said, "I have appointed thee prophet unto the nations." Jeremiah hesitated and offered an excuse. He may have been in doubt as to how he might proceed. At this particular time we behold him sitting out in the pasture field under the spreading antlers of the sycamore tree. There came to him the conviction that God was calling him into a specific Christian service. Heretofore he had lived in the quietness and seclusion of his father's farm and home life, and was without any experience in the particular form of service into which God had called him. But with all of us there must be a beginning. The outcome no one is able to determine. Furthermore it is not necessary that we should know this.

Even more discouraging and baffling was the experience of Phillips Brooks. He as a young man who had just completed college at Harvard, and had begun teaching in a nearby high school. He was unable to properly discipline his pupils, and in a short period of time was requested to resign as teacher of this particular school. Teaching was the one ambition and purpose of his life, but here he stood a failure. What was he to do? This profession was the one of his own choosing. He had determined that his course was right. Nevertheless the historic fact remains evidenced in the pages of his biography that he did not long hesitate in moodiness and despair. Another germ of conviction began to grow in his heart. He hesitated to resume the responsibility of this calling—the ministry. But there was the word of God written in the hearts—it came to Jeremiah and it came to Phillips Brooks informing them that their life calling had been planned before they ever saw the light of the world. And so we have the assurance of God that if we eagerly and zealously desire to discover the place of service for our talents, we shall all be led into the light.

There comes to us added confidence when we know that God's choice of us had been of long standing. Jeremiah must have felt the definiteness and urgency of the call all the more strongly when told that this had been God's thought for him from his very birth.

Are we not reminded that the very hairs of our head are numbered, that God is even thoughtful of the sparrows of the air, and that he is interested in his people even as much as the shepherd is interested in his sheep? Then is it not true that Jeremiah's assurance may be ours too? We are not here by chance. God has sanctified us from the very beginning for some task that awaits our doing.

This feeling of inadequacy in the face of the call of God is a very natural one. Moses felt it. Gideon felt it. Jonah felt it, and Jeremiah had it. To us in our day comes doubt as to health, the capacity for guiding men, the courage to endure hardship, etc. Of course this is not the experience of everyone. But to all alike can come the rich assurance that God is with us. The great Pilot will send us where we are to go. He will outline our task as the days go on.

With such an ever present hopeful inspiration shall we not further the fruitfulness of our lives by resolving:

Good Things in School Life Proverbs 3:1-7

"I wish that it was June so that I could stop going to school. I don't like to go to school," little Jean McKay told her mother one day.

Now mothers do not like to hear their children say things like that, but little Jean did not realize that her words were making her mother feel bad. Jean's mother looked at Jean for a few minutes. She was trying to think just what would be best to say in order to make Jean realize how much school really means to little girls and boys. What she finally said did not seem to have anything to do with Jean's opinions about school. Jean's mother said to Jean, "On next Friday morning you and I are going to start on a little trip. I am not going to tell you where we are going. The whole trip is going to be a surprise for you."

Jean was very much excited over the prospect of taking a trip, and it seemed to her that Friday would never come. Finally Friday morning did arrive, and Jean awoke long before her usual time because she was anxious to get started on her trip. At 7 o'clock, Jean and her mother were on the train and ready to see the country. Jean still did not know where she was going.

After they had been on the train about an hour they came to a city. "This is Pittsburgh," said Jean's mother. "When we get to the big central depot, we are going to get off." It took a long time to reach the center of the city. As the train passed through the town, Jean saw many things that were new to her. There were big buildings with smoke coming out of them. There was so much smoke that all the air seemed dusty.

When they came to the station, they hurried out. They walked a short distance, waited a while for a street car and were soon on their way out through the city. "Aren't those pretty houses we are passing?" said Jean. I wonder if we are going to visit someone who lives in a big, beautiful house."

Mother smiled, but she did not answer Jean. They changed street cars several times and kept riding and riding. Jean talked and talked about the things they were passing. After a while they got off of the street car and went into a big factory. "Why are we going here?" said Jean "I do not think that this is pretty. I do not like it in here."

Mother smiled and said nothing.

Soon they were being shown through the different parts of the building. As they passed along the long aisles Jean noticed that there were young girls, only a few years older than she, who were working. The smell of the air was very bad, and even though the things that the people were doing seemed interesting, Jean soon said, "Please, mother, can't we go outside where we can breathe and feel good?"

"All right", said Jean's mother. She found a side entrance and soon they were hurrying down the street. They got on the street car again and rode for a long time.

"Aren't these houses ugly and dirty?" said Jean. "I wonder if there are many children who live in them."

After a long time they got out of the street car, and Jean said, "Why, mother, these are the worst looking houses that we have seen yet. Why are we stopping here?"

Mother smiled and said nothing.

They went to the worst house in the street and knocked. When a poor, dirty woman came to the door, mother said, "May we come in and sit down for just a little while?" They went in and the woman closed the door.

There were dirty children on the floor, and not even two chairs in the room to sit on. Jean and her mother sat on boxes and looked around.

Jean and her mother spent Friday and Saturday and Sunday visiting factories and poor homes. On Sunday evening they went home, and on the way Jean's mother said, "You said that you did not want to go to school, so I took you to see some people who never had a chance to go to school and be educated."

Jean said, "I'll never say a thing like that again." All her life she remembered that trip and was grateful that she could go to school.

Dr. Gribble's Review of Field Activities

42 Rue Pierre, Nocate, Paris, ne France.
 April 16, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

On the eve of Easter I will pen you another message.

From Bossangoa on December 29th we hear the following: "We have moved out of the rest house to a village, about 30 minutes' ride from the concession. We had the chief build us a house. It has two good sized rooms with windows, a five-foot veranda and a very high and thick roof. So now we are much more comfortably located, and we certainly do praise the Lord for it. We have the little house fixed up until it seems very much like home, especially after living in the rest house for so long a time. We are very happy and the Lord keeps us from getting discouraged even in our waiting days. We are having many precious lessons at this time. The work is progressing nicely. This last week several women have accepted the gospel. These are the first from the tribe to accept the gospel.

"We have all the materials needed for a house, so when permission comes it can go up rapidly. The place is cleaned and looks so nice. Buffalo, deer and antelopes are in abundance. Mr. Sheldon killed a deer on the concession about two weeks ago. Brother Jobson has recently been here with us. He went to Bossangoa on business about the school.

"The old road through which Brother Gribble passed in the early days, is still here. The people still remember "Bombo." How we wish he might have seen this day when these people can hear the gospel; doubtless he did, for without doubt he had a vision of what God would do for this darkened land."

Under date of January 10th Mrs. Jobson writes from Bassai:

"Brother Kennedy and Mr. Jobson are putting a roof on the house that we are occupying, the part that was destroyed by fire. We have had no fever since we returned. To him be all the praise!

"Miss Bickel and Miss Myers are thinking of itinerating soon. As yet Mr. Jobson has had no reply from his application for the school."

Under date of January 10th, from Yaloke, Mrs. Hathaway writes: "Miss Tyson and Miss Emmert are itinerating. They went as far as the Boali falls in the automobile with Mr. Hathaway, and from there expect to return through the bush by way of Garemo. They expected to be gone about two weeks.

"Brother and Sister Foster and I are together on the station. We are getting along fine and every thing is going nicely.

"We have a native helper from Fort Sibert in the medical work. He dresses ulcers, etc., and leaves Miss Tyson free for village work. Miss Emmert is tied down closely with her school except during vacation time."

Brother Hathaway writing from Bangui under date of January 11th says, "We have just received permission to locate, build, etc. on Bossangoa concession. I want to go now to Bossangoa and help Brother Sheldon build. School building, dispensary building and church building all nearly finished.

I am putting all veranda poles now in rock sockets. Thus there is no chance for white ants."

Miss Tyson writes under date of January 12th: "Miss Emmert and I are on an itinerating trip. Mr. Hathaway took us as far as Mboutou. Here we had lunch together and he then went on to Bangui, and we started the next day for Garemo. Thus we are covering much the same territory that we did on our first trip; only this time we are not traveling as fast and are stopping oftener. We have Yolo and Yama with us. They are very faithful, and so willing to do anything we ask of them. So far we have not seen outward results, but we believe if we sow the word in faith the Lord will bless his word, will water the seed and give the increase. The minds of the people seem much occupied with the things of the evil one, especially as this is the hunting season.

"There is a great deal of dancing and of other preparatory ceremonies in their villages. We know, however that his word will not return unto him void, but will accomplish that whereunto he has sent it. We therefore rejoice especially in having this privilege at this time, although it means more faith and more trust on our part.

"I was searching my own heart and trying to find out the cause of the indifference on the part of the natives. I found no solution until in one of my letters I found a tract which seemed to have a message for me at this particular time, the last verse of the poem being especially appropriate to the present circumstance:

"Leave the Miracle to Him"

"Christian worker, looking forward
 To the ripened harvest field,
 Does the task seem great before you?
 Think how rich will be the yield!
 Bravely enter with your Master,
 Though the prospects may be dim,
 Preach the word with holy fervor,—
 Leave the miracle to him."
 So—"On I go not knowing,
 I would not if I might;
 I would rather walk in the dark with God,
 Than without him walk by sight."

"The foundation for the dispensary was completed when we left early in January. The building will consist of two wards, an office and dressing room, with a six foot veranda surrounding all.

"The boys are busy writing letters to you, which I shall enclose in my letter. It is so interesting to watch them. They write a few words, then take their efforts to Miss Emmert for inspection. The longer we are here, the more we love them, and thank God for them. I now have a Baya personal boy. He is faithful and such a good worker."

From Mr. Sheldon at Bossangoa under date of January 22nd we hear:

"Praise the Lord, the long wait for building permission is over. Of course we are running over with joy. You know what it means to wait and wait, seemingly without one ray of hope, and then for the Lord to work in his wondrous ways. Yet although waiting has been hard, we have through it learned many valuable lessons and we praise him for it all.

"Mr. Sheldon has already prepared the site for the house. Monday it will be marked off. You don't know how happy we are to see our first home started. The foundation will be of red stones. Everything used in building will be permanent except the walls, which will later be replaced by brick. It will be screened, making it safe from mosquitoes.

"Gowan and Donou have just returned from the bush where they have been preaching the gospel. Donou is a carpenter, and is also doing well as an evangelist, especially here among his own people. Gowan continues faithful as ever.

"We have plenty of food—so much venison. Had some very nice tenderloin for dinner. We have all the eggs and milk we can use and so many tomatoes and lettuce heads in the garden that it doesn't seem at all like a dry season. We praise the Lord that he has so wonderfully supplied all. The Word is going forth every day. More than seventy-five have been baptized. We do praise him for calling us forth to this work."

Miss Emmert, at Yaloke, writes under date of February 6th: "Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway are away at the other stations. This morning at Sunday school Mrs. Foster taught the women. We are glad to have Mr. and Mrs. Foster, and especially so during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway."

The latest letter received from the field is one from Miss Tyson under head of February 9th:

"We are now enjoying cows' milk. You will find it different in many ways when you return, plenty of fruit and plenty of milk. The pai-pai trees are doing fine, and the fruit is so large and so good.

"Next week Miss Emmert will commence her second term of school, this time in the new school building.

"Mr. Foster thinks that at the end of this week he will have sufficient bricks made for the dispensary walls. Fortunately the brick-layers are concession men and will not be absent during the hunting season. We did so hope that you need not have returned to a mud house, but it seems that you will do so." (The necessity of erecting permanent church, school and hospital buildings for the rapidly growing work at Yaloke have made it impossible as yet to complete permanent dwelling houses.) "I must prepare a sermon," Miss Tyson continues, "as it is my turn to preach tomorrow morning."

Bassai mail has been delayed, and I must send February reports from this station another time."

So much for the 1927 reports from the field. As to Paris, Marguerite and I are now having our Easter vacations. Marguerite has been entranced with the beauties of the big stores—Bon Marche, the Louvre, Hotel de Ville, and "Printemps", the ones which we have so far visited. But her joy seemed to overflow, when I took her to the "Bois de Vincennes." (The woods of Vincennes). I think she felt herself once more in Sunnyside, and romped and played to her heart's content. We are fortunately near "le jardin de Luxembourg", the finest public garden in Paris, where Marguerite imbibes her fresh air on the numerous days when we find no time to go either to the suburbs or the country.

We praise God for all his goodness to us, for the degree of health which we possess, and for our loving Heavenly Father's care, provision and fellowship. We pray for the journeys we are so soon to take in opposite directions, for strength and grace of mind and heart that in all things "he may have the pre-eminence." Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

The path of duty may be rugged, but wherever it is trod by willing feet, the traveler finds happy surprises all along the way.

ITINERATING IN SOUTHERN BRAZIL

The missionary archdeacon of the Protestant Episcopal church in this part of Brazil, Rev. America V. Cabral, travels over a wide tract of country on horseback. It is a pastoral region, rather sparsely settled, spoken of as the "Serra." He finds a population largely composed of the oldest settlers in the country, very simple in their customs and manner of life, much neglected religiously and so very ready to hear the Gospel. He has established little groups all through this section, which meet regularly for Bible reading and study, according to a well-ordered plan and under the leadership either of a catechist or a teacher. At regular intervals he goes over the field, visiting each little congregation, catechising the children, testing the progress of the adults, and giving special directions to his helpers. The results have been most gratifying. The "Serrano" has proven himself capable of a very manly, simple Christian faith; and the invariable results of the knowledge of God's Word and of faith in Christ as the only Savior are evident in the personal character and changed social condition of the people.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Warsaw, Indiana Boosts Endowment

This church is well known to the brotherhood on account of its close proximity to Winona Lake.

It was a real pleasure to work with these people, and I found them interested in the College and willing to do their part. There is no wealth in the membership, and their giving was a real sacrifice.

The pastor, Brother Clarence Grisso, gave me every aid and I enjoyed a closer up acquaintance with him. Under his leadership the church is in a fine working condition and is making progress.

While there the Men's Glee Club of the College gave one of their programs to a large and appreciative audience and Ashland College need not be ashamed of them—they did well.

While in Warsaw, I was out to Winona Lake several times and saw the immense sewerage system that is going in, which will cost nearly $60,000. All the sewerage will pass through tanks and come out completely filtered. This will make Winona free from any contamination from this source in the future.

The total gift of the church to the Endowment was $1,710.00. W. S. BELL.

PERU, INDIANA

It is always a source of pleasure to read news from the churches, through the pages of the Evangelist. We are all one great family: hence a deep interest in the spiritual welfare of all the churches. Peru hasn't come before you for a long time to speak of her activities for his Kingdom, nevertheless she has been right on the job. Many are especially interested in Peru because of financial help given by the different boards. About two months ago we began laying plans for a two weeks' evangelistic meeting to be held the two weeks previous to Easter. The pastor, Rev. G. L. Maus, who was to be evangelist, outlined some definite plans preparatory to this campaign. A prayer band, praying definitely for the conversion of souls, visiting in homes represented in the Sunday school, members pledged their consecration and to say in all this a very fine spirit of co-operation was manifest. The church called Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer, whose home is in Peru and who are widely known as evangelistic leaders in music, to have full charge of that part of our services. This was the third time these fine people have labored with us in this capacity, so we know just what to expect. Their ability in this line of work with their consecration and experience makes them a mighty force back of evangelistic sermons. In personal work and influence they are very practical and earnest. Their talent linked with the earnestness of our pastor and cooperation of the members with the atmosphere of the Easter season, brought great blessings to the church and community besides adding 46 new members to our church enrollment. Some came by letter from other churches, others were men, women, boys and girls from the Sunday school. How we all rejoiced to see them come. When the second invitation was given and fifteen responded, it seemed glorious for some had been prayed for for a long time. Prayer does prevail. Yes, we did pray earnestly and often. God heard and answered.

Rev. Maus has been the pastor here four years, so he was not a new man in charge to excite curiosity by a new and different program, but the house was filled almost every night to hear God's truth. He is known in the community as one who preaches the truth fearlessly and convincingly. He still believes in this 20th century that people like to hear God's Word when they go to church. He did declare it with all boldness, but yet in love. He labored hard and was gratified when the calls were heard.

Here is the writeup from one of the city papers on the day before Easter. This was written by the editor without being asked, for a writeup. So we do not hesitate to give it, because it shows the effect of our meeting on the community in general.

"What is being voted by all those associated with the movement as the most successful meeting in the history of the local Brethren church will come to a close tomorrow evening. While the meeting has been in progress only two weeks, the attendance, interest, enthusiasm and results have been most gratifying. Many nights the house has been crowded to capacity and the church will receive at least a half hundred new members as a visible result of the campaign. In addition to this every department and organization of the church has been built up and its influence increased.

Rev. G. L. Maus, the popular and efficient pastor of the church, has been the evangelist in charge. He has been preaching, throughout the entire meeting, strong, logical, sane, timely and gripping sermons,—one of the best series of evangelistic sermons in his career in Peru. He has inspired the thinking, induced action and touched the hearts of all his auditors.

"Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer, eminent leaders in evangelistic music, residents of Peru who travel far and wide in union evangelistic work, have been giving of their very best efforts in this meeting and have been a great inspiration and blessing to all who have attended these services, both adults and children. The church members themselves have been 'of a mind to work,' each serving in their own capacity to the best of their ability.

"The splendid success of these meetings has been due to this efficient leadership and hearty co-operation and consecration and also to the spirit of the Easter season which has been strongly felt and emphasized at each service. Many members from other churches in the town and community have attended the meeting, giving their inspiration and receiving in turn a blessing.

"The whole community has been blessed and inspired by this splendid campaign and feels more and more the impress of the unselfish service that this fine church is rendering in our midst."—(Peru Journal-Chronicle).

Now Just a word about some of the departments of our work. The Sunday school is doing splendid work and shows a steady, healthy growth in all its departments. The Women's Missionary Society has also made a splendid increase in her membership and we do say without hesitancy that we have a mighty loyal lot of women in this capacity. Their spiritual strength is to be commended as well as their financial aid toward our indebtedness. The Sisterhood, indeed, we are very proud of our girls, a number of these girls were converts in the meeting and while their work has been splendid, yet we know it will be increased too, because all the girls are Christian girls now. They enjoy their work with Mrs. Maus, their patroness, who leads them so splendidly to all their successes. Not only do the Sisterhood girls appreciate her efforts in their work, but the W. M. S. girls feel the inspiration from her life and earnestness that inspires them to deeper consecration. When love and harmony prevails—success is bound to come. May we heed the words of him who said "Occupy till I come."

A MEMBER.

JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

It has been some time since Brother H. E. Eppley made his report of the Jones Mills meeting. And a longer time since the Evangelist has heard from me. So I will endeavor to report the result of the meeting and at the same time make a report of the work at this place.

The Jones Mills congregation have a very high appreciation of the work of Brother Eppley in their midst.

The visible results of the meeting were six public confessions, all of which have been baptized and received into the membership of the church. Since the close of the meeting another young man made the good confession and has been received into full membership, making a total of seven additions since the first of this year.

Every department of the church is in a healthy condition.

The attendance at the regular church services have been gradually increasing. The Sunday school has been growing in enrollment and attendance. On last Sunday the attendance exceeded the enrollment.

The W. M. S. though young, is doing a splendid work.

Recently a Y. P. S. C. E. has been organized which is full of life and enthusiasm.

On April 17th we closed our work with these people, due to the fact that we had served them for five years. Making a round trip of one hundred miles every other Sunday. During this time there was no other church near with which they could unite in locating a pastor near them.

There may now be a possibility of them linking up with the Mt. Pleasant people and thus have a pastor near them, who can thus devote more time to their needs. May God bless and prosper this people.

We too are in a position to consider a call from some of our churches that may be in need of a pastor.

Yours for service,
W. S. BAKER,

351 Beatrice Avenue, Johnstown, Pa.

E. E. JACOBS.

MANTECA, CALIFORNIA

I am happy to render a report once more from this corner of the Master's vineyard. We rejoice in his continued grace and mercy to his people, and at the many evidences of his presence among them. He is prospering his work and we are glad to have a small part in the growth that is taking place.

The thing that always makes us happiest is the salvation of souls. To work with men and talk with them and preach to them the gospel of the grace of God, and to witness their response to our efforts put forth and accept the Savior for themselves, brings more joy and better compensation than anything else I could mention.

All the departments of our church are functioning very nicely and are a wonderful help to the church. All the work is supervised by the church and is conducted as part of the church and not a separate organization. Constantly stressing the supreme importance of the church, and that all other work is woefully incomplete until it finds its completion in the services of the church, has proven to us the great stopping of young people leaving the Sunday school services or the C. E. services and missing the church service proper. We rejoice in the wholehearted and unanimous support on the part of our youngsters and thank God for their loyalty. I am glad to say that rarely does a single Sunday school scholar leave the Sunday school at its close, but all remain, for we invariably use them in the preaching services that follows. The same is true regarding the C. E. meetings. They all stay and listen to the sermons and do what they are called upon to do, and I make it a point to call on them, too.

We owe a great deal to Brother Leo Polman of Los Angeles, who worked among our people during Brother Cobb's last meeting among us a year ago last June when the Lord graciously gave us a harvest of 25 souls. Lee introduced choruses among them, and we have kept up the practice till now there are folks who come to our services as they tell me, to hear our young people sing. Then, too, our own folks like to have their children under their own eyes and witness them adding the zeal of youth to the services.

I believe that this practice would help solve the so-called problem of absent young people in the church services and the loss from the Sunday school that is so lamented these days.

Recently among the girls, our Sunday school superintendent, Laura Larson, started the organization of a Sisterhood of Mary and Martha. Now I am planning a similar move among the boys and young men, something on the plan of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, that I used to enjoy so much when I was a student at Ashland College. Their interest is on the increase towards such a move, and I feel that if I can adequately provide for their social life in Christian surroundings, that they will grow strong in the service of the Master.

Recently John E. Brown of Arkansas conducted a revival in Stockton, California. We took advantage of the proximity of this great man of God. God rewarded us for our interest. As a direct result and visible, five souls were added to the church by baptism. Then to follow up the consuming passion for lost souls, we were fortunate in having the help of our Brother N. W. Jennings of Los Angeles for three weeks. This was my first opportunity to work with him and God graciously gave us many souls. Thirty made the good confession, a number await baptism right now. Twenty-one, including the five above mentioned, have already been added to the church by baptism, and we are planning on baptizing some of the rest of them soon. The interest continues, and since the meeting several others have made the confession of faith in Jesus Christ. I found Brother Jennings truly interested in the salvation of the lost, and he left a profound impression on my church. God bless him for the inspiration he proved to be to us. The church has been revived and new folks have been added to the Lord.

From Manteca Brother Jennings was called to Tracy, California, thirteen miles from Manteca for a meeting in the Presbyterian church. A number of the Tracy folks had come over to Manteca, and they were impressed with the presence of the Lord in the meetings. They gave Brother Jennings a call to come over there and help them out, which he did. After three weeks of preaching there in that city I have not heard of a revival during the fourteen years that I have been here. God opened the doors of heaven, and 80 souls found their way to Christ. Ten were counted as reconsecrations, and 70 were what might be called first confessions. Some of our own folks move from Manteca to Sacramento, California, and by their prayers Brother Jennings was called to the United Brethren church there, and souls have been saved during the first week which at this writing is now closed and the second week is in progress. We feel that God opened a great door and effectual during the last few months in this part of his vineyard.

Our little band of Brethren that organized in Manteca with 19 members in 1921 has now grown to a church membership of 130. We rejoice and thank God. We are interested in the growth of the work all over the brotherhood. God bless you all and give you many souls for your eternal great reward. Come and see us when you are in California. J. WESLEY PLATT.

EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

From Los Angeles to Manteca

On February the thirteenth, Brother A. B. Cover preached his first sermon in the First Brethren church of Los Angeles as pastor. At his own request the writer took charge of the opening and the closing of the services.

At the close of the morning service it was my privilege to receive into the church Brother Cover, his good wife and his daughter with two others, all by letter.

May God give the pastor wisdom from on high to lead the flock of the living God into the fullness of his grace.

On February 20 with Brother John Wesley Platt and his flock of consecrated people we launched a campaign of soul winning which was blessed of God with the presence of the Holy Spirit from the beginning. The old and the young came to the Christ of God, to him be the praise and the glory. It was a great pleasure to work with Brother Platt in an evangelistic campaign. He is an ideal man, a man of God, and a man greatly loved, not only by his own people in the church, but by the entire community. Brother Platt has preached in these parts about 14 years and the people are not tired of him. My home while at Manteca was in the home of Brother and Sister Platt. (One day while in his home I said to their son, I trust you will give your heart to Jesus during the meeting). That night he walked out and took his stand for Jesus. Our fellowship in the home of Brother Platt was glorious. We also had a blessed time of fellowship in many homes among the Brethren.

God bless you, Brother Platt, your good wife and children, and the people whom you serve.

While at Manteca, Dr. Barber, pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Tracy, about thirteen miles from Manteca, attended the meeting. One evening he asked me if I would hold him a campaign in Tracy. I said we will pray about it and let the Holy Spirit lead, which we did. Brother Platt said, "N. W., if ever you had a Macedonia call, you have it now." On March the 20th we opened up fire on the enemy in Tracy, which is a railroad town of about six thousand people. The Holy Spirit convicted the people and prepared their hearts for the living word. For three weeks we preached a whole Gospel with all the power God gave us and seventy souls confessed Jesus as Savior from sin, and twenty came out to dedicate their lives to God, ninety in all lined up with the Christ of God. Dr. Barber is a Spirit filled man, a man who loves God and the Book, his BIBLE. We baptized some of the converts in the First Baptist church in Stockton by Triune dipping. Tracy will one day be ready for a Brethren church.

While in Tracy we had three homes, staying one week in each home and in each home all lined up for Christ and the church. Dr. Barber the pastor, was good to me; on Monday evening was rest night. One Monday he took me to Santa Cruz and to San Jose where I had a short visit with Brother Roger Darling, which was a blessed time of fellowship.

Our second trip was to Yosemite Park, to my mind the most beautiful spot in God's great world. We closed the meeting at Tracy on Sunday evening, April the tenth, and on Monday, April the eleventh, I started for home, and reached home for a good birthday supper prepared for me by my wife. After supper about thirty of the Brethren and Sisters of the First church came in, bringing with them tokens which were highly appreciated. Then refreshments, ice cream and cake., Then some games. Then a prayer by Brother A. B. Cover and Brother A. P. Reed, and good night.

We are now in a campaign in the First United Brethren church in Sacramento, with Dr. Overton and his flock. Yesterday morning we preached our first sermon and it being Easter Sunday, we preached on the subject, "The Glorious Resurrection of the Son of God." Five came to Jesus at the close of the services. I ask the prayers of all God's people for victory in the name of the Christ of God.

Address: 3927 South San Pedro Street, Los Angeles, California.

RUSKIN'S ADVICE

"In the pain and the repentance, and in the acquaintance with the aspects of folly and sin, you have learned something: how much less than you would have learned in right paths can never be told, but that it is less is certain. Your liberty of choice has simply destroyed for you so much of life and strength never regainable. It is true you know the habits of swine now, and the taste of husks. Do you think your Father could not have taught you to know better habits and pleasanter tastes if you had stayed in his house, and that the knowledge you have lost would not have been more, as well as sweeter, than you have gained?" —Queen of the Air.

I will keep the fire of hope ever burning on the altar of my soul,
I will feed it by day and by night with the fuel of industry;
A great purpose is growing in the garden of my heart;

I will moisten its roots each morning with the water of a new resolve
I will forego comfort and pleasure until this plan of my purpose bear fruit.
All will I sacrifice, life, time, happiness,
To realize in my life the purposes of God.

Dear C. E. friends: It is with eagerness I hope that we are looking forward, talking about and planning for our "College Night" Program, on the evening of May 29th. You recall that this is to be "A Real Life Situation" conducted either in the form of a debate, drama, or short talks. It will be real in the sense that it will picture a life in a certain home where the father, mother, sons, and daughters are discussing and evaluating the advantages and disadvantages of college education. Every society is going to make it the most inspirational program of the year. Are we not? Begin now to plan and prepare. If you have any questions to ask concerning further details, please write me at Hartford Seminary, Hartford, Connecticut.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

TEDDY'S FIRST VOYAGE

By Florence Mellish, in "Congregationalist"

Our Teddy laughed as he sailed away
While he could see the shore,
And when the land was out of sight
He only laughed the more.

And when they stowed him safe away
Within the upper berth,
He filled the tiny cabin full
With shouts of boyish mirth.

He laughed and laughed; "I don't call this
A sleeping-room at all—
A pantry cupboard, don't you think?
And very, very small."

And when the sun came shining in,
He caught its earliest beam
And woke his father with a shout
To tell a funny dream.

"I thought the cupboard rocked and rocked.
I wasn't me myself,
But just a big, big frosted cake
Upon the highest shelf.

"While I was rocking there I thought
A freckled boy about
As big as me came climbing up
And picked a raisin out."

THE LITTLE RED HOUSE

By Carolyn Sherwin Bailey

Once upon a time there was a little boy who was tired of all his toys and tired of all his picture books and tired of all his play. "What shall I do?" he asked his dear mother.

And his dear mother, who always knew beautiful things for little boys to do, said: "You shall go on a journey and find a little red house with no doors and with a star inside."

Then the little boy's eyes grew big with wonder. "Which way shall I go?" he asked, "to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

"Down the lane and past the farmer's house and over the hill," said his dear mother. "Come back as soon as you can and tell me all about your journey."

So the little boy started out. He had not walked very far down the lane when he came to a very little girl dancing along in the sunshine. "Do you know where I shall find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?" the little boy asked.

The little girl laughed. "Ask my father, the farmer," she said.

So the little boy went on until he came to the great brown barn, where the farmer himself stood in the doorway looking out over the pastures and grain fields.

"Do you know where I shall find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?" asked the little boy.

The farmer laughed too. "I've lived a great many years, and I never saw one," he chuckled. "But ask the granny who lives at the foot of the hill. She knows how to make arrowroot taffy, popcorn balls and red mittens. Perhaps she can direct you to it."

So the little boy went on farther still, until he came to the granny sitting in her pretty garden of herbs and marigolds. "Please, dear granny," asked the little boy, "where shall I find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The granny was knitting a red mitten, but when she heard the little boy's question she laughed cheerily. "I should like to find that little house myself," she chuckled. "It would be warm when the frosty nights come, and the starlight would be prettier than a candle. But ask the wind, who blows about so much and listens to all the chimneys. Perhaps the wind can direct you to the little house."

So the little boy took off his cap politely to granny and went up the hill. The wind was coming down the hill as the little boy climbed up.

"O wind," asked the little boy, as the wind turned and journeyed with him up the hill, "can you help me to find a little red house with no doors and a star inside?"

The wind can not speak in our words, but it went singing on ahead of the little boy until it came to an orchard. There it climbed up in an apple tree and shook the branches. When the little boy caught up, there, at his feet, lay a rosy apple. The little boy picked up the apple. It was as much as his two hands could hold. It was red as the sun had been able to paint it, and the thick brown stem stood up as straight as a chimney. It was a little red house in which the apple blossom fairy went to sleep. It had no windows.

"I wonder," thought the little boy. He took his jack-knife from his pocket and cut the apple straight through the center. Oh, how wonderful, there inside the apple, lay a star holding brown seeds.

So the little boy called "Thank you" to the wind, and the wind whistled back, "you're welcome." Then the little boy ran home to his mother and gave her the apple.

"It is too wonderful to eat without looking at the star, isn't it?" he said.

"Yes, indeed," answered his dear mother. —Mother's Magazine.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

PEARCE-SAYLOR—On Tuesday evening, of April 5th, 1927, at the Brethren Parsonage, the writer joined in holy wedlock, Mr. Leslie Pearce and Miss Ella Saylor, both of near Portis, Kansas. Both are members of the Brethren church and are highly esteemed. One happy consolation is, we shall not lose their presence from the Sunday school or church work, for they live on his farm, several miles out. Mrs. Pearce is an accomplished Bible student and has done efficient work in the Brethren church at other places. We are glad to have them with us, and may the Lord's blessing follow them in this new union. W. R. DEETER.

DEETER-HOLSINGER—Mr. Perry B. Deeter, and Mrs. Eva Holsinger, both of Norcatur, Kansas, were joined in holy matrimony on February 27th, 1927, at the Brethren parsonage in Portis, Kansas. The groom is an older brother of the writer, and they drove 110 miles on Sunday forenoon for this special occasion. After a two and a half hours' stay they returned to their home town, the same day. We deem this quite an honor to officiate in the service, and further, this same brother came down here a few years ago, and I had the privilege of performing the rite of baptism on him. The wishes of their many friends go with them for a long and happy life together. W. R. DEETER.

IN THE SHADOW

BALL—Mrs. Clarissa Ball, widow of Jos. L. Ball, passed from this life Sunday morning, February 6th, 1927, aged 84 years, 3 months and 19 days.

Mrs. Ball was a daughter of the late George and Amanda (Brown) Barricklow of Dunbar. She was united in marriage to Joseph Ball of Dunbar Township on January 21st, 1864. To this union were born the following children: Mrs. John N. Hibbs, in whose home she passed away and with whom she had made her home; George Ball, of North Union Township, and twins, Altha and Amanda. Amanda died in infancy and Altha in 1913 in his 37th year.

Mrs. Ball is survived by two brothers—Abraham and Emanuel Barricklow of Kansas; two children, Sarah Elizabeth Hibbs and Geo. W. Ball; three grandchildren. Ernest

MRS. CLARISSA BALL

Hibbs of New Salem, Elmer Ball of Washington, Pa., Irvin Ball of Cincinnati, Ohio; also three great grandchildren—Edwin Ray Ball, Junior Ball and Margaret Hibbs.

Her husband, Joseph Ball; three brothers and two sisters, John, George and Albert Barricklow and Mrs. Jane Rankin and Sarah Barricklow; two children, Altha and Amanda and two great grandchildren, Eleanor Ball and Betty Jane Hibbs, preceded her to the glory world.

Mrs. Ball had been a member of the Brethren church for more than fifty years, and up until the time of her late illness was an active member of the First Brethren church of Uniontown. For the past year or so she had not been able to attend the services on account of illness, but never at any time failed to support the work with her means. When Dr. Bell and the writer, less than a year ago, called on her in regard to College endowment, she at once manifested an interest and gave Dr. Bell a check for a substantial sum. She was a woman who lived a life of regularity. She retired at a certain hour at night, she had a certain hour to rise in the morning, she ate her meals at regular periods of the day and in every way lived a systematic life, which without doubt aided greatly in her living the long and useful life that she lived. Mrs. Ball was a woman that made many friends and was loved by all who knew her. Her death will not only be felt in the home, but in the church and also in the community.

Funeral services were held in the Hibbs home near Searights, Tuesday afternoon, February 8, 1927. Services conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. W. Kilgore of the New Salem Presbyterian church. Burial in Oak Grove Cemetery, Uniontown, Pa.

E. FORREST BYERS.

JOLLY—Little Maxine Jolly, daughter of Thomas and Laura (Lowstetter) Jolly, of Grindstone, near Brownsville, Pa., passed from this life, March 23rd, after a brief stay of but nine months and six days. Death came as the result of pneumonia following whooping cough.

As has been said: "Lovely buds these children are, transplanted by death in that larger garden above, where, in pure atmosphere and with heavenly fragrance, they are to blossom through the endless cycles of a glorious eternity."

The funeral services were conducted in the Jolly home at Grindstone, by the undersigned, on Friday afternoon, March 25th, with burial in the Oak Grove cemetery at Uniontown, Pa. May the Spirit of him who said: "Lo I am with you always," be with, and comfort the hearts of those that mourn.

E. FORREST BYERS.

CONNELL—Rosetta Connell, wife of Amos Connell, North Georgetown, Ohio, was born June 8, 1849; died April 14, 1927, aged 77 years, 10 months and 6 days.

She was united in marriage to Amos Connell April 12, 1872. She was the mother of 5 children, 3 sons and 2 daughters. One son and one daughter preceded her in death.

She was a charter member of the Brethren church at North Georgetown.

She was very loyal and when she could she was always faithful in her attendance at the church services.

Funeral was conducted by the writer from the Brethren church. ALVIN BYERS.

Dirk—Ernest LeRoy Dirk was born in Homerville, Ohio, January 28, 1881 and departed this life at Phoenix, Arizona, April 18, 1927, being past 46 years of age. He united with the Brethren church at the above named place under the pastorate of my father in 1897 and was a faithful and consistent Christian up to the time of his death. He was married to Miss Lou McMillan at Pontiac, Illinois, in 1907, who survives him. He was a pupil of the writer, both at day and Sunday school and was a very dear friend. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by Rev. Thompson of the United Brethren church of Nova, Ohio, in whose church the services were held. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

BEEGLY—Brother Ira A. Beeghly, son of Abram and Catherine Beeghly, was born on a farm near Dayton, March 29th, 1871, and departed this life on the afternoon of February 27th. Brother Beeghly's death was untimely and shocking to his large circle of relatives and friends. On the morning of February 26th, he went forth to his work for the day in the enjoyment of perfect health, but sustained a fall from a bridge, which at first did not seem to be serious, but which resulted in his death in the afternoon of the next day. He had reached the age of almost 56 years. His devoted wife, five sisters, very many relatives, and many friends remain to mourn and lament his sudden death. Brother Beeghly was a member of the Bear Creek church, originally, and later became a member of the Dayton church when that body affiliated with Dayton. He was a man of rare Christian character, and loyal in every way to his church. His passing means a very keen and distinct loss to the church and the community. Because of the long and intimate friendship between him and the writer, it was a sad and testing task for the writer to preach the sermon. Services were in the church with a large concourse present. May God graciously sustain the widow and sisters in this time of their great sorrow. W. H. BEACHLER, Pastor.

BAKER—Emily Wood Baker, wife of O. D. Baker of Warsaw, departed this life on April 11, 1927, at the age of 67 years. Sister Baker was a member of the Warsaw Brethren church for more than 35 years, and was active in the service as long as health permitted. Her going was peaceful. May God's grace sustain the husband and son with the other relatives and friends, until the believers in Christ shall be gathered home. The last rites were held in the Brethren church, in charge of the pastor. C. C. GRISSO.

O'NEILL—Jennie E. O'Neill was born in the borough of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, a daughter of Patrick F. and Elizabeth Shaffer O'Neill, both of whom, together with the daughter were members of the Brethren church of that place, the parents being among the founders of the church there. Miss O'Neill passed to her Lord on Saturday afternoon, April 9, after a brief illness from pneumonia, her demise coming as a great shock to the family and friends. Miss O'Neill was for twenty-five years a trusted employee of the Penn Traffic Store, one of the largest of its kind in the city of Johnstown.

Two sisters, Mrs. J. L. Weller of Oil City, Louisiana, and Mrs. Nettie O'Neill, of New Brighton, Pennsylvania, (and well known to the Brethren fraternity) comprise the immediate survivors of the deceased's family. Three nieces and two nephews, together with other distant relatives mourn her departure.

Funeral services were conducted from the Flick Mortuary on Tuesday afternoon, April 12, in charge of the undersigned, assisted by brethren Chas. H. Ashman of the First church and A. R. Staley, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church. A vast concourse of people paid respectful homage to a dear relative and friend. Interment was at the Hedrick cemetery, near Conemaugh, beside the bodies of the parents. Peace to the ashes and God rest the soul. DYOLL BELOTE.

BOOTHE—Lois Jane daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Letcher Boothe, was accidentally drowned near her home in Oak Hill, April 13. She was five years, three months and twenty-nine days at the time of her unfortunate death. The physician and some of us worked to restore life when she was found, but her spirit had flown. Besides her father and mother she is survived by three brothers and two sisters. The last services were held in the Oak Hill Brethren church by the writer, assisted by Brother J. W. Whitenack, Pastor of the Church of God. A large assembly gathered to sympathize with the grief stricken father and mother. Burial was in the Chestnut Grove Church of the Brethren Cemetery. Churches as Religious Educational Agencies

Churches are often handicapped by a too narrow conception of their function. Their program of activity is so limited that what they achieve thereby is very largely offset by their losses in other fields due to their blindness to opportunity. One of the outstanding weaknesses of some of the churches of our brotherhood is that they are lacking in a well-rounded, mature, comprehensive conception of their mission. They are intensely right with regard to certain specific and divinely imposed responsibilities on which the denomination has long placed emphasis, but they have failed to share the brotherhood's steadily expanding vision with regard to its mission; they have been apparently unconscious of the worth of other neglected phases of the church's duty, set forth with equal urgency and clearness by the Holy Scriptures as others long noticed.

One of these phases of the church's task, divinely given, but too often overlooked, is the education of people in matters of religious belief and practice. Preaching and evangelism, as generally understood, are not the whole of the church's task, vital and urgent though they are. Religious education is as surely and positively set forth by the Word of God as the bounden duty of the church. One of the most prominent clauses of the Great Commission is "teaching them to observe all things" (Matt. 28:20), and even the word translated in the revised version "discipling" has as its root meaning the teaching of others to follow, or to become learners. The old version not inappropriately translates it "teaching all nations" instead of "discipling all nations", and it occurs to us that the older version brings out a phase of the meaning of the Greek word that our American mind does not so readily grasp from the term, "discipling." It implies a teaching that has the result of causing those taught to follow and to become learners of that which is taught or of the one teaching. But not only in this particular scripture, but throughout the New Testament the teaching function of the church and of its ministry is set forth repeatedly and emphatically. One is surprised when he goes through his New Testament for the first time studying the emphasis placed on teaching. It is stressed in every book, and made a vital function of the ministry. Paul admonishes the young minister, Timothy, that the things which he has heard of him he shall commit unto "faithful men who shall be able to teach others also." This same apostle tells the Corinthian church (1 Cor. 12:28) that among the officeholders which God hath ordained in the body of Christ are "thirdly, teachers", and to the Ephesians (4:7, 11), he says, in urging unity, that the Lord Jesus has bestowed upon every one according to measure or ability, to some the gift of being "pastors and teachers", thus pointing out teaching as one of the functions of the Lord's under-shepherds. So then, he who neglects the teaching part of his ministry, or makes little of it, fails in one of the most distinctive and important features of his calling.

Not only in the ministry, but in every avenue of the church's life the teaching function should be more conscientiously exercised, nor should it be done by haphazard or chance method, but by carefully laid and faithfully executed plans. The church should make provision through the various agencies at its command for the most efficient and thorough religious instruction possible of its membership and others who may put themselves in its care. It is encouraging to note that most of our churches are beginning to awaken to their vast opportunities and responsibilities along this line, and some are doing very commendable work, but there are others that have apparently not yet come to a realization that it is possible for them to do more intensive work in religious education than they have ever done. The maintenance of the customary preaching services and an indifferently manned and equipped Sunday school is the limit of their ambition. There are no pastor's instruction classes, no teacher training classes, no Week Day Religious Education efforts, no Daily Vacation Bible schools, and no other special means of imparting religious instruction. Such indifference and lack of vision is inexcusable in a time of awakening and opportunity like this, and the loss to the church is irretrievable. Such faithlessness on the part of the church to its teaching function is responsible for much of the deplorable religious ignorance prevailing among children and youth. And where there is such a dearth of religious knowledge there can be little strength of religious conviction and little disposition to denominational loyalty, and that in a day when such are sorely needed.

There comes to us a challenge from an announced policy of a sister denomination. The Sunday School Editorial Department of the Methodist Episcopal church, headed up by Dr. Henry H. Meyer, has set before itself five ideals, which have been proclaimed to the churches of that denomination and serve as a stimulus to attainment. Following are those ideals adapted to our own denominational ends and elaborated upon:

First, every Brethren church is, or should be, a school of religion, in which intensive instruction is given in the Christian way of life.

Second, the Brethren ministry is a teaching fraternity, and in more systematic and effective ways should this teaching function be fulfilled.

Third, the greatest asset the church has is its children and young people, and it is far more profitable to seek to avoid the loss than to rescue the lost.

Fourth, the church schools are the most effective agencies for evangelism at our command, and that high spiritual end should be kept in mind in selecting our teachers, in planning our programs and in securing our equipment.

Fifth, in this all-important work of Christian teaching no literature but the very best is good enough for the task at hand, and the best literature obtainable for Brethren schools is our own Brethren literature, which "is based upon sound pedagogical methods" and also stands foursquare upon the Word of God.

The educational function of the church is a thing that no people can afford to ignore or pass lightly by, and least of all that people who profess to be a "Whole Gospel Church." The maintenance of our faith, the faithfulness of our witness and the perpetuity of our church depend upon it.

Seeing Through the Fog

Sailors admit that the most treacherous weather condition they have to face is the fog. When a dense fog settles, they halt their vessels or creep slowly along until it lifts, for they have no lights that will penetrate such an obstruction. There are phenomena like that in the moral and spiritual world-fogs which fill the soul with fear because they expose the life to shipwreck and destruction. But there is a light that will penetrate the fogs that the soul must face, it is the light of faith in the living Lord. With the eyes of faith one can see through the blackest obstruction and catch a glimpse of the bright, soul-assuring light of divine presence and power.

And also in the physical world, it seems that he to whose mind are known all the secrets of the universe and to whose power all things are in subjection, is guiding the ways of men through the material fog and enabling them to pierce its density. An "Associated Press" dispatch from London says:

"A dark ray, which it is said will enable the operator to pierce thick fog or smoke and see what is beyond, was demonstrated by J. L. Baird, inventor of the televisor, in his laboratory today. The new invention is called 'noctovision.' Its inventor claims it will rob fog of its terrors and render naval and military smoke screens useless in warfare. It may also banish the element of surprise from naval and military aerial actions, and make it possible to locate fleets in the skies or at sea.

"In the presence of Admiral Mark Kerr and others, Baird today transmitted a doll's features through an artificial fog, produced by chemicals, so dense as nearly to choke his assistants.

"The new ray is a sort of invisible searchlight which, it is said, has sixteen times the penetration power of ordinary light through fog or smoke. The ray makes a sound when it encounters a solid object or even a ray of light. Each object produced a different sound, from which it is possible to determine its nature."

When Jesus said to his disciples, "I have many things to say unto you but ye cannot bear them now", his words were true of the material realm as well as of the spiritual, and little by little, as we are able to receive them, he is making known the hidden things of this world. One time he said, "There is nothing hid which shall not be revealed." How wonderfully that is being fulfilled! And, as one of our contemporaries remarks, "Science is one of Christ's ministers."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Prof. J. A. Garber gives us another installment of church school news, which every Sunday school worker will want to read. He calls attention to "statistics" and "Educational Day." Read and heed.

The Indiana district is announcing a day of fellowship and worship at Shipshewana for July 17, the day preceding the beginning the week of religious education, according to word from Brother C. A. Stewart, whose notice will appear next week.

Brother W. A. Crofford tells us of his work at Mount Pleasant, Pennsylvania, where he has served twelve years. He names three persons baptized and received into the church recently, one of whom, Brother C. C. Collins, is to succeed him as pastor of the church.

Our correspondent from Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, writes encouragingly and tells of the enjoyable pre-Easter services conducted by the pastor, Brother A. R. Staley, emphasizing the foreign mission work of the church. This church was recently host to a county Sunday school convention, from which they received much benefit.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble favors us with another installment of excerpts from letters received by her from workers of the African mission field. The brotherhood may thank God for the universal good health of the missionaries and for the encouraging progress in the material situation that has so much to do with the health and consequent effectiveness of service of our consecrated workers.

Prof. A. J. McClain tells us why he so thoroughly enjoyed the Pre-Easter services at Masontown, Pennsylvania, where Brother Herman Koontz is the aggressive young pastor. Preceding Brother McClain's arrival, the pastor had preached one week. As a result of the combined effort eight were added to the church, and the church greatly built up in the faith.

As we were going to press Brother George C. Pontius, pastor of the churches at Fairhaven and Homerville, Ohio, informed us that Fairhaven church near West Salem will hold communion services on the evening of May 22, and the Homerville church at Homer will observe the same ordinances on the evening of May 29. Will members kindly take notice and neighboring Brethren are invited.

Dr. C. F. Yoder tells of further encouraging progress in our mission work in the Argentine. In Laboulaye seven converts have been baptized and as many more are awaiting the rite. After four years of seed sowing this field seems to have reached the harvest period. A new building is greatly needed in Buenos Aires, where Brother Adolfo Zeche has been placed in charge as pastor. The faithfulness of Brother Perez in the midst of severe persecution is inspiring and his generosity and service to the church are encouraging.

"Breezes" from Oak Hill, West Virginia, are refreshing and encouraging; they tell us that ground is soon to be broken for their new church building and that we are to have the privilege of seeing a picture of the proposed structure. One has been added to the membership since last report, and a meeting with Brother R. Paul Miller in the lead in June promises much. Brother Ankrum, the energetic pastor, is serving his fourth year in this field.

Brother Lester V. King, pastor of the church at New Lebanon, Ohio, writes of the progress in that field, where thirty-eight have been added to the church since last report. As a result of the evangelistic campaign conducted by Brother R. D. Barnard of Mansfield, thirty-two were added, nineteen of which came by letter. This was a splendid boost to the New Lebanon work, which is stepping forward in splendid style under the leadership of Brother King.

Dr. W. S. Bell's visit to Fort Wayne and Dutchtown, Indiana, churches netted a total gift of $426 for College Endowment, and considering the situation at both places the churches are said to have done well. Fort Wayne is a new mission point under the efficient leadership of Brother J. L. Kimmel and Brother Bell says there is every reason for encouragement over the progress. Dutchtown is an old country church that has secured a new lease on life under the inspiring preaching of Brother B. H. Flora and now offers much promise for the future.

The program of the Maryland-Virginia district conference is to be found in this issue. The conference is to convene at Linwood, Maryland on June 14 to 16, and is to be presided over by Brother E. L. Miller as moderator. Brother G. C. Carpenter, president of the district Mission Board, in an announcement which did not arrive in time for a place in this issue, requests all churches of the Maryland-Virginia district to have their mission apportionments paid up by conference time. This is necessary to avoid the embarrassment of being reported delinquent.

President Jacobs' college news letter contains numerous interesting items this week, among them, and worthy of special notice, are the splendid records of the debating teams, the progress in erection of the new gymnasium, and the proposed trip of Prof. DeLozier to France for the study of the French language during the summer. Prof. DeLozier, who occupies the chair of Modern Languages in Ashland College, is rapidly gaining a reputation as an authority in French, and it is to further perfect his understanding French spirit and character that he has decided to spend several months in residence study in the French schools.

Brother J. L. Kimmel, the faithful builder of the Fort Wayne, Indiana church, writes of the progress of this splendid mission point and tells us that much of the opposition of neighbors has been overcome and the church is winning favor in the community. A two weeks' meeting conducted by Brother E. M. Riddle of Bryan, Ohio, resulted in six additions to the church, though the field has been well gleaned. Prof. J. Raymond Schutz recently gave his popular lecture on Europe in this church and it was greatly appreciated. Brother Schutz is very popular as a lecturer; we understand he has thirty-four lectures and commencement addresses to give between now and the second week in June. And yet he keeps church work and school work going satisfactorily, God has given a few people the ability to do many things and do them well.

Dr. R. R. Teeter fittingly writes the memorial tribute in honor of his mother, whose passing was recently noted in these columns. Because of the editor's rather intimate acquaintance with the aged mother of our co-worker, through having served as her pastor for a number of years, we wish to add a few words as a token of our appreciation of her life. She had already reached an advanced age when we became acquainted with her, but she displayed as much physical vigor and mental alertness as most people do twenty years younger. She never pampered herself, nor allowed the spirit of softness or helplessness to enter into her make-up. She would seldom admit she was ill, and we never knew her when she was ready to give up. It took more than a little thing to keep her away from the services of the church. In fact, her faithfulness in this regard would put to shame many perfectly well people in middle life. We never heard her offer a complaint or repeat a gossip. She was one of those self-possessed, self-controlled, well-regulated, strong characters that inspires the heart to meet. We feel enriched in life for having known her even for a short time, and the memory of her will be an inspiration. God richly blessed those who had such a noble mother.

The Simple Life Ideal and the Brethren Church

By Roy S. Long

All of us have a life to live. What it will be? Where it will be spent? What we will do? are questions to be answered by each and every individual. In the days of our fathers the quiet and unassuming life was in evidence everywhere. This spirit prevailed in the social, religious and business life of the people.

This quiet and simple life was a product of the farm. The people lived mostly in the country. They tilled the soil for their livelihood, spun their own cloth and made their own garments. An open frankness in dealing and conversation was the common characteristics of all as they dealt with each other.

As the country grew, cities became established. Populations increased. The factory took the place of the spinning wheel. The tin can the place of the canning and stewing kettle. Garments of all sizes and kinds could readily be purchased. Much of the employment of the home and farm shifted to new scenes of activity.

With the change of home activity meant also a change of the ideals of living. The home energy which expended itself in providing household necessities, must of necessity find expression in new activity. Hence, card parties, theater going, feasting, entertaining and dancing became more pronounced. The life of the people became much more complex than it had been. The farm was given in exchange for the city property. the country church for the city theater, and the quiet, unassuming life for a life of loud pretensions—one you hear so much of and see so little done. Dear reader, stop a moment for reflection and complete this picture of the change and the shallowness it has brought into life, the multiplicity of superficial interests and the lack of seriousness and worth it has produced.

All persons have but one life to invest. As wise folks they should desire to invest it where the return will be the largest. The question of living a life of pretensions or a quiet, real, unassuming life must be decided. In my judgment the latter is preferable in every way.

Jesus, the ideal man, lived the simple life. His was a plain, unassuming life. He was the carpenter's son, going quietly about his Father's business. Nothing could attract his attention away from the fulfillment of his life duty. Because of his easy approach all men sought him.

They followed him. He fed them, healed them, saved them. Because of his humble, simple, unassuming life, men loved him. And because of the strength of that life, they sought to touch his garments, believing the very touch might heal them. This simple, unassuming life of Jesus was a triumphant success. He was a man of prayer, of faith in God, of power with all men.

Jesus in selecting his workers, chose men who practiced the simple life. They were fishermen, men who toiled, men who knew and appreciated the position of others. The simple life to him, was the life all men should live, else he would have chosen others. The work of Jesus and the life he lived was approved of God the Father. God honored him by raising him from the dead. Gave him a seat at his right hand. Gave recognition to his pleadings and atonings for our transgression. Let us catch the spirit of his true greatness. Remembering the simple life was a great contribution to his success, will it not be an important element in ours?

The Brethren church decided years ago to practice the life and teachings of Jesus. To follow him is its highest aim. Hence, his plain-

What is the Simple Life?

What do we mean by the term, "The Simple Life?" Or what do we mean by plain, sensible living? For simplicity must be sensible and the sensible always has the characteristic of simplicity. Simple living means a temperate and sensible use of all good things and the avoidance of all evil and unnecessary things. It means the avoidance of extravagance, even in the good and beneficial things of life.

To some people the Simple Life means one thing and one only. They mean the Simple Life in dress. But life is a great deal more than dressing, and the Simple Life must be emphasized in the fullest sense of that term. We can never single out one act or course of conduct and emphasize that to the neglect of other things of equal importance.

If the Simple Life means anything, it means that it is to be an expression of a spiritual principle within the heart, which not only manifests itself in one way, but in every activity of life. Extravagance in one thing is no more justifiable than extravagance in another. We will never be able to deal successfully with extravagance in dress, or teach successfully the Simple Life in dress, until the principle of simple living is manifest in other activities of life.—President Otho Winger, Manchester College, in "The Simple Life."

Since spiritual growth is eternally important, it follows that whatever favors it should be sought, and also that anything which interferes in the least should be diligently avoided. And herein comes a careful consideration of the simple life.

In speaking of simplicity in life I want to be understood as referring to scriptural modesty and plainness in dress as well as to the simple furnishing of our homes, plain cooking and simple living in general. In contrast to this we have prevalent around us a complexity of life that ornaments and bedecks but exposes the body, revels in the elaborate and costly furnishing of the home, spends much time and effort in rich cooking, and fills the life in general with a concern for the things of this world.—James M. Moore, in "Simple Life Winners."

"To yearn for simple living, is to long to fulfill the highest human destiny. All humanity's movements toward brighter light and purer justice are, at the same time, toward plainer living. The source of simplicity is wholly inward; it is a spiritual state; it abides in the central intention animating us. The spirit of simplicity is not an estate inherited, but the need of laborious conquest."—Wagner.

ness and unassuming life is one of our cardinal virtues, or should be. We preach it. We seek to inculcate this vital principle in the lives of our people. But some talk of the new spirit of the age. And things are different, not as they used to be. We grant this, but are things as they ought to be? Would it not be better to practice the spirit of Jesus rather than the spirit of the age? Remember, dear reader, the spirit of this age seems to look too much away from Jesus and his teaching rather than to them. Which way are you looking?

The plain and unassuming life, is the most attractive after all. It is the most influential, uplifting, inspiring. It is the kind of a life Jesus lived, the kind of a life his chosen apostles lived and in my honest conviction, it is the life he means for us to live. For myself I can not afford to live any other. Can you? Hagerstown, Maryland.

Is the Need for the Christian College Outgrown?

By W. H. McMaster, D.D., President Mount Union College, Alliance, Ohio

(Editorial Note: The following excellent statement, previously published in the "Christian Advocate," concerning the need of the Christian College by the head of one of Ashland's neighboring colleges is a good introduction to the approaching appeal in behalf of our own church school. When, in addition to what Dr. McMaster says, it is realized that the very life of our church is bound up with the life of our college, the urgency of our adequate support of it becomes the more apparent. We are frank in stating that the aim of our higher educational institution ought to be, and is, not merely to promote Christian education in general, but to give to education, so far as our young people are concerned, a distinctly Brethren viewpoint. To do this a Brethren college is imperative).

The president of one of the great State universities has said to me repeatedly that if he could have his own way he would have every one of the thousands of students going to his institution spend at least a year or two in one of the smaller Christian colleges before losing himself in the great crowds that throng the modern universities.

The more I see and read about the growth and expansion of American universities, the more I am convinced of the worth of the smaller, Christian institution that in these later years has endured the stigma "fresh-water college." I must confess at the outset to a strong personal bias which I have gained through eighteen years' experience as president of a college in one of the greatest industrial regions where Christian minded men and women are needed to keep the souls of people from becoming hard like the iron and steel they fabricate. I make no secret of the fact that this college is Mount Union, located in Alliance, Ohio, that it has a limited student enrollment of 500, and that the Methodist church exercises certain rights and privileges as to its government. We are training men and women to give a Christian content to all our life.

The purpose of the Christian college with its few hundreds differs from that of the universities whose students are numbered in tens of thousands. The work done by the two types of institutions overlaps broadly, but neither entirely covers the field of the other. Men and women are or should be educated to enable them to cooperate with the scholars and leaders of the country in the enterprises of the modern social order, and where that order is defective, to make it Christian. But a university with its ten or twenty separate colleges under its wings often shows a tendency to value the fruits of education from a materialistic point of view, putting the emphasis on practical and money-making education as compared with the older forms of intellectual discipline, moral culture, and refinement of life. The small liberal arts college is satisfied if it can fit a student not so much for a job which is only a part of life, but for life itself. In a word it is character-building—character after the mind of Christ.

Just as it was half a century ago, the small college is still the backbone of higher education in the United States. Most of our great universities grew out of the small Christian college. Will their continued usefulness be weakened, one wonders, by indefinite inflation or will the time come when they will turn and find their way back to their original religious sources? History shows that an art when it has passed its period of full development naturally tends to get back to its first essentials, to its original foundations, where it can build anew and better than it has done before.

The Field of the Liberal Arts College

The liberal arts college cannot compete nor does it care to, with the graduate, professional, and highly specialized schools of the great universities. It stands its own ground, impervious to all the winds and fancies of popular education, a check against the passions of modern times. It is without a rival in forming character through intimate personal contacts because its social life is less complex, its administrations less elaborate. Simplicity in education is as necessary as simplicity in the general mode of living. Fortunately the small institution is safe from the dangers that threaten every great seat of learning—unwieldiness and over-extension.

I am sorry to see the son of the rich man become a sort of persona non grata to education. It cannot be helped, for public opinion is set against him. No university or college will openly admit that it makes a special effort to acquire him unless he has the necessary mental qualifications. As a rule he appears in the smaller colleges infrequently because the latter institutions must concern themselves with those students to whom a modern college education is possible only when living and tuition costs are at a minimum.

"Quantity Production" in College Graduates

What can one say for the great universities that graduate one or two thousand students in a single graduation day? It reads like a paragraph from the amazing daily story of some great motor industry—so much philosophy, so much analytical chemistry, so much literature, foreign language, mathematics, physics tested by professors and instructors to fit into the complete, finished product, the educated college graduate. But somewhere the sympathetic, humanizing influences and the Christian morality that tend to regulate and govern the bright and shining human dynamo have been omitted. To me this remains the essential weakness of the great university and the strength of the Christian college.

It has been said that a dozen young men gathered in a quiet, shady place might be the kernel of an institution of the soundest learning, if only a Plato sat in their midst. But if Plato does not have a clear and sympathetic understanding of individual character, his educational methods amount to little. In a small, homogeneous student body teachers do have an unlimited opportunity to study each pupil, to correct him, personally to advise and to inspire him. Every young man and woman should be given the chance of self-expression under the best guiding influences. The purpose and end of such an education is to build character, but character without standardization. "And to produce character," said Ex-President Hadley of Yale, "education must call to her assistance religion." By religion I take it Dr. Hadley did not mean narrow sectarianism, but Christian dynamics.

In the northeastern section of Ohio half a dozen cities there within a radius of fifty miles of my college have increased their population from 20 per cent to 250 per cent, and they have done it within the last twenty years. To match this great industrial growth which is typical of other sections of the United States, we should be showing a corresponding spiritual growth. We must produce men big enough to control the material development. The church is putting forth every effort to do it, but if our educational institutions are not providing more spiritually-minded men and women to people the churches and great preachers to man the pulpits, the work cannot carry on with the zeal and the speed that are now necessary. We must educate the soul, or modern machinery will crush us.

A college that stands for the spiritual ideals of Jesus Christ as the platform of service to all men everywhere without any caste, color, or creed distinction, is the college that fits each generation with both the power and the vision to act and see straight through the befogged issues of our national life. The solution of questions of world peace, of industrial and racial discord and all social problems can be found in the simple words and precepts of the Christian Bible.

Many of our great pulpits are vacant looking for preachers big enough to fill them.

The Christian college yields to the great university the function of training the specialist. She herself is satisfied if she can touch the moral spirit of a man, if she can strengthen and confirm through liberal education the spiritual nature. From an old college catalogue I quote what seems to be to be the pith of the issue. I do not remember ever seeing it better expressed:

"The pupil's moral nature is not here regarded as only one side of his life, as a vertical or cross-section, but the entire length and breadth and depth of it; the very grain and texture of his being. Morality is not something added to the pupil: it is the pupil. So Christian ethics is not a part of the course, it is the course."

The Big "I" and Little "You" Disease

By Edythe R. Hall

Two men went up into the temple to pray; the one a Pharisee, and the other a publican. The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself, God, I thank thee, that I am not as other men are, extortioners, unjust, adulterers, or even as this publican. I fast twice in the week, I give tithes of all that I possess. And the publican standing afar off, would not lift up so much as his eyes unto heaven, but smote upon his breast, saying, God be merciful to me a sinner. Luke 18:10-13.

We have all seen something of the big "I" and little "you" character thousands of times in life.

Quite often we meet people on the street or in offices, stores, and even in our churches, who simply sway with lofty airs of self-importance and seem that the whole world belongs to them, even in republican America. These folks will look down with sneering and snarling contempt upon everything and everybody considered beneath their self-assumed dignity. We recognize at once that these people have the big "I" disease, and have had it bad.

Of course there is a difference among folks. Everyone is created equal before God and in the light of liberty and law—at least, it is supposed to be so in this country. Intellectually, socially and circumstantially, however, we all differ, as the trees, hills and rivers differ. We cannot make all men wise and good alike, cultured and refined alike, high and honorable alike; and we have no right to force any man to choose his companions or partners in business or social relationship. Naturally, "Birds of a feather flock together."

But now, let us be somewhat explicit and illustrative. Let us classify and see something of this big "I" disease.

There is the intellectual pretender. He is a dabbler in learning, and has never learned what a fool he is in the light of wisdom. He "knows it all." I read a story of a young man, who one night stood gazing into the heavens at the stars and repeated these words: "Twinkle, twinkle, little star, Know exactly what you are." The story goes on, that after this boy had grown to be old and had become an astronomer, he looked often into the heavens, and would say, "Twinkle, twinkle, little star, How I wonder what you are." Great and wise men feel little, and know nothing of the big "I" disease. The noble learned man is very helpful to others. It is said that when Webster graduated, he tore his diploma in two with the expression: "Gentlemen, you shall hear from me again." True wisdom is meek and lowly, the most simple and child-like thing in the world.

Notice the self-righteous person. "I am holier than you," and he is about as much affected with the big "I" disease as any other man in the universe. Let us illustrate by the proud Pharisee and the poor publican in the temple. The one looked down with contempt and horror upon the other and thanked God that he did so much good, and that he was not as other men were; while the other would not so much as lift his face to God, but smote upon his broken heart and said: "God be merciful to me, a sinner." Some of these holy people seem to feel that they are special pets of the Lord and look down upon us whom they consider only in the borderland of religious ignorance. Any honest upright Christian will not have the big "I" feeling and will not look down upon anyone beneath their self-assumed dignity. These folks cannot be classed in with the big "I" and little "you" crowd.

Then there is the social snob. It is usually a little money without brains, which makes the social snob. Observe the swing and swell of the body of the snob, his haughty airs, these points will tell you unmistakably that the snob is abroad. He also has profane habits that shock the morals of good people. Some of them go to church; but Mr. Big "I" doesn't recognize Mr. Little "You"; for he belongs to a "first-class church", and would be better satisfied if Mr. Little "you" would be in a "second-class church." He expects to go to heaven, I suppose; but how in the name of common sense he expects to associate with the little "you's" must puzzle his social ideas terribly. It might be safe to say, however, that he need not trouble himself upon the subject, if piety or humility or humanity in any form is to constitute one of the characteristic evidences of Christianity. He wouldn't even recognize Jesus and his Galilean fishermen at all if they should appear as they used to be in the olden times. I like dignity, self respect and refined social life, but deliver me from the galvanized and shoddy sham of the big "I" and little "you" Circle.

In conclusion, I will say that whether in heaven or hell, however, nobody will have the big "I" disease, for whatever the differences then, there will be too much business on hand whether of a happy or unpleasant nature, to be looking at our distinction. At farthest, don't let the swell-head go beyond your teens.

"Lynchless Land" Slogan Given Backset

Marked increase in mob murders during the last year was a great shock to the churches in their campaign for a lynchless land, according to a statement accompanying the Honor Roll of states free from lynching in 1926, made public recently. This is the fifth annual Honor Roll issued by the Commission on Race Relations of the Federal Council of Churches. A direct challenge to redoubled efforts to arouse public opinion against lynching, in the way church leaders sum up the situation.

"Five states formerly on the Honor Roll had to be removed this year because of the reappearance of mob murder within their borders," says the report accompanying the Honor Roll. "One of these states, New Mexico, had had a record of no lynching for a period of ten years preceding. The four other states which were free of the evil in 1925, but which lost their places on the Honor Roll because of lynchings during 1926, are Kentucky, South Carolina, Tennessee and Texas."

"The total number of states free of lynching in 1926 was 38, which was the same total as in 1925 and in 1924, and one fewer than the total number without any lynchings in 1923. The number of states in which lynchings still occurred in 1926 was 10; the same number as in 1925 and in 1924; the number having lynchings in 1923 was 9."

The list showing the states free from lynching in 1926, in classified groups over periods of years, is as follows:

"States that have NEVER had a record of a lynching: Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Vermont,	4
"Additional states that have no record of a lynching since 1886: Connecticut, Maine and New Jersey,	3
"Additional states which have no record of a lynching during the past twenty years: Delaware, Michigan, Wisconsin, Nevada,	4
"Additional states which have no record of a lynching during the past ten years: New York, North Dakota, Oregon, Pennsylvania, ...	4
"Additional states which have no record of a lynching during the past five years: Arizona, California, Colorado, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, North Carolina, Washington, West Virginia and Wyoming,	11
"Additional states which have no record of a lynching in the past two years: Oklahoma and Illinois,	2
"Additional states which have no record of a lynching during 1926: Alabama, Louisiana, Missouri, Ohio, Utah,	5
"TOTAL STATES FREE OF LYNCHING IN 1926, ...	38
"TOTAL STATES STILL HAVING LYNCHING IN 1926,	10

God's First Call to Man

By G. L. Maus

Taking as his subject, "God's First Call to Man" and using the words in Genesis 3:9 "Adam Where Art Thou?" the pastor held the audience's attention for the greater part of an hour. This clarion call was first sounded in the garden of Eden and Jehovah was talking to our first parent, Adam. While this summons was personally addressed to Adam it also stands for the whole race today. No one is excused, no one exempted. The call is just as direct to you today as it was to Moses, David, James, Peter, Paul, etc.

This question should come to you during your busy hours, "Adam Where Art Thou?" Where Art Thou Hiding in the material things of this world? Where Art thou in the Spiritual World? From what great heights hast thou been hurled, to what degradation and sin hast thou fallen? What dark cloud has arisen? What awful sense of condemnation hast befallen thee? This call comes first through Revelation as it came to Noah. Abraham and all the greater and lesser prophets through Christ and the Apostles. It may come through suffering and death. Do you believe in the Bible? Do you leave it unread? Do you accept it as Divine authority? The call may come through the church where the word of the Lord is expounded, the table of the Lord is spread with song and prayer, or do you forsake the house of God lest you should hear this voice? Some people ask to be excused, not well enough dressed to attend church, too far away. These excuses will not hold.

Again he calls through your conscience. You have a faculty in your mind that sits in judgment on your every action enabling you to discern between right and wrong. A faculty that recognizes God and convinces you that you will have to stand before him some day. These calls sometimes come through the evidence of Providence. The Bible may be left unread, the church may be forsaken and the warnings of the conscience stifled. Have you been prosperous? Have you had the power to make money? Did you ever stop to think that these are gifts of the Divine Providence? Adam began to make excuses. Hear the old coward say, "I was afraid, I was naked. I hid myself. The woman thou gavest me to be with me she did this." Instead of humbling himself, and being penitent for his wickedness, how like men of today he tried to make excuses. Why was he afraid? Because he disobeyed God and ate of the forbidden fruit. He endeavors to hide himself amongst the trees of the Garden but the trees are not large enough. Some try to hide behind trees of Rationalism, some behind Theological traditions, feeble and indistinct belief, poor hiding places indeed. The only safe refuge for man is Christ Jesus. God has a habit of pursuing transgressors. He pursued Adam, Jonah and David. Adam had to answer and so will you. The sooner attention is given to the matter, the better. Where Art Thou? is an inquiry addressed to you. Are you in the Kingdom of Heaven? In the Sunshine of God's Presence, traveling a straight and narrow path that leads to Life Everlasting? Where do you stand on the questions of God, the Bible and the Church? Have you been saved by the blood of Christ? To you Christian people, Where Art Thou? You know the truth, do you live it? do you practice what you preach? "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." One of the greatest powers for the conversion of a man is a living Christian. If Christ is precious to you, do not let your companions know it? Do you let your light so shine that your comrades and associates may know just where you stand? In closing, I plead with you, Take Heed how you hear the voice of God, hear it humbly for it is God that speaks. Disobedience to this voice was what caused Adam to lose Paradise, made Cain a vagabond and a wanderer. It was obedience to this voice that saved Noah and his family, that made Moses one of the greatest patriarchs of old. Where Art Thou? Oh that I could ask this question as a servant of the Most High God. That I could ring it out with silver bells, that speak in tones of thunder. That I could write it on the walls of your heart. That I could hold it before you in your daily walks. Where Art Thou? Can you answer?

Peru, Indiana.

DARKNESS GIVING SELF-KNOWLEDGE

Closely related to this is another familiar truth, that it is often in the darkness of affliction that God reveals to men those higher reaches of their own minds and souls which result in great achievement.

Isaiah's experience in this particular is typical. "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw the Lord,"—and the vision which he then proceeds to relate embodies his call to a life of service, through which he became great. And like him, many a man has achieved greatness because of the vision revealed in darkness.

Beethoven's immortal music, for instance, was born out of the tragedy of his deafness. Through that affliction he became the very incarnation of all the finest in music. The bitterness of his tragedy is reflected in his last words: "I shall hear in heaven."

Milton's ode, "On His Blindness," is the shout of victory of one who has triumphed over his own impatience and complaining against bitter affliction. This and his other great works are the fruits of the visions caught by him in his dark, dark valley of blindness.

Tennyson would not be Tennyson to us but for "In Memoriam" and "Crossing the Bar," those great well-springs of hope for all who grieve or doubt. But these two great masterpieces would not have been given to us had not Tennyson been plunged into the valley of grief by the death of his dearest friend.—Carl H. Wilhelm, in Homiletic Review.

It takes grace sandwiched with grit to make any headway in the Christian life.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

Christ's Appeal to Youth

By Vera E. Laughlin

OUR SCRIPTURE

Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Whereupon take unto the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word

MONDAY

JESUS THE WAY TO GOD—John 14:1-15. "I am the way, the truth and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but by me." Many centuries of fruitless searching after God by many and devious ways, has proven the truth of the statement that there is no possible approach to the Father except through the incarnate Son. And why should one desire another way; this is a joyous way, lighted by truth and ends in eternal life!

TUESDAY

THE COMFORTER PROMISED—John 14:16-24. "And I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever." What a promise is here set forth! The consciousness of the divine presence may be the joyous possession of every child of God, if we but claim the promise.

WEDNESDAY

JESUS THE TRUE VINE—John 15:1-10. "I am the vine, and my Father is the husbandman. . . ye are the branches." How intimate the relation and vital the contact! Thus identified with the Lord we have life and are enabled to bear fruit, if so be that we abide in him.

THURSDAY

THE SPIRIT OF TRUTH—John 16:1-14. "Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth." And we need that guidance, not merely in the discovery of hitherto undiscovered truth, but in the possession of the spirit of truth in our lives.

FRIDAY

CHRIST PRAYS FOR DISCIPLES—John 17:9-19. "I pray for them, . . . which thou hast given me;" And that prayer was effective; they were all kept in the love of God, "save the son of perdition." How could it have been otherwise with the Lord Jesus praying for them? What an example of intercession!

SATURDAY

CHRIST PRAYS FOR ALL BELIEVERS—John 17:20-26. "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." How inspiring to know that Jesus prays for us! That should serve every one to his noblest living and most faithful service.

SUNDAY

COMFORTING PROMISES—Isa. 40:1-8. "Her warfare is accomplished, . . . her iniquity is pardoned." The end of the sin-struggle is foreseen and the glory of the Lord is to be revealed in the moral as well as in the material world. And we are living in the Gospel age when the realization of such an ideal is possible! It depends on you and me.—G. S. B.

God: Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints (Eph. 6:10-18).

OUR MEDITATION

Every youth and in fact everyone loves to follow one whom they recognize as more capable and worthy than themselves. Then why is it that there are those who say Christ's standard is so far beyond us that we cannot attain?

Just what characteristics do we require, demand and admire in one whom we choose to lead us in any enterprize? Surely we are doubly interested in Christ our guide, protector and Redeemer.

Let us consider a few of the characteristics of our Master. As an executive he is unexcelled. When his disciples were filled with wrath because a night's lodging was refused their Master, Jesus said not a word. He did not argue. Sometimes nothing a man can say is nearly so powerful as saying nothing. And to argue lowers you to the level of those with whom you argue.

The statement is sometimes made, that Christ knew everything that was to occur in his life from the beginning. That his three years of public work had no real problems. What interest is there in such a life? What inspiration?

He was, on his human side, a poor boy growing up in a peasant home, working in a carpenter shop, gradually feeling his powers increase, suffering doubts and disappointments and finally death which was only a beginning of his influence. His humanity was not make-believe. Jesus was tempted in the wilderness forty days. How did he meet his temptation? "You are hungry: Here are stones, make them into bread." Does he falter? He answers, "Thou shalt not live by bread alone." Again taking him into a high mountain and saying, "All these can be yours if you will only worship me." "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God and him only shalt thou serve." His temptation was real and he conquered.

How did this country boy become the greatest leader? He had the voice and manner of the leader, the personal magnetism which demands loyalty and commands respect. John felt this when Jesus came to be baptized. "I have need to be baptized of thee," said John, "and comest thou to me?" Personal magnetism is a determined faith in the importance of the work one has to do. Emerson said, "What you are thunders so loud I can't hear what you say." By the power of his faith in his mission and in himself he commands and men instinctively obey. The second element in his success was his power to pick men and to recognize hidden capacities in them. Look at his disciples! A group of fishermen, and some business men and Matthew a tax-collector—member of a most hated class. In Matthew the people saw nothing more than a despised tax collector. Christ saw the writer of a book. Zacchaeus was seen by the people as a dishonest Jew. Jesus saw a man of justice and generosity.

Compare the executive ability of Elijah, Samson and John the Baptist with Christ. They could denounce and call men to righteousness, but could provide no constructive policy or training to carry on their work that would compare with Christ's. He had only twelve, untrained, simple men. Yet he was able, because of his personal conviction, his ability to recognize hidden capacities, and his faith and patience, to organize them to carry on the work he had started.

Christ also appeals greatly to us because he loves the "Out of Doors." Surely the painters are misleading when they picture to us a frail man, under-muscled, and a soft face, and as one who would welcome death as a release from the problem of living.

Christ is living, vital, strong. Could less than a person with strong personality and character call out twelve men for service; and create health in others? He is the type of out-door man we admire. From the different parts of the Bible we learn that he frequented the shores of the lakes, cool recesses of the hills, and the Mount of Olives. His nerves were like steel. He knew they would kill him, yet such courage, calm and cheerfulness as he possessed! Read again the story of his trial and crucifixion. Silent, self-possessed, accused and doomed, yet bearing himself with majesty! Pilate gives us a suggestion of the perfect strength, assurance and calmness that characterized Jesus when he said, "Behold the man!"

Christ is also a sociable man. We find him at the wedding feast of Cana of Galilee. Nicodemus, member of the Sanhedrin, a Roman Centurian and Joseph of Arimathea, were his associates among the socially elite. The rest of his circle was composed of Pharisees, fishermen, merchants and tax collectors, both cultured and sinful women, soldiers, lawyers, beggars, lepers, publicans and sinners.

Jesus is a wonderful friend, a kindly indulgent, yet strong and uplifting.

"My joy (or peace) I leave with you."

"Be of good cheer."

Remember him by the words of joy and cheer he spoke.

The daring program of our leader, the Christ, is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to the whole creation."

Moses said "There is one God."

"God is a God of justice," added Amos.

"God is a good God," said Hosea. What was there for Jesus to add? He invites humanity to look at God face to face and claim the Lord of Creation as Father. How will he accomplish his aim? What are his methods?

When Christ talked with people he chose a subject in which they were interested personally. For example, the story of the fishermen to fishers, and to the farmer, "a sower went forth to sow and when he sowed some seeds fell by the wayside and the fowls came and devoured them up." Were they interested? Each of his Parables point out the keen knowledge of human nature and of the laws of interest.

The power of Christ's voice lived on; it withstood prison, shipwreck, storm, loss of friends and the roar of lions and flames. James, John, Andrew, Simon Peter and Paul were martyrs. Their death was the seed of the church. The Master had trained well.

The parables of Christ were his advertisements. In these he gives points of wisdom to modern business. In every way he shows up big. How little we know of our Christ! Let us read again the story of his life among men, recognizing him as our Master in all things.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Father in Heaven, thou knowest us better than we know ourselves. We beseech thee to be our help. May we have created within us an earnest desire to know thee through the living Christ.

Grant that thy children may grow into the fulness of Christ; through him who died, and rose again for us all, the same Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Greencastle, Pennsylvania.

The trouble is that you and I are looking for the great giants in the way, and we neglect the little things; and it is the little things that cause us trouble when it comes to keeping our minds and hearts stayed on the Lord Jesus Christ.—Melvin E. Trotter.

Lesson Poem

One Body all, joined to one living Head;
By one will guided and by one blood fed.
Yet many we, united in one frame,
Whose members are in function not the same.

So in essentials, let there ever be
A bond of vital, holy sympathy;
In non-essentials granting liberty,
In all things cultivating charity.

Introduction

Luke the author of the Book of Acts, now introduces the long-promised calling of Gentiles into the Christian church. Cornelius, a God-fearing Italian centurion lived at Caesarea, a noted seaport of Palestine on the Mediterranean. It was about 30 miles north of Joppa where Peter was stopping. In the Hebrew, Joppa was Japho, now Jaffa, an ancient town on the coast, about 15 hours' horseback ride to the northwest of Jerusalem. Its harbor was celebrated in olden times. Jos. 19:46. Its present situation is one of much beauty and affords fine views. A traveler in 1886, Warburton, describes it thus: "The morning dawned on a long, low, sandy shore terminated by a small promontory, on which stood Jaffa among its green gardens, looking cool, pleasant and welcoming, contrasted with the surrounding desert and the foaming sea. Its harbor is a miserable little enclosure of rocks, which breaks the force of the mediterranean waves, and just enables one to disembark. The town is a labyrinth of khans, convents, narrow lanes, deserted ruins and waste places, with a few dingy streets leading from one wretched quarter to another. In the evening I went out to enjoy the cool breeze upon the housetop, and, looking over the flat-roofed city, saw its various surfaces all alive, and sprinkled with gaily-dressed Syrians. The superior of the convent sat with me for some time, and professed to point out the housetop whereon Peter prayed and saw the great vision of tolerance. The town looked much better this morning; the bazaars and markets seemed full of business, and looked very gay with Syrian silks and shining arms, and a profusion of fruit, flowers, and vegetables."—The Illustrator.

"The Common and Unclean"

It is not Peter's Jewish prejudice alone that is at fault, in addition to that there is the natural tendency to look down upon those who appear to be of a lower social class. We have not gotten away from that human trait, we are still at it. The sooner we learn that all men are brothers,—that the trouble and the sin of one man, or one nation, affects all the others,—the sooner shall we become an integral part of the kingdom of heaven.

"Let us prize the common and unclean so much that we never think of them in that light. A minister in a certain neighborhood used solemnly to warn his people against all such wicked persons as Moody and Sankey, and the like, because they were the means of saving the lowest orders. Oh, the cruelty of respectability!" A conservative minister was once asked how he liked the Salvation Army. He answered, "I don't like them at all; but God likes them, and we must endure them."

"We think that God's election is a narrow thing. We have forgotten the sweep and scope and embrace of the gospel. We have forgotten that there is One whose arms are long enough and whose heart is big enough to draw us all into his embrace and keep us there forever and forever."

"We are told of Job,—No Jew, but an Arabian emir,—who wrestled with God as Jacob did, and strove to know the shrouded Name, and hoped to find that it was Love. We find Naaman the Syrian, and Nebuchadnezzar the Babylonian, under the providential and loving discipline of God. Rahab the Gentile is saved by faith. The Syro-Phoenician woman by her sick daughter's bedside recognizes without human assistance the sublime and consoling truth of a universal Father's love in the midst of apparent partiality. The 'Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world had not left them in darkness.'"

Substance of the Christian Testimony

"Between the 38th and the 43d verses of this tenth chapter of Acts, it seems to me that we have a compendious summary of the essence of each of the four Gospels. 'God anointed him with the Holy Spirit and with power: he healed all that were oppressed of the devil.' Is not that a summary of St. Luke? 'He went about doing good.' Is not that the vivid practical touch of St. Mark's Gospel? 'God was with him.' Is not that a compression of St. John's highest thought? 'To him bear all the prophets witness.' Is not that an abridgement of the substance of St. Matthew?"

"According to St. Peter the essence of the gospel is the supernatural character of Jesus Christ, his miraculous powers, his authority to forgive sins, his commission to judge the quick and the dead. To be a Christian, a man must regard our Lord as having exerted in the past the power and influence which the Gospels record, as exercising a similar influence in the present, and as destined to exercise it with infinite majesty and might in the future."—The Illustrated Quarterly.

Was That Somebody You?

*Somebody made a monthly pledge,
Testing his purse to utmost edge;
Somebody paid it through the year
Brightening the world with Christian cheer.
Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody handed cheerfully in Money to help God's cause to win;
Somebody kept his promise to pay,
Writing his check on schedule day.
Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody let the year slip by Heedless of payments piling high.
Somebody said: "No more delay; Quickly I'll settle that debt today."
Was that somebody you?*

*Somebody's pledge was only a scrap,
Paper that had no value, mayhap;
Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small;
Failing, he grieved the Lord of all.
Was that somebody you?*

Church School News

By J. A. Garber

Throughout the year we have called attention to the importance of keeping church records accurately and completely. This should be done for the sake of the local school itself and also for the sake of other schools with which the local school is associated.

Statistics

Some weeks ago we sent to every superintendent of our brotherhood the statistical report blank with which he was asked to report the status and progress of his school. Within the first week thereafter Bryan, Ohio and Tiosa, Indiana had their reports in our office. Had other superintendents done half as well, we could now be compiling the general statistical report for General Conference. Unless you superintendents send in your report at an early date the general report will be incomplete again this year. Who will make it so by his neglect?

Standard of Excellence

Superintendent A. B. Cober of Berlin,

Pennsylvania, not only sent in his statistical report with promptness, but included the blank on which to report the school's attainment on the Standard of Excellence. Significantly enough the Berlin school has attained one hundred points on the Standard. This attainment will entitle them to a good Sunday school book as a reward in the recognition service at Winona. Schools should report their standing on the Standard so we can have everything in readiness for a real recognition service. Come on, superintendents, and let us have the report blank which was sent you early in the year.

Educational Day

The June Educator contains much helpful material with reference to the observance of Educational Day which is scheduled for June 12th. This number of the magazine announces with more detail the Young People's Summer Camp that is to be held at Shipshewana, July 17-24. Prospects are good for a large attendance and a helpful week of fellowship and training.

Eternal Elevation through Education

By Herbert H. Rowsey

This is a day of education and specialization. Never before in the world's history has there been such a demand for trained intellects, but events of recent years have conclusively proven to us that the training of the intellect is not enough. American colleges and universities in their programs of "elevation through education" have produced youth that are intellectually beyond comparison. Yet those same youth have committed crimes unspeakably inhuman and cruel, the result being that they have been declared "morally insane." Others among these youthful intellectual giants have snuffed out their own lives in order to get the "thrill" of passing out through the portals of death. Others have taken their lives because "life was devoid of meaning to them." There is certainly no elevation to an education that presents a "life devoid of meaning." The above words recall only a few instances, but there are many things in both ancient and modern times to prove that secular education alone is and always has been a failure.

Education that really elevates must be of the whole man—physical, intellectual, spiritual. In too many cases today the spiritual or religious element has been excluded. Several years ago President Hadley of Yale said, "I do not believe you are going to make the right kind of citizen by a godless education, and then adding in religion afterward. The idea is wrong. Education and religion must go hand in hand." "Educated men without religion," said the Duke of Wellington, "and you make of them but clever devils." As Christians we believe that this earth-life is but a minute segment of the life of the soul. If we really believe this, should we not take our educational work at a school where the soul-life as well as the earth-life is encouraged and strengthened? In such schools we receive an eternal elevation through education.

Ashland College is one of these schools. I am not trying to leave the impression that all who attend Ashland receive this "eternal elevation." Some persons would not receive it regardless of where they went or what they did. But I do want to emphasize the fact that Ashland College is remarkably free from all that would hinder or harm the spiritual life. And the young man or young woman who goes there, with the definite purpose of learning more about the things that are unseen, as well as the things that are seen; who purposes to receive spiritual development as well as intellectual and physical, will certainly find many things to strengthen that purpose and aid in accomplishing it. Such persons will receive preparation not only for earning a living but also for living a life and safeguarding a soul. Brethren Young People should certainly consider Ashland advantages before definitely deciding where their college career shall be spent. All young people should carefully consider the eternal advantages in educational work at a Christian college before attending elsewhere.

Parents, the greatest gift in your power to give to your son or daughter is a Christian education. It is the one indestructible heritage. It will broaden the vision, elevate the purpose, increase the efficiency, enlarge the usefulness and multiply the joys of life. Yes, he who helps anyone in securing a Christian Education is helping that person in preparation not only for this life but also for that everlasting eternal life with God. Such preparation can truly and appropriately be termed eternal elevation through education.

Without a care or fret.*

She does not know distress,
But all God's beauty she now takes
And makes her a new dress.*

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for May 29)

A Missionary Sleigh-ride in Alaska Isaiah 42:5-10

Jimmy's father and mother were missionaries to Alaska. When they came home a year or so ago Jimmy said to them, "Please take me back with you to Alaska the next time you go. If you will I will promise to work very, very hard and make all the school work that I miss."

Father and mother talked it over and they decided that they would take Jimmy along. They had a nice trip to Alaska, but Jimmy thought the most interesting thing of all was their first missionary journey after they got there. Jimmy's father and mother live in a house in a little town on the coast of Alaska. Their house is a good bit like yours or mine, but when they go on their trips they see all kinds of houses.

"Put on the warmest clothes you have, Jimmy," said father one day. "We are going on a long trip."

It didn't take Jimmy long to get dressed. He was soon all wrapped up in sweater and coat and the warmest clothes he had. Then he went outside of the house to watch his father get the team ready. First the sled was brought. It was not a very big sled. Instead it was built real low. Jimmy had thought that they might go in a sleigh, but this looked too much like a sled to be called a sleigh. Heavy robes and blankets were put in the sled and spread out so that no air could come in from the sides or back. Next dad brought the dogs to pull the sleds. They were not the biggest dogs that Jimmy had ever seen, but Jimmy thought that they must be some of the best dogs that ever were if they were able to pull that sled with three people on it. Soon the dogs were all hitched up and the team was ready for its part of the trip. Mother came out in her big fur coat and daddy got into his biggest warm skin coat. Jimmy began to wonder if they were going to take him without giving him a coat too to keep him warm. Just when he had decided that he was supposed to freeze on the trip, he saw his father bringing another fur coat out of the house, and soon he was wrapped in a coat of his mothers.

They got on the sled which was not so very comfortable. There were no cushioned seats as there are in automobiles. The seats were hard boards with hard board backs to lean back against.

As they were starting out Jimmy said, "I think that it is nice to have a big fur coat like this. Doesn't it cost a lot to buy these big coats?" He was told that up here where there are so many animals, coats are easy to get and not so expensive.

Soon they had reached the first home that they were to visit. It was a poorly built house, but inside it was fairly warm. All the cracks were filled and there were lots of skins hung about the walls to keep the cold air from coming through. They sang some songs. Daddy read some verses from the Bible and mother talked to the children. They did not stay long.

When they were in the sled again Jimmy said, "I thought that we would find the people living in snow houses. I have read about them living in snow houses."

"The snow houses are in the very coldest part of Alaska, and there are not very many of them any more," said dad. "Maybe we can go far enough sometime to see some."

They visited a number of places and then started for home.

One day dad said, "I have received a call to go on a long trip inland. I think that the people where I am going live in snow houses, Jimmy. It will be a hard, cold trip, but if you want to go I will take you with me."

Jimmy liked that trip. They came, after many days of traveling, to a whole string of houses. They were made of blocks of ice, just as Jimmy had hoped that they would be. Inside there were more skins than Jimmy had ever seen. The walrus is very important to those people who live in snow houses. They use his skin in their houses, his meat to eat and his fat to make light and heat.

When their visit was over and they were ready to go home, Jimmy said to his dad, "I am going home and finish school as soon as I can, then I am coming back and we will go together to as many of these people as we can. We'll teach them about Jesus and we'll teach them to live as we do and keep themselves and their houses clean."

Excerpts from African Mission Correspondence

By Dr. Florence N. Gribble

42 Rue Pierre Nicole Paris, V me.
 France, April 27, 1927..

Dear Evangelist Readers: It is a pleasure to write to you once more since receiving the February letters from Bassai.

These letters were written at the time of the quarterly conference there, those present being the Bassai staff augmented by Mr. and Mrs. Hathaway from Yaloke, from whose letters we glean the following Yaloke and other news: "Miss Emmert opened the school again after her six weeks' vacation, and this time in the new school building. She expected to have from fifty to seventy-five pupils this time. We praise God for the new hope this gives us of trained evangelists."

Mrs. Hathaway writes, "We left Yaloke, February 3rd and arrived here the 5th. Had a good trip coming as far as the Ouahm by auto. Left Yaloke at 6 A. M., stopped at Yimbili for lunch and reached the Ouahm before 3 o'clock. There is a nice rest house there now and a shed to shelter the Ford. They are now working on the auto barge and hope to have it completed in June. By the time you come no doubt you can come all the way to Bassai by auto. Am so glad the Lord has opened up the way for your auto and know it will be a great blessing."

"We are having our week of prayer and conference and are enjoying it so much. We have four sessions each day—6 A. M., 9 A. M., 3 P. M., and 7:30 P. M. Two sessions are devoted to prayer, one to Bible Study, and one to sermons. From here we are going to Bossangoa for two weeks, returning to Yaloke about March 1st. All here are in excellent health, except Miss Bickel, who is suffering somewhat..."

Two weeks later Mrs. Hathaway writes from Bossangoa, "Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon are both looking and feeling fine. We take our meals with them, but sleep in the rest house at Kewane, about 15 minutes' walk from their house. On our way over here in the auto we stopped and Mr. Hathaway shot three deer. We feasted on venison Sunday. Morgou (the native hunter has killed guinea deer, "Moune and buffalo, so you can see we do not suffer for want of meat. One can also get all the fish one wants in the river, back of the concession. The ground is also ideal for gardens. Such wonderful beds of lettuce and beets! I had thought it impossible to raise such lettuce in Africa. The garden is close to the river and being low ground doubtless receives moisture from the river. The foundation of the house is completed, and the veranda poles are up and painted. The grass is gathered for the roof. There is enough screening to screen the whole house, so it will be just as free from mosquitoes as a permanent house. With goats, chickens and ducks, they have all the milk and eggs they can use. The place here will be very beautiful when the station is built up. The front spring of the auto broke today on the way to Bossangoa. These roads are so bumpy that they are very hard on the springs."

"Junior" is so fat and lively. How wonderfully God is caring for him day by day. Brother Kennedy is busy finishing the hospital and making brick for the school. As yet we have not received permission for teaching, but are praying God that it may soon be granted.

"Miss Myers and Miss Bickel expect to leave for Carnot to do some itinerating. They also will itinerate in Karre land. Mr. Jobson and I have recently been out a week in the distant villages. Last Sunday we had our love feast with 223 present. We are having a great deal of fruit here. The pineapples are especially good."

Mrs. Kennedy writes, "Mr. Kennedy hopes later to take an itinerating trip of several weeks. Sorry I cannot go with him. The baby is doing so well, has never had temperature over 100 degrees. He is gaining continually, weighs almost eighteen pounds. He is as happy and good as he can be, sleeping all night long from 7:30 P. M. to 5 A. M., since he was one month old. We praise God for all. Lester Junior is very fond of the natives and has a smile for every one."

Miss Myers writes under date of February 20th: "The second building of the dispensary is nearly completed." Speaking of the baby she says, "Lester Junior is so cute. He goes to church, likes the men much better than the women. He tries to stand although only seven months old. Brother Jobson is very fond of him. Lester likes him to take him out walking." Speaking of the chief, she says, "He is acting much better. Comes often now to see us. Brother Kennedy helped him to build a nice house for himself. We hope he will be our friend instead of our enemy." Of the leper asylum, "How much we need it! New cases breaking out constantly. The necessity of isolation, and the difficulty of diagnosis, because of a prevailing similar disease, make it a burden for prayer." Burdens for prayer indeed! Let us pray for our stations more and more.

Under the Southern Cross

Since writing two weeks ago I have visited our missions in Buenos Aires and Laboulaye.

In Buenos Aires we have rented a nice room just a square from the lot where we hope to build, and have arranged that Brother Adolfo Zeche go to the seminary and care for the work for this year.

Brother Anton has been a faithful, self-sacrificing worker, but the Council felt that a change would be good, especially since it will mean a considerable saving. As soon as possible a strong North American worker should be located in Buenos Aires, not only to care for our mission, but also to help to train workers there and to represent the denomination in the different interdenominational meetings.

We are thoroughly convinced also that it would be a very great economy to erect our own building on the lot which we already have. It would not only economize the rent, which is far more than the interest would be on the money required to build, but would also permit a much larger influence for the mission and a much more rapid growth for the amount of work expended.

Brother Anton is now selling Bibles. He has an opening to establish a mission in Alsina, the district where he is now living with his wife's people, but would like to visit the towns along the Midland railway in colportage work, as there is no mission in any of them and he has already had calls from several of them where there are people interested.

In Laboulaye there is an awakening. I baptized seven more converts and as many more are about ready. We celebrated the Lord's Supper with sixteen communicants. It was the first time for nearly all of them and made such an impression on the sisters that during the footwashing they all broke down and cried and kissed each other. It was a happy occasion. It took four years to bring this field to the harvest time, but it looks as if it will now have a rapid growth.

My visit coincided with the anniversary of the arrest and persecution of Brother Perez. He was just a poor farm hand when he began to acquire fame for his success in treating the sick. Now people come from long distances, sometimes hundreds of miles. He prescribes no drugs and recommends only simple home remedies and makes no charges, but teaches the people to pray. A year ago he was arrested on a false charge, brutally treated, kept for four days in a little cell not large enough to lie down in, and for nine days without being allowed to communicate with his family or friends. Finally Brother Istueta succeeded in having him brought to Rio Cuarto for trial.

The accusing lawyer had a slanderous article published in the daily papers here, to which I replied. The judge here released him and he went back to Laboulaye and invited the people to meetings in his house. These filled the house to overflowing and a branch Sunday school was added. We now have two Sunday schools in Laboulaye with an attendance of over 70 in each, and both are growing.

In addition a man in Rio Cuarto who read my articles in the papers became interested, came to church and was converted. His wife also has been baptized, and we have a branch Sunday school in his home.

In Laboulaye Brother Perez is about to make changes in his house which will double the size of the room for meetings. He donated an auto to Brother Istueta for the work and goes with him three days each week to the neighboring towns, and pays all the expenses. As a result we have promising groups of believers in a number of towns of the district.

On the other hand a most remarkable series of calamities have overtaken the persecutors of Brother Perez. The policeman who arrested him had his hand shot off by a criminal not long after. The commissary who brought him to Rio Cuarto was murdered by another criminal. The judge who kept him in jail illegally in Laboulaye, died soon after, and the lawyer who did his best to ruin him and get for him a long term in the penitentiary, was murdered in a brothel in Laboulaye on the anniversary of his arrest, and was brought to Rio Cuarto for burial.

Meanwhile Brother and Sister Perez and family have greatly developed spiritually and are greatly used of the Lord.

This week I am to visit Alejandro and Gallini.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Ft. Wayne and Dutchtown, Indiana, Boost Endowment

Ft. Wayne, Indiana

This is a newborn church, being one of our latest churches, just a little over one year old.

Brother J. L. Kimmel, one of our most successful workers, in building up churches is the pastor.

I was surprised and pleased with the splendid progress that has been made here in such a short time.

The locatoin is well chosen in an un-churched section. The building is modern, built in good taste, with every convenience.

Brother Kimmel, with only a few to begin with, has gathered and received into the church sixty members, made up of a fine class of people with ability. The mission boards should feel encouraged over the growth of this work and the promising future before it.

Although heavily burdened financially in the erection of a new building, and helping to support the work, they gave out of interest and love for the College $250.00.

Dutchtown Church

This church is located only a few miles from Warsaw in the country.

The work until recently had gone back and only occasionally had preaching service. Since Brother Flora took it over with his other charge at New Paris, they have gone forward in an encouraging manner.

Brother Flora held a remarkable meeting there this spring that stirred the community, and doubled the membership, and put new life and hope into the work.

There is no reason why we should not maintain a good work here, as it is a thickly settled community and has need of a church.

It was a pleasure to be associated with Brother Flora again, who aided me in visiting the membership, many of whom had recently been received into the church, and were not established and acquainted with the church enough to urge the need of the College upon them.

I received from them for the Endowment, $176.00.
W. S. BELL.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

Events have moved so rapidly here during the last two weeks that I have not been able to keep up with them. As Commencement time approaches, college events become more numerous. The calendar was printed last week in the Evangelist.

We have had six intercollegiate debates. Two with the University of Akron, two with Baldwin-Wallace men's teams, and two between the two girls' teams. No judges were engaged but Ashland certainly shone. All of the debates were double, while one team debated one side of the question here, one also debated the opposite side at the other contesting school.

The Girls' Glee Club had a very enjoyable trip through Pennsylvania. The Boys' Glee Club reports a fine time while in Indiana. They have several local dates and are doing well.

President George Zook of Akron, University, will give the Commencement address and Professor McClain will preach the Baccalaureate sermon.

There will be 38 long course graduates and 15 short course graduates. There are also several who will finish the diploma course in Music.

The Baseball team has been going well, having defeated Kent State Normal, Wilberforce, and Kenyon. Lost to Wooster.

Dean Miller is spending the week end with the Johnstown church.

Dr. Bell as you know, is working away in Indiana, and we are pleased and hopeful here. We need so much to get the very best possible results in this campaign.

The gymnasium is progressing and will be a great credit to the school when it is finished. The Campus is very beautiful at this season of the year and I hope that General Conference may be here in the near future so as to see it and get the use of the new gymnasium.

Professor DeLozier will spend the summer in France, studying there.

All-College day, formerly May Day, will be held the second of June. Everybody is invited. Also note on the calendar the time for the Alumni Banquet.

Since I last wrote the College notes, my father who had been blind more more than 25 years, and who had been living with me for the past 11 years, passed away at the advanced age of 83. I miss him, but have no regrets, as his life was right. He was at the historic Dayton convention, which I can barely remember.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

The Conemaugh Brethren have been a busy people this season and would like to report some of their activities to the readers of the Evangelist. We had services every evening the week preceding Easter Sunday, at which our pastor, the Rev. Austin Staley, emphasized the missionary spirit with gratifying results in our Easter offering. We had a "Sunrise" prayer meeting on Easter morning with so large an attendance that our pastor preached a sermon to us on the resurrection. Then at 9:30 Sunday school, and at 10:45 another sermon by the pastor; and in the evening a splendid cantata was rendered by the choir, under the able leadership of Director Searle. All the different auxiliaries of the church are alive and active. The prayer meeting, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, W. M. S. and S. M. M. show a good average attendance, and the prospects are good for additions to all of these, and to the church. The ninth district of Cambria County held their annual convention, in our church on April 24, afternoon and evening. All five of the Protestant churches in town were represented. We listened to four excellent lectures, two of them from returned missoinaries, special music from a large choir chosen from the different churches. Good reports and fine fellowship prevailed. Next, on April 26 we had the Girls' Glee Club of Ashland College. We are proud of a college that can send out a group of girls like that. The charm and harmony of the music they gave us, proved their excellent training.

"Honor to whom honor is due" to the College and to Mrs. Lily Mohn Nadelin. Now, I must stop or the waste basket will catch me. I am just one step ahead of it now.

Corresponding Secretary.

GLENDAL, CALIFORNIA

To the Evangelist Family:

We thought you might be interested in knowing about a short meeting held by the writer with the Fillmore, California Brethren one week before Easter. We began under adverse circumstances for the rainy season was still on; it turned cool and hailed and rained and thundered some, which it seldom does here in California. This held up for three days and folks in California do not like to go out when it rains, but we went on preaching and praying each evening and the people had a mind to work. This was my first opportunity to work with our young Brother Ogden, who came over to us from the Old church not so long ago. We found him a loyal Brethren, loving the old Book and a premillennialist and apt to teach.

The devil of course always gets busy when God's Word is preached and the cross of Christ upheld, and many hardened their hearts against the word of the Lord. But when the resurrection morning came around many came out to Sunday school when a fine program was rendered. At the close I gave an object lessons and an invitation and 15 children came forward and a fine missionary offering was given.

A big dinner was served in the basement of the church at noon. Many lingered around the church all afternoon and at night a good crowd came again, and when the invitation was given 5 more came out making a total of 20 for the one week.

So everybody was rejoicing over the victory. Praise the name of the Lord.

The weather is fine and beautiful; flowers are everywhere.

Yours in the blessed hope,
S. LOWMAN,

P. S.—I will be open to a call to some pastorate about May 1st in Ohio, Indiana or Virginia. Address me at above.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Since the editor has called for a report from this place I want to comply with his request.

The work in Fort Wayne is going forward, not as rapidly as we would like to see, and yet we are making progress as the weeks and months pass by. On the evening of March 24th we had a very successful banquet in the church. Eighty persons surrounded the tables and enjoyed the feast prepared by the W. M. S. for the occasion.

Professor J. Raymond Schutz, pastor of the First Brethren church of North Manchester, Indiana, and professor in the North Manchester College, gave us his great lecture on Europe.

In behalf of the church at Fort Wayne, I want to thank Brother Schutz for this great favor.

On March 27th we began a short revival meeting and continued for two weeks Brother E. M. Riddle of Bryan, Ohio, preached for us during the week—but returned home to fill his own pulpit on Sunday. This was a real successful meeting—when we remember that it is not more than eight months since the church was dedicated and still less since the church was organized.

This meeting gave us a splendid opportunity to advertise, one thing which we had not done to any extent, since the church was built. We had two thousand cards printed and distributed them through the part of the city in which the church was located. This brought good results, and new faces could be seen at almost every service.

Brother Riddle preached good sermons and made many friends. He is a very fine Christian gentleman and leaves a good influence wherever he goes. He brought his car and we used it every day to find those in the city who had not yet identified themselves with the church. We had the field pretty well gleaned before the meeting began, nevertheless we had six additions to the church, two by baptism and four by letter.

One of our number, Sister Layman, a very good woman, not long since passed away, still we have now sixty members on the roll.

We just recently began to get outsiders interested in our church. Slowly but surely we are beginning to extend our influence as a church beyond our own borders, and the prospects are just now encouraging along that line.

Sunday morning I preached on footwashing and had people in the audience who never were inside of a Brethren church before.

Sunday evening we had a very spiritual communion service and we had three persons in the audience who represented three other large denominations. When we started to build our church here, they started a movement and circulated a petition to prohibit us from building. Their contention was that we were colored people, and they did not want a colored church on their street.

After the church was built it was rumored about that we were spiritualists. But the time has come when we are beginning to be known, and when the work is not quite so hard. We are very grateful for what the Lord has done for us and ask an interest in your prayers for the work in this city.

NEW LEBANON BRETHREN CHURCH

Since our last report several things have occurred here which we believe will be of interest to the brotherhood. Our special evangelistic campaign closed on the third of April. The three weeks spent with Brother Barnard as evangelist, were pleasant and profitable weeks for the church and community. The attendance throughout the services were splendid. Rainy evenings did not seem to affect the attendance. A fine Christian spirit was shown throughout the campaign. Brother George Hepner, one of our deacons, did himself credit in the splendid way he handling the singing.

The immediate results to the church were 32 additions, nineteen of these came by letter from the Dayton and Salem churches. These were members that had moved into the community here. These four families, namely, Vess Deeters, Edward Wogamans, Sherman Gilberts and Rev. Morse Hoovers, will be a splendid help to the church. The other thirteen came by rebaptism and confession. Of the 13 four new families were reached.

However, the immediate results do not give you any idea of the good accomplished for the church. We entered into 100 or more homes during the campaign. Everywhere we made friends for the church. We believe quite a number of these will come in the near future. Four more were baptized and received into the church during the Easter season, making a total of 38 since our last report.

Brother Barnard made a splendid co-worker. His messages were well received by all. He was always ready to enter homes and speak for Christ and his church. He preached the true Word with zeal and inspiration. The splendid free will offering given at the close of the service is an indication of the appreciation of the people here for the work done.

Easter Sunday was a splendid day for us. We broke our Sunday school record attendance by 54, there being 346 present when the count was made. The children gave a short but pleasing program, followed by a fine Easter message by Brother Roy Patterson of our Dayton church. An invitation was given at the close of the service and two fine young lads accepted the risen Christ as their Savior. The Foreign Missionary offering amounted to nearly $140.

Brother Charles Sensenbaugh, one of our former parishioners at St. James, Maryland, spent the Easter vacation with us. We had the fortune of hearing him preach to a fine and appreciative audience.

At the last business meeting the church voted to send monthly letters to all the membership of the church. The "Rotospeed" is a valuable addition to the work of the church. We are doing more advertising at less cost than heretofore.

A Daily Vacation Bible School is being planned for the summer. This will be a new experiment, but we believe the folk will take hold of the work in a splendid way. Our communion service will be held on the 22nd of May. Any Brethren near by are invited to join us in this service. L. V. KING.

PRE-EASTER MEETINGS AT MASON-TOWN

During the week preceding and including Easter Sunday in fulfillment of a promise made to the pastor last fall, I was speaking in the Brethren church of Masontown, Pennsylvania. Brother Koontz had planned for a meeting of two weeks, he himself taking the first week, while I took the last. It was my first visit to this city and church, and in several respects it was very interesting. For one thing, during my first year at Ashland Seminary, Brother Koontz was finishing his course here as a graduate student in the Seminary, and I had greatly enjoyed the fellowship of having him in some of my classes. I believe that he is the first minister of our church to take the new degree now being granted for the long course, Bachelor of Theology. He is doing splendid work at Masontown. New people are being brought into the church under his ministry, and a great interest is being stimulated among the members in the Word of God. I do not think that I have ever taught the Scriptures to people who were more interested. Much of this splendid interest is emanating from a teacher training class which is taught by the pastor's wife. This class is studying the Great Doctrines of the Bible, using as a text-book a work by Dr. Wm. Evans on this subject. There are about thirty members in the class, and Mrs. Koontz has them really working. I predict a splendid corps of teachers out of this class.

Another reason why my visit to Masontown was interesting was because some of my ancestors lived for many years there. I even found a "McClain's Landing" on the river; and Miss Mary Sterling, who seems to be an expert in the knowledge of local genealogies, pointed out to us the little old log cabin in which my great-grandfather had taught school. His name was James Kelso, and he was a preacher of the Church of the Brethren.

The gracious hospitality of the Masontown brethren is unexcelled, and it goes without saying that the Pennsylvania cooks have no peer. Brother and Sister Koontz, at whose home we stayed, took excellent care of us, and the weather was ideal, but in spite of these favorable conditions, I managed to take another cold and came home ill, spending another week in bed.

The visible results of the meeting was eight additions to the church, and among these the remarkable case of a man over seventy, who confessed Christ for the first time. The pastor of the church, however, deserves the credit for these confessions, as is generally the case. Without the faithful work of the pastor, no evangelist would ever get very far. But aside from the accessions to the church, I believe the meeting was worth while. The members of the church were constant in their attendance, and judging from the interest shown, I feel that they were built up in the faith and knowledge of the Word of God. I sincerely hope for the privilege of teaching again at some future time in this church.

ALVA J. McCLAIN, Ashland, Ohio.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

The first Brethren church of this city is looking forward to a great spiritual blessing in the Lord on May 22. This will be the first anniversary of the dedication. An all-day meeting is planned, to which all the Brethren of nearby churches are invited to attend and join us in praising God for the good things he has done for us since we began. The membership has doubled, and we are expecting greater things still from God, who has commanded us to call upon him and he would do for us great and mighty things of which we know not. Come and enjoy the day with us. Dinner will be served in the basement. We would not forget the fine fellowship and aid received from the Brethren last year. God bless and prosper you, and come again.

IDA KELLER, Corresponding Secretary.

BREEZES FROM OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

"The Switzerland of America"

We have been busy and so have not taken time to report previously. Since our last report one member has been added to our membership. He is one of the active business men of the city. The attendance has been good at all services, and especially the night services. The attendance for these has been the best of any time since coming on the field. With their continued increase we will soon be cramped to accommodate the crowds. At a recent night preaching service when an anniversary sermon was delivered, the building was completely filled. Our Sunday school facilities are entirely inadequate. The school has been recently thoroughly reorganized down to the smallest detail. With the complete grading of the classes it will be possible to do more thorough work. Our recent Foreign Mission offering, I am told, is the largest that has ever been received here.

At a recent business meeting important steps were taken in regard to the new building. Plans were adopted and various funds have already been started, looking to the time when ground will be broken for the new edifice. A picture of the proposed building will appear in a later number of the Evangelist. The greatest harmony prevails in the building project and with the spirit being manifested, rapid progress ought to be made. At this meeting we were given a unanimous call to serve this people the fifth year, commencing with the first of September.

We hardly realize that we have or will have been here four years. Two years has been the longest time a pastor has been on this field previous to our coming, with the exception of Brother A. B. Duncan, the father of the church. He still remains bedfast in his home at the age of 84. It has been eighteen months since he was confined to his bed. At the present time we have been here three years and eight months, counting two years of part time work at Gatewood. During this time even one hundred members have been added to the church rolls. These people also granted us a three weeks' vacation, which will be taken this summer in Florida and the Gulf States. We can say that these people are as loyal and fine a people as any pastor would care to labor with. Perhaps that is one reason that time seems to pass so rapidly. The loyal and splendid fellowship of the business men of the town also makes pastoral life here very pleasant. Now folks, do not get the idea that this is a Garden of Eden, the Devil works as hard here as anywhere else, and at times I think, harder.

We have had our meeting scheduled with Brother R. Paul Miller for over a year and a half, and were expecting to hold it this coming October, but he was compelled to completely rearrange his plans, and so we were compelled to change the date of our meeting from June 13 to July 3. When we set this or rather accepted this date as our only opportunity there was no definite date for the Maryland-Virginia District Conference. When the date of the Conference was set later, we made an effort to have a conflict avoided, which was caused by the Conference and meeting being at the same time. We could not arrange a time, so Oak Hill's delegation of fifteen that were expecting to go to District Conference, will not be there. We will turn our eyes toward Winona which is a certain date.

We feel that the time is ripe for one of the best meetings with Brother Miller this summer that we have had since locating here. The people at large are frequently asking in regard to his coming, and the main difficulty looming up at the present time, is what to do with the crowds. The pastor of the Methodist church, a building of some twelve hundred capacity, has already volunteered the use of their splendid new building. We covet the prayers of the brotherhood that this meeting might result in a great harvest of souls.

Brother William A. Gearhart recently spent some time at Oak Hill and gave his Historical and Missionary lecture. Old Jupiter Pluvius tried his best to wash this city off the mountain top the night the lecture was given, but a splendid audience was present in spite of the inclement weather. Ere this will have appeared in print he with Mrs. Wenger and the writer will have been on the Kentucky field in an advisory capacity. We are also at the present time anticipating a visit of Miss Gertrude Leedy in behalf of the work of the Missionary Society.

The work here is very encouraging and the outlook is splendid for the future if we are willing to follow the leading of the Holy Spirit. The tasks contemplated are large and the coming building campaign will require sacrifices, but where the people have a mind to work and pray and pay, wonders may be accomplished. We are much interested in the work of the Kingdom and request that this corner of the great harvest field be remembered at the Throne of Grace.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

MT. PLEASANT, PENNSYLVANIA

July 31, 1913 we began our work as mission pastor of the faithful few of this organization who are loyal to the teachings of our blessed Lord, as taught and practiced by the Brethren church, and continued until February, 1916, when Brother Clifford became the resident pastor, and served in conjunction with Jones Mills. He was partly supported by the Mission Board of our states, but the remuneration being insufficient for full time service, Brother Clifford, like his predecessor, was obliged to engage in secular employment in order to fulfill his obligation to his faithful companion and the little ones bestowed upon them. This not being satisfactory to himself or the church, Brother Clifford tendered his resignation, when the writer was again called upon, March, 1917, to take charge of the work as pastor, still being obliged to provide for his own through the medium of an income as traveling salesman, with home at Johnstown, Pennsylvania. This arrangement continued until the close of March, the present year.

Brother C. C. Collins, preaching for various denominations, with home close to Mount Pleasant, along with Sister Nellie Kolb, November the eleventh was received into the church by baptism. Being desirous of continuing the ministry, received the call of the church, was approved by the Examining Board and ordained by the pastor, March the 27th, and elected to become his successor, the pastor having served the congregation for a period of over twelve years.

At our last morning service it was our pleasure to baptize and receive into the church, Brother Ralph Daniels, in whom we have confidence to continue as a faithful servant of our blessed Lord.

Our work with this congregation has been harmonious and pleasant, with no regrets, other than the desire to have accomplished more than we did.

For the church and the new pastor, we ask the guidance of the Holy Spirit, that the work may prosper and become a tower of strength for the saving of souls, to the glory of God the Father, through his Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

IN MEMORIAM

A MOTHER IN ISRAEL GONE HOME MRS. SUSANNAH TEETER

The Psalmist of old declared, "The days of our years are three score years and ten;
and if by reason of strength they be four

MRS. SUSANNAH TEETER

score years; yet is their strength labor and sorrow." The ordinary experiences of life verify the truth of the declaration of the Psalmist; and yet there are notable exceptions to the general experience, as in the case of the subject of this sketch.

On August twenty-four, eighteen hundred and thirty-five, Susannah Moore, daughter of Asa and Catherine Moore, was born in Fayette County, Ohio. In 1850, with the other members of the family she was taken to Jefferson county, Iowa in an emigrant wagon. Here all the experiences of the early pioneers of the middle west, and the poverty and the hardships of the frontier were encountered.

In 1852 she was united in marriage to Elias K. Teeter, a young school teacher who had come from Pennsylvania to make a home on the frontier, and who later became one of the pioneer preachers in the Brethren church.

To this union were born fourteen children, twelve of which grew to manhood and womanhood. Every age has developed its portion of sacrificing mothers. But no mother ever made a more willing sacrifice of comfort, convenience and self for the sake of her children than did Susannah Teeter. To clothe and feed and care for twelve children with the limited means of pioneer days, was a task to challenge the courage of the stoutest hearted mother, but the task was accomplished, and all twelve of the children went to high school, seven attended college or normal schools, nine became teachers in the public schools and one became a minister of the gospel in the Brethren church.

In 1865 the family moved from Iowa to a farm near Pleasant Hill, Ohio, where they remained for thirty years, then moving into the village where thirty years later she passed quietly away at the advanced age of ninety-one years, seven months and twenty-five days, on April nineteenth, nineteen hundred and twenty-seven.

Of living relatives there remain one aged sister, ten children, thirty-five grandchildren and twenty-nine great grandchildren.

Sixty-seven years ago, with her husband, she united with the German Baptist Brethren church, and when the Pleasant Hill Brethren church was organized at a meeting held in the Teeter homestead in 1874, she became a charter member of the organization, and was numbered among the most faithful attendants for more than fifty years.

Her experience was unusual in that her husband, Elias K. Teeter, who passed away twenty-three years ago, was one of the pioneer ministers in the Brethren church, one of her sons, R. R. Teeter, has been a minister in the church for thirty-three years, one grandson, A. V. Kimmell, has been active in the ministry of the church for more than twenty years, and one great grandson is making preparation for the ministry.

Her life is fittingly described in portions of the last chapter of the book of Proverbs,
"She riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, she girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms; Her candle goeth not out by night; she stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea she reacheth forth her hands to the needy; strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come!
she openeth her mouth with wisdom; and her tongue is the law of kindness; she looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness; her children arise up and call her blessed."

The Higher Use of Memorial Day

Memorial Day is devoted to many and varied uses. Primarily it is a day built upon the elements of reverence and gratitude, and is largely used as an occasion for giving expression to these worthy sentiments. But it is not always so nobly used. Not infrequently it is given over to exalting the exploits of war, to shallow boastings of American prowess and superiority, to demonstrations of selfish nationalism, and to a haranguing of other nations and a discrediting of the strength and high purposes of their governments. It is a false patriotism that yields to such expressions. They are not worthy of a truly great and mighty people; they are not becoming to an nation that makes the professions that we make; and they do not represent the heart of America, but rather misrepresent it. It is proper and right that every American should love his country, be proud of its greatness and power and express his loyalty and devotion in ways that are fitting. But he who gives himself over to idle and arrogant boastings of his country's achievements, to offensive displays of national egotism and racial antipathy, is not a true patriot and rather than adding to his country's glory, he dims it to the extent of his influence and acts as a discordant instrument in the great symphony of national honor.

The kind of patriotism that dominates in our national life depends in no small degree upon the attitude of the church and upon its conscious effort to cause the Christian spirit to leaven our national policies and to characterize our patriotic expressions. Dr. Samuel McCrea Cavert emphasizes this point by asking whether there is any task before the church more urgent than to develop a Christian conception of patriotism to take the place of the boastful and selfish thing which has masqueraded under a patriotic mantle?" His expression seems to us hyperbolic, for doubtless that is not really the most urgent task before the church, but he does rightly point it out as a very important one. Patriotism of the right sort should be found in every soul. Dr. Caver says, "Loyalty to the land that has given us birth and showered us with blessings should flow in the blood." But he insists that "Patriotism, rightly conceived, is a stimulus to serve something larger than one's own individual ends." And this is eternally true and the more universally it is recognized the better for us all. It gives rise to the feeling that Robert Burns describes as 'A wish that to my latest hour

Will strongly heave my breast,

That I for pur old Scotland's sake
Some useful plan or book might make,
Or sing a sang at least.' "

As previously suggested, the cultivation and showing of reverence for the heroic dead and the fostering of a spirit of gratitude for the services they have rendered is a fundamental aim of Memorial Day. It is right that we should cherish the memory of the noble men who laid down their lives in defense of a cause. We must never let the spirit of gratitude die out, nor allow reverence for our nation's worthy heroes to disappear from our hearts. It will be a sad day if the time ever comes when we shall forget the truly good and great, or cease to idealize and to be inspired by those who have made great sacrifices for the common good. May we never neglect to strew flowers, nor fail to keep fresh the memory of those who have been noble in peace or in war. But let us not forget that the noblest memorial of a hero is not a reverence for his dead bones, but the reproduction of his heroism. And as true heroism is needed today as was ever required to face machine gun or poison gas.

It is the heroism that is required to promote the high ideals of this nation, the Christian ideals of unselfishness and service, of forbearance and cooperation, the heroism necessary to stand openly and actively opposed to war or preparation for war, or any spirit or conduct that tends to encourage war. You may wonder wherein such an attitude takes heroism. But you will not long wonder when you once take such a stand and find yourself in opposition to the organized effort to militarize our land, and even those who are professed followers of Christ begin to temper their opposition, to compromise their attitude and you are called fanatic, pacifist, unpatriotic, or even Bolshevik or traitor. It will mean something to stand your ground then. The crowd will not be with you, and there will be no bands playing to inspire and strengthen your heart. You will be very much alone, and lonely, except for the presence of him who promised, "I am with you always." It is not a hypothetical case; it is a situation that must be faced at this very hour; your patriotism is now being challenged if you have adopted the Christian attitude toward war, and you must prove its quality and power. Your patriotism must be more than the ordinary sort, it must be genuine and persevering if you are not to weaken and relinquish or compromise your stand, or qualify your opposition. Such patriotism is needed to meet the issues of the present, and only such will prove a worthy memorial to the noblest and idealized heroes of our nation's wars.

Faith the Key to Great Adventure

In that wonderful eleventh chapter of Hebrews we have the key to the life of great adventure, a key that is being brought afresh to our attention by events that are thrilling the world at this very hour. It is a time of great adventure. Men are appearing upon the horizon charged with the adventurous spirit as strongly as in any age that is past, and as great, hazardous and daring undertakings are being accomplished as any that men have ever attempted. The day of adventure and exploration, rather than being past, is upon us as certainly as it was upon men when the earth was thought to be flat and the sea was a great expanse of mystery and terror. Men are still adventuring upon the unknown and accepting the challenge of the seemingly impossible. And the same force or power is leading men out that has ever led them out into the world's uncharted paths. That power is faith. Faith is the secret to a life of great adventure. It has ever been so. "By faith," says the epistle, "Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should afterward receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went." "By faith," "by faith," is the explanation repeated with regard to the adventurous life of patriarch and leader, one after another, and after we have read the chapter through, we could begin again and substitute names of notables of secular history, and complete the chapter again and again in every age—men who ventured out upon the unknown and risked danger and death for the sake of what they believed could be accomplished. By faith Columbus ventured out to sea and continued until he had discovered a new world. By faith Marconi was enabled to invent the wireless telegraph. By faith the Wright Brothers invented the aeroplane. By faith Charles A. Lindberg sailed through illimitable space until he had spanned the Atlantic Ocean with his aeroplane, and had become the world's youngest and most admired hero.

It is faith that made it all possible. Faith—that power that enables one to make certainty of that which cannot be seen, to possess as real and actual that which would otherwise be vague and indefinite because of distance. It is faith—that force that enables one to see that which is invisible, and to depend on that which has never been demonstrated. That is the thing that has made possible unbelievable accomplishments in the material world. And what might it not make possible in the spiritual world, if we but possessed it and made the venture! Aye, and what wonderful things it does make possible! By faith men lift the eyes of the mind and behold the risen Lord. By faith Jesus becomes the ideal of every human life. By faith the shackles of sin are broken. By faith the Lord is present in the life at all times and that presence gives victory and power. By faith the soul is assured of future bliss and heaven becomes a blessed reality. How wonderful is faith!

Poor Excuses

It is amusing, if one can keep his mind off the serious side of it, to see how ridiculous men and women make themselves when trying to pander up some excuse to take the place of the real reason which they are ashamed to state. A contemporary tells of a prominent layman who could pay $50 for a dog and $100 for a gun, but "could not afford to take his church paper at $2.50 a year." Our church paper is only $2.00 a year, and yet there are folks who cannot afford it, though they can afford many luxuries equally as expensive as the ones mentioned above. Another man could spend 30 cents a day on tips alone, but could not pay five cents a week for a bit of religious knowledge. A woman who made regular trips to Europe had to discontinue her paper because her budget would not cover this expense. The contemporary suggests that this type of person should learn a proper sense of proportion. We would put it plainer and say that such persons should learn a proper sense of honesty. And we think we are justified by the language of Malachi 3:8. It is not true that "a poor excuse is better than none." Honesty is better than an excuse any time.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Churchs of the Maryland-Virginia District, please heed the president of your district mission board and pay your mission apportionments before conference convenes June 14-16 at Linwood, Md.

A word from Brother J. L. Bowman of the Vinco congregation in Pennsylvania, informs us of two recently baptized and others awaiting baptism. A meeting is to be begun April 25 to continue until June 5th.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of his work for the Third church of Philadelphia where three have been added to the membership since the passing of Dr. Witter. He informs us that Brother J. E. Braker, for many years the pastor of this church, has been engaged again as their leader.

Two more issues and then we will drop a number of the Evangelist, as is our custom. Fifty numbers are published in the year and two weeks, one at General Conference time and one at a suitable time in the spring, no paper is published. So, on the date of June 18th there will be no paper. Those having announcements, please take notice.

Brother W. R. Deeter of Portis, Kansas, tells us that their Sunday school is keeping up fine, and going ahead of former records. All the auxiliaries of the church are said to be in good condition and doing faithful service. The church was recently redecorated and new art glass windows added to the beauty of the church. Brother Deeter is closing his work here this fall, and will be open to a call elsewhere.

The North Liberty, Indiana, congregation did a very creditable thing for college endowment, according to the report of Dr. W. S. Bell, Campaign Secretary. Notwithstanding a bank failure in that town, the people gave without complaining, which speaks well for their interest in Ashland College. They gave to the amount of $1,169.42, which added to the amounts previously reported, bring the total for the campaign to $109,150.16.

From Pittsburgh we learn of a number of highly enjoyed special events—the Easter cantata, the communion with 108 present and the concert by the College Girls' Glee Club. Brother A. L. Lynn, the capable pastor, has returned to his pulpit after a prolonged absence, due to a throat infection. His announced purpose to heed the urgent call to the pastorate of the church at Roanoke, Virginia, causes deep regret on the part of the Pittsburgh Brethren, but it will prove a great blessing to the people of Roanoke.

Christian Endeavorers should not fail to plan to have at least one delegate from each society at the great International Convention at Cleveland July 2 to 7. It is a great opportunity for societies in Ohio and Indiana and Western Pennsylvania and Michigan. Also, you doubtless have been reading Brother O. D. Ulom's splendid articles on Christian Endeavor page, and the articles of others whom he has invited to write preparatory to the observance of Brethren Day on June 12th.

Brother Herbert H. Rowsey, who has been called from the Roanoke, Virginia, pastorate to Falls City, Nebraska, writes of the work recently accomplished at Roanoke. Six additions to the church since last report are recorded. One good lady, a friend of the Roanoke church, and who recently passed to her reward, bestowed a most generous gift upon the church, to be used for the education of young men for the ministry. As Brother Rowsey says, this is an example to the well-to-do members of our church. It is better to put one's money to the service of the church than to distribute it to undeserving relatives and friends who are likely to spend it on worldliness if not soon dissipate it.

Brother Dyoll Belote, pastor of the Second church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, favors us with a report of commendable progress. The average Sunday school attendance of this promising mission work has reached 85-90 and well organized and graded to needs. Attendance at church services has also improved and the addition of some deacons and deaconesses has completed the officary of the organization. A successful evangelistic campaign with Brother J. L. Gingrich of the Third church as the preacher, resulted in twenty-two confessions, eighteen of which were additions to the church roll. Brother Belote speaks highly of the impression made by the Ashland College Girls' Glee Club at that place.

JUNE 12TH IS EDUCATION DAY OFFERING DATE. Every church in the brotherhood should pray and plan to make a large offering in the interest of our only higher educational institution. This offering is not asked for as a matter of form, because it happens to be on the schedule of the church year, but as a matter of necessity. Nothing is more urgent right now than that the church should come forward with a generous offering for education. The continued success of every other department of the church and of the church as a whole depends largely on whether or not this interest is put on a firm foundation. That means that at least $500,000 must be secured within a short time, and the only place where the college authorities can go with any very strong claim for support is to the brotherhood. It is our college and we must take care of it. We have everything to gain by doing so and everything to lose by failing.

We are pleased to present on the front page a view of the substantial new church at Canton, Ohio, where Brother Fred C. Vanator has been the pastor for six years and is called for the seventh year. Remarkable growth has attended this church under the capable leadership of Brother and Sister Vanator and this achievement bears eloquent testimony to the splendid spirit of cooperation and harmony that prevail among the membership. With this splendid new equipment we may expect them to go on from victory until they have crowded out the walls of their new church and are compelled to build larger. Dedication day was a time of great rejoicing and of victory, a very prominent factor in which was Dr. W. H. Beachler, who was the special speaker and money raiser for the occasion. This church was fortunate in having among its members one man who was able to take entire charge of the building operations and buying of materials and thus they were enabled to save considerable money. That man was Brother B. F. Lindower, contractor, whose services, as also those of the pastor, were so highly appreciated the congregation surprised them each with a beautiful gift on dedication day.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Young People and Their Influence for World Peace

By John F. Locke

"Either civilization must destroy war or war will destroy civilization." Many men who profess to be thinkers declare that we can afford to sacrifice civilization—that perhaps a better one will rise from the dust of this one; but "war today not only threatens civilization with destruction: but what is far more serious, it threatens the human race itself," says Irving Fisher, the noted economist of Yale University.

As one of that group still called "young", the writer cannot help concluding, after some reflection, that perhaps we would do well to keep our "civilization" and work it over ourselves rather than loose it in a seething hell of war in order to purge it. The best reason for this belief is that war does not have the tendency to be followed by peace, love, and righteousness growing out of high ideals learned in the diabolical pursuit; but rather it is followed by heartache, by white crosses, row on row, and by crime waves together with all the aggregation of vices and evils that are the natural result of men's ceasing to use their minds and going into the cut-throat business with their neighbors furnishing the throats.

With all that may be said about young people—and personally I agree that the charges brought against them are manifold and serious, there is a hopeful aspect to the situation in the fact that at least SOME young people are beginning to wake up and THINK. If they think wrongly—too bad. If rightly, the Lord be praised. Certainly the older generation has set a poor example at best in education, in religion, and most of all in the matter of promoting peace.

As one of the younger generation in our Brethren church, I take just pride in the fact that our Brethren church has stood against war, just as the denomination has had the temerity to stand for those things in which she has believed at other times in her history. It seems that Brethren have these splendid ideas but they fail to keep them to the fore. For instance: Christopher Saur had the courage to set the printing press going at the advent of our people in this country back as early as 1739, and yet today Dean Miller and others rightly lament the fact that we do not have a Brethren literature, which we sorely need. So with peace. Peace is no new idea anywhere. We have used it now for a great while in individual relationships, but have not applied it to international relationships.

Young people whose thinking is influenced by Christian belief, history, and ideals oppose war; and they oppose it with all the enthusiasm and earnestness that is so characteristic of youth. They criticize the church as having sanctioned every war thus far. They mean to take Jesus seriously when he spoke on the Mount.

I have before me as I write a selection of the best of present day literature on the subject of war. (I quote no figures, for they are too big to be comprehensible; they are like talking of "light years", too large for private consumption.) Everyone knows it was a gigantic affair, using money to kill, maim, and destroy, a tenth of which would have more than served to carry Christianity to the earth's remotest tribe. Why did it all come about—this enormous undertaking to annihilate? Well, some young people say that it was done through the bungling of the older generation. Pride, avarice, materialism, nationalism, and imperialism were thus allowed to take the place of the teaching of the Galilean.

Today finds the world still in the same status. Such peace as there is is a result of armed neutrality or selfish interest. The nations cannot get along without some unity of purpose and character. You cannot bring men together around the cannon, or commerce, or militarism, or government. The only way to get nations together is around a person. The one person who can bring them together perfectly is Christ. The only way to peace for the troubled world, the way to fusion and unity on the part of a varied world lies in the path that leads to Jesus of Nazareth. Maybe the world will not accept words of life from him; but apparently nobody else has them.

Young people in college Y. M. C. A. groups and in Student Volunteer organizations are taking a vital interest in the cause of world peace as an expression of real religion. The group is small, to be sure, when compared to the whole world of young people, some of whom never stop to think about anything but pleasure's giddy whirl. But great movements always start on a small scale. If we have a small group who can think in world terms, perhaps mob psychology will not have such an easy victory when war again seems imminent.

Young people can keep on insisting that war is essentially and inherently a supreme violation of Jesus' way of living. They can show the conviction that war is ineffective in furthering Christ's Kingdom and is self-defeating in its very nature. Young people can use their influence just as everyone can. The absolute repudiation of war by individuals, groups, and corporate bodies is the most effective way of compelling governments to abandon the war system and to discover more adequate means of securing safety and justice. Even one so placid and non-committal as the present chief executive of our country is influenced by letters from students all over the United States in regard to America's present policy in foreign lands. Those who are in earnest about getting rid of war will leave no stone unturned.

Against the old vision of world empire, the young people of the nations can set the new vision of the Kingdom of God. Some day instead of a hell on earth caused by war, peace will hold eternal sway. Instead of selfishness, ambition, aggression—justice and righteousness. Instead of pride, arrogance, disdain, scorn, and self-conceit, youth must catch a vision of good-will, sympathy, helpfulness. Brotherliness and unselfishness must supplant hatred, rage, lust, and animosity. Trust and confidence, sincerity, teachableness, and dependability need to be emblazoned on world standards superseding insincerity, deceit, trickery, treachery, and suspicion, lies and spies. Brutalities, murders, wars, destruction, pillage, carnage, rape, atrocities, agonies, cripples, widows, orphans, refugees, poverty, famine, and disease all must retreat before appreciation, friendship, love, honesty, truthfulness, integrity, civilization, travel, trade and commerce, prosperity, abundance, comfort, wealth, health, cooperation, credit, understanding, education, and literature.

Victories, oppression, injustice, luxury, degeneracy, shame, defeat, despair, resentment, race suicide, and revenge ad infinitum, all follow war. The fruits of peace are uplift, happiness, harmony, joy, hope, religious aspiration, and progress ad infinitum.

Considering the natural idealism of youth, it is not strange that the young people choose the road to peace.

God gives us the raw material with which we can construct on earth either heaven or hell. The state of society that allows war is even worse than war itself. Hell invariably comes when the tools are forged and the devils are trained. It is not God's fault. To us of the enlightened twentieth century, even more guilt must be imputed if, after the last horrible example, we do not put all our might into making another such despicable fiasco impossible.

Human society and institutions have grown to be as vast as they can be unless they are dominated by the Christ-like spirit. Today we live in a small world in which isolation is a thing of the past. When thus bound together, nations may do one of two things—they may kill each other or love each other. God's immutable moral laws must be pondered over and obeyed. He that takes up the sword, perishes by it. True greatness is not national aggrandizement nor military splendor, but service to humanity.

There are special international obligations binding alike on all. As Woodrow Wilson, one of the greatest of American statesmen, said, we did a cowardly and a selfish thing by isolating ourselves after the war and refusing to try to help form a lasting peace by means of the League. It was simply another case of the old narrow-minded action. "Party before peace" characterizes it fairly well. In the name of peace let us forget the pettiness of party, color, and a few other things such as the so-called Nordic supremacy and the like, and fight the GOOD fight. There is a wide field for the sublimation of the fighting instinct. There will always be battles to fight for decency, morality, and justice in the great war of Christianity versus Mammon.

Removal of unjust barriers of color, race, and creed is one of the ideals which will help create a warless world, young people are saying. Patriotism for the Christian must mean more than a mere exhibition of mob behavior when the Star Spangled Banner is played. To secure the truest good for our nation or any other, equal justice for all races must be obtained. Treat Mexico and the Philippines with the same respect and consideration you would show toward England and France. International law, courts of arbitration, reduction of armaments, in short a warless world, are the things for which serious minded young people are standing flatfooted.

Christianity won out in the Roman world, crowded with religions already, because it deserved to win. It deserved to win because it had Christ as its Founder and because its followers made no half-way profession of their faith. They were intolerant because they meant business. Today finds a group of Christians trying to get back the lost radiance of religion by following Christ in all things. They stand against war. Every Christian can and should use his influence against war. Each of us can count as one; no more is asked. But peace is the product of goodwill among men. As Lord Bryce said, "If we do not destroy war, war will destroy us." We were not born into the world to hate, but to love one another. "Give the children a true idea of war in their history books," said Zangwill, "and the next generation would no more want a war than an earthquake."

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
Given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals or forts.
The warrior's name would be a name abhorred!
And every nation that should lift again
Its hand against a brother, on its forehead
Would appear forevermore the curse of Cain!

"Down the dark future, through long generations,
The echoing sounds grow fainter and then cease;
And like a bell, with solemn, sweet vibrations,
I hear once more the voice of Christ say, 'Peace!'
Peace! and no longer from its brazen portals
The blast of war's great organ shakes the skies!
But beautiful as songs of the immortals
The holy melodies of love arise."

Swords and Plowshares

By Rev. William Hiram Faulkes

(Written for use as a declamation in the Second Annual Prince of Peace Contest conducted by the Ohio Council of Churches.)

"They shall beat their swords into plowshares"—so runs the ancient prophecy. Is it all a pious dream? No generation has ever yet witnessed the dawning of the day when that dream should come true. No nation has yet been willing to be the one to make it come true. Can it, will it ever come to pass?

If we were to listen to the voices of discouragement and despair, of suspicion and strife, of class prejudice and race hatred, we would answer "Never!" All the centuries, we are told, have been strewn with the wreckage of war. It will be as impossible to rid the world of war, so men say, as it would be to rid human nature of its fixed desires and habits.

In the face of all this and much more, is not one a bold and even a fanatical prophet who would dare to deny the universal rights of war and to demand "unconditional surrender" to the program, principles and spirit of the Prince of Peace? Yes, to utter such a prophecy is to brand one as visionary. Thank God, the brand is honorable and the vision is glorious!

While this is not the first time that the world has become "war-weary", yet never before has the whole world groaned so grievously under the burden of war. It will take generations for the nations involved to pay even the direct cost, while the greatest part of the cost can never be paid. Let us rejoice that a new consciousness has been born in the heart of humanity—deep-seated, determined and ever-desperate,—that the day has dawned when the world must make the ancient prophecy a reality.

Nations must learn how to beat their swords into plowshares. They must so study the arts and program of peace, they must so commit themselves to the ideals of inter-racial understanding and good-will, they must so devise and maintain the means for the arbitration of international difficulties, that those who may seek to engulf the world in the maelstrom of another war shall find their way forever barred by an enlightened and dominating world-conscience that shall say concerning them, as was said in the recent war, "They shall not pass!"

We shall doubtless not reach a warless world by leaps and bounds, but we may move toward it by steady and patient strides. As one step I would suggest that we substitute the thought of peace for that of war in our common thinking. By peace we mean those human attitude and relationships, whether economic, social, moral or religious, that are carried on in the spirit of understanding and good-will. Indeed we know the word "peace" already. The very fabric of our social existence is woven out of the threads of understanding, tolerance, and good-will. The one thing we need to do to make the idea of peace supreme is to carry it out to its logical conclusion and to realize that what is good for humanity for the most of its activities is good for its inter-racial and international relationships.

To those who mournfully or even cynically say that we must put up with war because, since peace has never yet fully come, it never will come, we reply that their argument is as false as their conclusions are futile. If they will open their eyes and their ears and most of all their hearts and minds, they will discover that the world is full of things that have never been before. We are living in a new era of industrial achievements and of scientific discovery. Our world is both larger and smaller than ever before. It is a vast universe of complicated social and racial traditions and activities; it is at the same time a neighborhood.

Let those face the facts who smugly say that war must always be because war always has been. The world is ablaze with new energies. There are vast treasures of spiritual aspirations and moral achievements waiting only to be unlocked.

Sir Oliver Lodge is reported recently to have taken a handful of clay from his laboratory table and said to his students: "Young gentlemen, there is enough atomic energy in this small bit of clay to lift the largest leviathan from the depths of the ocean to the heights of the Himalayas. All that is needed is to discover how to release that hidden energy."

What Sir Oliver Lodge said concerning a handful of clay is surely more than true of the pent-up life of youth with all of its capacities for vision and service. War has called forth those energies, but at what a frightful cost and with what tragic results! Peace may also summon them to the noblest ministries and the most lasting spiritual achievements. All that is needed is to discover the secret of releasing these dormant powers, and then, boldly, to set them free.

The key that will unlock the treasure house of peace is available to any generation that will take it and use it. In behalf of the youth of the world, I stretch out my eager hands for the key. Forbid us not, O ye who have too long lived by the sword! Give us the key, O spirit of prophecy! Intrust us with it, O Prince of Peace! We are young but we have a spirit for the great adventure. We are dreamers, but our dreams are divine.

Give us thy blood-stained sword, O war-weary world, and in the crucible of our white-hot spirits we will melt it and mold it again into the plowshare of peace. With that plowshare we will bid our children and our children's children to turn deep and straight the furrows of justice, brotherhood and good-will in that new world in which shall at last come true the dreams of universal peace.

Father: An Appreciation

By Paul. Bauman

For years we have set aside a day to honor and appreciate mother in a special way. However, recently, we have also felt the need of a special day to honor and remember our fathers. This is but another step of a democratized civilization that we have taken. For why should we not honor the other of the two who have played such a vital part in our existence? Little do most of us realize what an important role our fathers play in the moulding of our characters. We do not appreciate the tremendous responsibility and tasks which rest upon their shoulders in rearing us to be a credit to God and to humanity.

However, this responsibility is one which the fathers do not always realize and assume. Parents sometimes do not stop to consider the great truth in that proverb of Solomon's which says, "The glory of the children are their fathers." They must remember that inevitably the son's hero and model is the father. They should also realize the fact that the training of a child is the most delicate and sacred business in the world. It is a work that calls for the greatest wisdom, the finest discernment and the most infinite patience.

But what are the duties of an ideal father to his child? Many fathers think that if they furnish their sons with food and shelter, their duty is ended, and consequently the child is left to work out his spiritual and social problems as best he can. I would say that the father's duty goes infinitely farther than simply supporting the son. Since we know that the child imitates the parent, it is the father's duty, first, to live a godly life—one that in so far as he is able may be a good model spiritually and morally for his son to follow.

Next, let the father be a real companion to the son; for if he isn't, the son will choose his companions and environment elsewhere. Let the father be stern, but open to the child's point of view. Let him teach the child initiative and self-reliance, and remember that it is a dangerous thing to hinder or destroy the child's self-faith.

Finally, let the father back the son up in his aims and aspirations, and when the boy needs it, let him not only chastise him tactfully but let him suggest ways of improvement.

FAITH OF OUR FATHERS

Faith of our fathers! living still
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword;
Oh! how our hearts beat high with joy,
Whene'er we hear that glorious word:
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death.

Our fathers, chained in prisons dark,
Were still in heart and conscience free:
How sweet would be their children's fate
If they, like them, could die for thee!
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death.

Faith of our Fathers, God's great pow'r
Shall soon all nations win for thee;
And thro' the truth that comes from God
Mankind shall then be truly free.
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death.

Faith of our fathers! we will love
Both friend and foe in all our strife,
And preach thee, too, as love knows how,
By kindly words and virtuous life.
Faith of our fathers! holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death.

—Frederick W. Faber.

And now, sons, what are our duties to the fathers who have sacrificed years of their lives to put us forward in the world? Shall we neglect the opportunities they have so graciously placed before us? We too have many duties to fulfill in this life. As sons we ought, of course, to first remember that most important command in the Bible which concerns us: "Children obey your parents in the Lord." Then we ought to have a full realization of what our fathers have done for us to make life possible. To the young man I may say, make a pal of your father; show him you are ambitious; consider his suggestions; and remember he is waiting gladly to advise and support you in your dreams. Then above all other things, sons, in these days of apostasy when youth seems so wayward and indifferent, let us so mould our characters that when we too are fathers, we can say with a proud and uplifted head,

"Faith of our fathers, living still
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword,
Oh how our hearts leap high with joy
Whene'er we hear that glorious word!
Faith of our fathers, holy faith.
We will be true to thee till death."

Inspiration from the Dead---A Memorial Day Sermon

By George H. Jones

The annual return of Memorial Day brings many patriotic lessons that stir our hearts and make better citizens of us. It was a custom among the ancient Greeks to pronounce annually a eulogy upon the departed heroes of the Republic. Their virtues were cherished by the people and their exploits were themes of praise upon every tongue.

Among the Hebrews a memorial day was distinctly religious. In the Hebrew mind great men were great by reason of their friendship with God. To them God was not only the Creator, but the inspirer of every great and virtuous deed. Hebrew memorials were sacred institutions. No secular nor recreational celebrations mingled with their religious rites. Their children would not need frequent explanations as to what was meant by the rites. The service was self-explanatory.

We are trying to make our memorial day an institution of enduring worth, teaching in speech and observance the value and honor of patriotism, sacrifice and service. A solemn thought of citizenship with all that it means, even to the last great debt that can be paid, was in the minds of the originators.

Memorial Day is a day consecrated to the highest achievements of the past. It is primarily the soldiers' day. It is fast becoming a national memorial day, a day in which to decorate the graves of all loved ones, with our soldier dead. And there are many brave soldierly hearts buried in civilian garb, even in womanly garb, that suffered as greatly and loved as devotedly and gave as patriotically, as any uniformed man on his country's honor roll. But the soldier dead, and living, is our central thought on Memorial Day. As we think of this what emotions well up from within our hearts.

The privileges we enjoy cost something. The cost of our country with its institutions and privileges is of value only as the investment is great. "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friends." Many homes have swelling hearts today in memory of those who paid the last full measure of devotion. The widow mourns for her departed soldier husband, the son for the father, the father for the son. And out of the mourning come resolves of a nobler nature, because of the example given.

The nation's worth to its coming generations is determined by its sources of inspiration. Human life is not uplifted by its laws, so much as by its examples. Conduct is the vital teacher. Lessons of patriotism may be taught by comparison with the deeds of other nations: memory may be enriched by ancient history, but the vital truths that furnish foundations for the higher duties, are the truths that are exemplified by our own blood relations.

The nation needs a memorial day. Self-seeking so easily becomes the rule of life. Any national observance by which something of higher value than self becomes the common object of attention, deserves our heartiest support. In the solemn presence of these men of a past day hearts are sobered and easily turn to the following lines:

"By the flow of the inland rivers,
Whence the fleets of iron have fled,
Where the blades of the grave-grass quiver,
Asleep are the ranks of the dead.
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the Judgment day—
Under the one the blue
Under the other the gray.

"No more shall the war cry sever,
Or the widening rivers be red;
Our anger is banished forever
When are laureled the graves of our dead!
Under the sod and the dew,
Waiting the Judgment day—
Love and tears for the blue,
Tears and love for the gray."

Well and bravely they acted their part in life, and now they rest, undisturbed by our plaudits or our tears. We call them blessed because they so richly endowed life. Theirs was the nobler part; let ours be that of emulation.

MEMORIAL DAY

Tenderly strew over each grave today
The perfumed blossoms of balmy May,
And the nameless mounds by stream or lake,
Bedeck them for mother's or sister's sake.

What matters it now whether friend or foe
Lies moldering in dust in the tomb below?
Spread sweet charity's mantle o'er the brave
And cover with flowers each hero's grave.

Known or unknown, oh! how many today,
Grieving, are wond'ring where their loved ones lay;
Weeping and wond'ring, they gladly would know
If tribute to theirs some hand will bestow.

Time and its changes should soften the heart,
And sympathy lessen pale sorrow's dart;
And tears should refresh the green on each grave;
Bright flowers their fragrance shed o'er the brave.

Think, some sad heart, that is far, far away,
In gratitude deep would gladly repay
For the drop of a sigh, a bud, or a tear,
On the grave "unknown", to some one so dear.

Think mercy's angel will hasten away,
With message of friend of the Blue or the Gray,
How it would solace the sorrow of years,
And lessen the grief that's hallowed with tears.

—John Landor Kryder.

Every grave cries out its message of blood-bought liberties and benefits. Every wound was part of the birththroes of our American citizenship. The devotion and courage, the endurance and sufferings are all part of the price exacted for human uplift and progress.

The larger number of silent mounds on this Memorial Day are mute witnesses to that great struggle made to enthrone equal suffrage and constitutional government. Our political liberties, our religious liberties, our educational freedom, the sanctity of the home and equality of opportunity all appealed in an overpowering summons to these silent men, and wrought out for the next generation the benefits these great causes confer.

What titles of nobility can surpass these defenders of immortal principles? It would be tiresome flattery to rehearse the exploits of our armies and navies. A thousand poets and historians have written of their deeds. The old veterans are not all gone, nor are all our young men veterans of our last wars, but there are still numbers enough to arouse our enthusiasm and impel us to a national observance. Young and old felt the summons of a great cause. That Cause (if not the method) was the Cause of the Man of Galilee. "Who follows in his train?" The task he began is only beginning to be understood. He passes the torch on. It can only be carried safely by men who have experienced his emotions and are inspired by his Spirit.

In conclusion, let us burn on the altars this Memorial Day the incense of a nobler emulation. Let us resolve before our God that if the meaning of their ideal was the sacrifice of life itself to the object that made life big with meaning, ours shall be none the less effective, if we can but live out the fuller citizenship which they died to give. And to our other heroes, none the less great because contemporary with us, let us quote to them,

"In Flanders fields the poppies grow
Between the crosses, row on row,
That mark our place; and in the sky
The larks, still bravely singing, fly,
Scarce heard amid the guns below.
We are dead, short days ago
We lived, felt dawn, saw sunset glow,
Loved, and were loved; and now we lie
In Flanders fields.

Take up our quarrel with the foe!
To you, from falling hands, we throw
The torch. Be yours to hold it high!
If ye break faith with us who die,
We shall not sleep, the poppies blow
In Flanders fields.—McRae.

In Flanders fields the cannon boom
And fitful flashes light the gloom,
While up above, like eagles, fly
The fierce destroyers of the sky;
With stains the earth wherein you lie
Is redder than the poppy bloom
In Flanders fields.

Sleep on, ye brave. The shrieking shell
The quaking trench, the startled yell,
The fury of the battle hell
Shall wake ye not: for all is well.
Sleep peacefully; for all is well.
Your flaming torch aloft we bear,
With burning heart an oath we swear
To keep the faith, to fight it through,
To crush the foe or sleep with you
In Flanders fields.—Galbraith.

Morality is a splendid virtue, but you will be eternally damned if you expect to keep your soul out of perdition.

The Thorn In the Flesh

By Mrs. Eliza Armstrong Cox

Many explanations of what the "thorn in the flesh" was that Paul carried about with him have been given by preachers, teachers, and other folk, and it still remains unexplained. It was certainly a most grievous thing to secure and no human power could manage it. So he besought the Lord, the only one who could help him.

"Three times" and "besought", indicate a most earnest wrestling for deliverance, not less so than was Jacob's when his life and that of his whole family were in immediate peril. It must have been a heart sorrow and humiliation that seriously threatened his life and power for service. But he must serve. He had seen the Lord and from him had accepted a great trust.

There is a significant absence of reference on the part of Paul, to his family or domestic life. When he says, "I know how to be abased," and "I suffered the loss of

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

GOD THE OWNER OF ALL—Psa. 50:1-12. "For every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. . . . If I were hungry, I would not tell thee: for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof." And yet we are wont to lay claim to everything in earth and sea and sky!

TUESDAY

RECOGNIZING GOD'S CLAIMS—Mal. 3:7-12. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. . . . In tithes and offerings. . . . Bring ye all the tithes into the store, . . ." But that is just what vast numbers of Christian people are refusing to do. God doesn't mean us, they excusingly remark; "the law is for the Jew only." But God's claims do not rest upon the Jewish law; they belong to the relation. The principle of the tithe is unalterable.

WEDNESDAY

STEWARDSHIP REWARDED—Prov. 3:1-10. "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of all thine increase: so shall thy barns be filled with plenty and thy presses shall burst with new wine." There are very fundamental reasons why he who makes faithful and sincere recognition of his stewardship is more prosperous than he would be if he failed to do this.

THURSDAY

IDEAL STEWARDS OF MONEY—2 Cor. 8:1-9. " . . . the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality. For to their power, I bear record, yea, and beyond their power they were willing of themselves; praying us with much entreaty that we should receive the gift, . . ." Such liberality is as unusual now as it was then, and when found deserves as much commendation.

FRIDAY

STEWARDSHIP OF GRACE—1 Peter 4:7-11. "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God." He who enjoys the grace of God cannot safely withhold it from another and keep it for himself.

SATURDAY

GIVING CHEERFULLY—2 Cor. 9:6-15. "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." It takes the heart of the giver with the gift to make it valuable. Too much of the giving of Christians is not really giving; it is more like paying taxes—it is done grudgingly.

SUNDAY

PROPORTIONATE GIVING—1 Cor. 16:1-3, 9-13. "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." If the church should faithfully obey this counsel today, it could dispense with its multiplicity of noisome "gatherings" to which it resorts to make ends meet.—G. S. B.

all things," he gives us a possible little glimpse behind the domestic curtain.

It has been the way of the Jews ever since Christianity came into the field as a competitor of Judaism to persecute most mercilessly those who abandon the latter for the former. Paul could be no exception, and we can at once see him driven from home, penniless, and with the anathemas of father, mother, brothers and sisters, wife and children, (we have no proof that he did not have all of these) heaped upon him. Here was a living sorrow to goad him to the end, one prolonged heart agony. How he would pray to have the condition changed! "Three times" may refer to three separate most earnest efforts to bring about a reconciliation but with hopeless results.

But he was given the greater victory of triumphing over it all by the power of God. He was thus given an opportunity to prove his worthiness of Christ by standing the test of placing family and dear ones second to his devotion to the Lord Jesus Christ. He seized the weapon that Satan had forged against him and turned it into a sword of power for the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Of what value is Paul's experience to us? How many there are going through life goaded all the way by a most excruciating something that must be endured. It can't be talked about. We are all the time cringing for fear it will be mentioned. It can't be explained. It may be something lying back in the family history, a business mistake, an unhappy marriage relation, the wayward son or daughter, the imbecile in the family.

Any of these and many others may constitute a thorn that is unbearable, and yet it must be borne; a source of suffering that we would give anything and everything to have taken out of life, but it is still there.

Now for the lesson from Paul's experience. If he could triumph with a thorn in the flesh, so can we, for the same source of power is available for us. When he exclaimed, "I have fought a good fight", this victory over his thorn must have been included. God's grace can still turn defeats into victories and enable us to exclaim, "I can—through Christ!"

The Sayings and Commandments of Jesus

By Samuel Kiehl

Men and women, boys and girls, according to Galatians 3:26 become children (sons) of God by faith in Christ Jesus; to whom he saith, If ye love me keep my commandments (John 14:15.) To say that the sayings and commandments of Jesus have become obsolete, out of date, non-essential for the salvation of the soul, and, the development of Christian character contradicts his word; for he saith, Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away (Matt. 24:35). "Thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name." Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words (which include his sayings and commandments), in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels (Mark 8:38).

We (if faithful believers in Christ) have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. He is the propitiation for our sins. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him (1 John 2:1-4). All liars, and the abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone (Rev. 21:8). A very undesirable place or condition in which the disobedient church member, though living among the upper crust of society here, shall spend eternity with such extremely immoral, uncongenial, satan-possessed, and, apparently God-forsaken associates. To avoid such a catastrophe, now is the time to receive Christ as your Savior and Lord, and faithfully obey him.

The final state or condition of those who obey, and those who do not obey is told in the following Scriptures: Whosoever heareth these sayings (Matt. 5:6, 7) of mine, saith Jesus, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock; and the rains descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew and beat upon that house; and it fell not; for it was founded upon a rock (Matt. 7:24, 25). He also saith, In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you, I go to prepare a place for you . . . I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also (John 14:23). In his (Christ's) presence is fulness of joy (Psa. 16:11). But those who will not obey the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power (2 Thes 1:8, 9). Everlasting destruction means annihilation or its equivalent, which is everlasting separation from the presence and glory of him who was delivered for our offences, and was raised again for our justification (Rom. 4:25).

It is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him (1 Cor. 2:9). But who love him? Jesus who is God manifest in the flesh, saith, He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me. If a man love me, he will keep my words (sayings and commandments); and my Father will love him, and we (the Father and the Son) will come unto him, and make our abode with him (John 14:21, 23). A holy, heavenly Trinity; the Father, the Son, and a true believer. Dear reader, can you and the writer be classed with that trinity of holy, supernatural persons? Let us examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith (2 Cor. 13:5).

SWEET PEACE

There is a sweet peace which passeth all understanding. It makes the king on his throne and his lowliest subject common brothers of the same happy family. It causes the rich and the poor to know that they have together a glorious inheritance in eternity. It smooths out the rough places in life, makes placid the turbid waters of death, and illumines the way into that bourn from which no traveler has ever returned. It is without money and without price, yet its value is incalculable.

It is that blessed assurance that comes with the new birth of the soul that we have been adopted into the family of God and made joint heirs with Jesus Christ to all the supernal glories that lie beyond the grave.

O, that all would seek earnestly this sweet peace, for to thus seek it means to find it!

Children's Day Poem

A dreary place would be this earth,
Were there no little people in it;
The song of life would lose its mirth
Were there no children to begin it.

No little forms, like buds, to grow,
And make the admiring heart surrender;
No little hands on breast and brow,
To keep the thrilling love-chords tender.

The sterner souls would grow more stern,
Unfeeling nature more inhuman,
And man to stoic coldness turn,
And woman would be less than woman.

Life's song, indeed, would lose its charm,
Were there no babies to begin it;
A doleful place this world would be,
Were there no little people in it.

—John G. Whittier.

Introduction

Herod Agrippa (whose death is recorded by history as A. D. 44) was deputy king of Judea. He persecutes the Christians, murders the Apostle James and imprisons Peter, vs. 1-4. Peter is liberated by an angel in answer to the prayers of the church for him, to the no small perplexity of his persecutors, vs. 5-19. Herod in the midst of his pride and pomp, is struck by an angel and dies miserably, vs. 20-23. After his death the gospel has good success, and Paul and Barnabas return to Antioch, vs. 24, 25.

Two Ways of Deliverance

"How different to the eye of sense the dealings of God with some of his servants from his dealings with others! Those he gloriously delivers; these he appears to abandon to their foes; the three children are brought forth altogether unscathed from the fiery furnace; the Maccabean martyrs perish in the flames; Peter is delivered from the sword of Herod, from that sword which has just been stained with James' blood; one John the malice of an emperor fails to hurt, and he is plunged unharmed into boiling oil; another falls a victim to a wicked woman's spite, and his life is given away at a wanton dancing-girl's request. But shall we therefore conclude that those God delivered, and these he did not deliver? Should we not rather say those were delivered openly, and in the fact of the world—these as really delivered; however, their deliverance did not as manifestly appear."

For What They Prayed

We shall misunderstand their faith, and their reception of the answer, unless we note for what they prayed. (1) Plainly it was first for the release of Peter, if it was God's will. They well know their Master's prayer in Gethsemane, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me: nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt (Matt. 26:39). (2) In connection with a former imprisonment, they prayed "that with all boldness they may speak thy word" (Acts 4:29), so here they prayed that Peter might be sustained and strengthened and comforted. Perhaps the shadow of his former denial of his Lord made their prayer for him more intense. (3) Most of all, that Christ's kingdom might prosper; and all that came to Peter might, in some wise way, aid the cause dearer than life to him and to them.—Illustrated Quarterly.

True Conception of Prayer

"We should dismiss at once the idea of prayer as petition, explanation or effort to conform a higher will to our will. Many people feel that prayer is the easiest way out of their difficulties and the majority of people do not think of prayer until in trouble.

"The true conception of prayer is to order one's life, hourly and daily, by a defense against trouble. Prayer is a continual effort to remain in harmony with the divine things. It is possible to develop that sort of prayer which is constant. Every life of aspiration, every evidence of love, everything that makes us comrades of the Eternal, has prayer quality.

"True prayer is so subjecting one's will and actions to the law of nature as it exists, that the spiritual inspiration which one can receive by conference with the spirit of love will give the strength and judgment to obey the laws of nature. People can feel a comradeship with God that they are partners together in the development of spiritual excellency.

"Prayer is the soul's sincere desire. That desire which makes for a great prayer life is one we plan ourselves through that desire in which the law of development and growth comes into a harmonious relationship with life. We can fortify our souls against disaster by obedience to the harmonic laws which relate to the fine purification of spiritual personality. We can be factors in this world, not through subjection, but through cooperation, for true prayer is cooperating with God.

"There is one heart, one mind, one soul and one life, and as long as we obey the laws of that unity and develop a spiritual perception of our needs towards the unity expression, then we will be like him for we shall see him as he is."

"Have you ever had the experience of praying, with intensest passion and with tears, that God would deliver you from some threatening fate, and found that the dreaded thing came on with relentless steps nevertheless?

"When you give yourself into God's hands the money you think you need may come, but it may not. Helpers may appear and open up a path for you to walk in, but you may be thrown back upon your own initiative. You may be saved from the experience you dread, but, on the other hand, the woeful darkness of bereavement, or torture of whatever sort, may come upon you just as if you had never prayed.

"Prayer is not a magic, guaranteed to bring what is asked for. If God's wisdom and care provide for struggle instead of ease, or for death instead of life, is not that what you want really, if you have really given yourself to God to be a worker together with him for transcendent ends? That is life's goal—that the human soul shall shine in its tabernacle. If you are not delivered from suffering, you may be delivered through suffering. And that may be a greater thing."

LINCOLN NOT A NULLIFICATIONIST

By Senator William E. Borah

It does not seem to me quite fair to quote Abraham Lincoln in favor of nullification, for I take it that no severer test could have been played upon his loyalty to the Constitution than to place slavery upon the one side and the Constitution upon the other and ask him to choose his course.

He chose his course and never faltered. He did not belong to that group of political philosophers who think because a law is wrong that you have a right to defy it, and that because a constitutional provision does not suit your view of righteousness you have a right to nullify it and trample it under foot.

In one of the statements sent out to the country by those who are advocating the doctrine of nullification of prohibition laws, you will find a sentence to this effect: "The nullification of the Fugitive Slave Law developed men like Abraham Lincoln." This seems to be a clear statement to the effect that Abraham Lincoln as to the Fugitive Slave Law advocated nullification.

The very reverse is true—he gave his life for the integrity of the Constitution. As far back as in 1858 he declared in a public speech: "I have always hated slavery."

I do not believe you will find among all his letters and public addresses the use of this word "hate" save in connection with the institution of slavery. The word seems never to have passed his lips except when speaking of human bondage. He did hate slavery.

But while he hated slavery he was devoted to our institutions and believed in our Constitution. "I have always hated slavery but I have always been quiet about it until this new era. . . . By the Constitution all assented to it (slavery) in the States where it exists. We have no right to interfere with it, because it is in the Constitution and we are by both duty and inclination bound to stick by that Constitution in all its letter and spirit from the beginning to the end."

Speaking of the Fugitive Slave Law he said: "We must not withhold an efficient fugitive slave law, because the Constitution requires us, as I understand it, not to withhold such a law."

In one of the most notable occasions in his career he declared: "Our safety, our liberty, depends upon preserving the Constitution of the United States as our fathers made it, inviolate."

The Education of Comfortas

By Orville D. Ullom

While Comfortas was still a child, his father, the king, was called to a distant province to put down a war. After many days he returned, having journeyed far and having gathered much treasure. All the city went forth to meet the king and brought him with shouts to his own city. Afterward when every man had returned to his own house, the king went into the palace to receive reports from his servants and to give presents to those who in his absence had guarded the royal interests. To the faithful officer who had kept the frontier the king gave a sword; to his own minister he gave a wedge of gold; the queen received a pearl and some silken stuffs; last of all came the young child, Comfortas, whom the king loved as he loved his own life. And because the boy was to be sent to a far off province, that he there might learn to depend upon himself, and gather strength for ruling others, the king gave to his youngest son the costliest present of all. Calling Comfortas to his side, the king placed in his hands a small casket. "Guard it well, always remember that it holds treasures with which you can buy cities." Then having charged Comfortas not to open the casket until the end of his journey, he sent him forth into a far province where dwelt the queen's parents. Having reached the appointed city, the boy opened his jewel box to behold not gold and rubies, but only a few brown seeds with some shrunken roots and bulbs. At first, Comfortas was angry, but afterward he began to ponder what these things might mean, for he knew that some secret was hidden here. But while he mused his heart began to burn within him, for he felt that through him his father sent a gift to the people of that impoverished land. He saw the seed swell, aching with its sheaf; he saw the roots go toward vineyard and orchard; he saw the acorns become oaks, to which came birds and beasts and weary men for shade and shelter; he saw the people go with shouts toward threshing-floor and wine-press, while caravans came from distant lands to exchange their gold for his corn; and so he and his people passed from poverty unto plenty. In that hour Comfortas rejoiced exceedingly, for now he saw that these seeds had shrunken roots and bulbs hid treasure so great as to make gold petty and gems contemptible; and he counted that hour the greatest hour in his life, for he learned that a youth was to be like a husbandman who planted seeds and then waited a long time for the harvest. So Comfortas looked about him to see how he should plant his talents and how he should grow his gifts. And knitting his brow to the daily task, he grew strong through labor and struggle and self-reliance. But all this time Comfortas knew not that his elder brother was growing weak and effeminate, dwelling in the palace and doing easy duty at home.

Herein were the grounds of happiness for Comfortas. He willingly accepted the task and temperament that God had appointed him. He saw that he could not add one cubit to his stature, or make one hair white or black, and that he was impotent to alter his birthgifts. Others have made the choice for us as far as our innate gifts are concerned, even as was the case with Comfortas. Try as we may we cannot alter that choice, though in trying we can break our hearts. The eagle was built to soar and see, the lark to soar and sing. Neither troubles itself about the size of the other; by not troubling, both are happy. If the eagle has the advantage in size, the lark makes it up in singing; and this law of compensation holds in men, called great and small. Many destroy their life happiness by fretting over their gifts, naming their task obscure and their duties petty. What has size to do with values? On one side of a ten-cent piece an engraver wrote the Lord's prayer, the Apostles' Creed, the Parable of the Talents and the Rich Man, and the first four Psalms, adding his name and the date. And on a great rock, another man with a bucket of whitewash, paints, in letters ten feet high, his advertisement. Is the engraver's task petty, because his letters were small? And is the advertiser's work great,

What Does Nature Teach Us About God?

Ps. 19:1-6

"Mother, school closes tomorrow. Please take us on a picnic the very first day that we are out."

"All right, Elizabeth," said mother, "If it is pretty we'll do just that. We'll get up early and fix our picnic lunch. You and Mary will have to help to get the things ready to eat. The boys can help me get the work done around the house."

Just then Jack came and hearing the discussion about a picnic, he immediately wanted to know if all the lunch couldn't be packed in his kit. "I would like to hike and carry the lunch in my kit."

"All right," said mother, "you may have the lunch in your kit. We'll fix the fishing poles all together for Paul to carry. The rest of the things will have to be put in small packages for Elizabeth and Mary and me."

"Will daddy come after us in the evening like he used to do last summer?" asked Elizabeth.

"We'll ask him," said mother. "He might even be willing to take us out to supper like he did some times before this."

All that day and the next, the four children made plans for their first picnic of the summer. Then the picnic day dawned bright and clear. The four children and their mother got up very early and soon were at work on their tasks. Each was trying to finish his or her tasks first. The little girls won the race. They finished the lunch and packed it in the kit and still had time to help Jack and Paul finish their work. By school time, they were ready to set forth.

They decided to go to the closest spot that they could find, where they could fish and swim and play. When they reached the river, everyone of them got out their fishing pole and line and started fishing. The girls were not such very good fishermen or fisherwomen, but the two boys had caught quite a few fish in their lives, and they were anxious to see which of them could get the first fish.

Almost before they knew it mother had stopped fishing and had their lunch ready for them to eat. She called to them, "It's dinner time. Better come running."

Everyone was hungry, but before they started eating they bowed their heads and mother asked the blessing. After dinner mother said, "Now we'll all go over under that big willow tree and talk a little while before we go back to our fishing. In a couple of hours we'll all go swimming, but the first thing we are going to do is to go up under that nice tree and talk together."

When they were all seated, mother took out a little Bible and read the nineteenth Psalm. Then she turned to several other scripture verses that she especially liked to read. All the verses were about Nature and God. When she had finished reading, she talked to the children about the beautiful things all about them. They looked all about them at the green hills, the big shady trees and the river with the sunshine on it. Everything was oh, so beautiful. Mother said, "When you children become older you will enjoy the beauty about you even more than you do now, but I want you to realize even now that this is a beautiful world that God has given to his children to live in. God must have loved us very much when he prepared a place like this for us to spend our days. Do you remember any of the lessons that we learned last summer on our picnics?"

Elizabeth was the first to speak, "God is smiling on us when the sun shines so brightly all about us."

Paul said, "And he is blessing us when he sends the showers of rain."

Jack added, "All the pretty cedar trees point toward heaven to help us to remember that God is above and we must look up to him."

Mary thought a little then said, "Since all of Nature teaches us about God, we ought to love Nature and love God. Maybe we might help others to love God, too."

When the children had stopped talking, mother bowed her head and prayed that they might all be pure and clean like the sunshine and the great out-of-doors that they loved.

Then they went back to their play and evening came all too soon. They went home, loving Nature and God more than ever before, and mother promised that they could go on a picnic again before long.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

CANTON CHURCH IS DEDICATED

Sunday, May 8th was one of the greatest days ever enjoyed by the Brethren at Canton, Ohio. It was on that day that they first occupied their new home on the corner of Hartford Avenue and Second Street, N. E., which location is one block east and one block north of the old church.

The Old Church Building

The day began auspiciously with a Sunday school attendance of 385. Even during the Sunday school hour visitors began arriving from our neighboring churches, Louisville, Middlebranch, Smithville-Sterling, Ashland, Springfield Center. During the three services of the day, and each one was a long one, practically all the available space was occupied. The program as arranged was carried through without a hitch, with the exception of two surprises that were "pulled" on the Chairman of the Building Committee, Mr. F. B. Lindower, and the pastor. At the close of the morning service and just following the dedication proper, Mr. F. E. Clapper presented Brother Lindower with a fine loving cup in token of the appreciation of the church of his fine and unselfish service in the work of erection of the new edifice. Brother Lindower, who is a contractor, assumed the supervision of the erection, became the buying agent, and attended to practically all the detail work of the erection, using his own men and machinery and without one cent of profit to himself, thereby saving the church into the thousands of dollars. Not content with what they had done to Brother Lindower, Brother S. W. Link next took the floor and proceeded to "hand" the pastor a beautiful desk lamp, given by the membership in token of their love. And for once the pastor was "speechless." It is a joy to work with these people.

The basket dinner in the basement was an enjoyable occasion and over two hundred were seated at the tables during the noon hour.

The afternoon fellowship hour was one that we have never seen equaled. At the invitation of Brother Beachler the money literally "poured in." When we consider that the congregation had been canvassed to the (as we thought) limit of its ability, the sum subscribed during the afternoon and evening was a revelation of the sincerity and purposefulness of the people of the church and community. Three thousand seven hundred dollars was the net result of the day. With the old location for sale and unencumbered and with the canvass already made this leaves the present new church finances in fine shape and the load of debt will not be such as to cause any heart aches or "broken backs."

Right here we want to say a few words of appreciation as to the service rendered by Dr. Beachler. His was a fine service throughout the entire day. His two sermons, morning and evening, were enjoyed by a fine and attentive body of people. His own inimitable way of presenting the financial needs of the church proved to be a pleasing and forceful method of "raising the cash." We wish to extend our thanks to the Dayton church for permitting him to be absent on one of their big days, Mother's Day.

In the closing moments of the evening service the pastor accepted a call for another year of service with the Canton church, the call taking effect September 1st. This is our eighth year of service with this fine consecrated people, and we pray God that his blessing may always abound in their midst. Brethren pray for us.

This report would be incomplete if we failed to speak of two other high points of the services of the day. At the morning hour nine new members were received into the church, all coming by baptism. One of the ten baptized in the new baptistry remains to be received. Two remain to be baptized and two were received by letter on Sunday the 15th. The other high point was the singing of the choir during the day. It was of the finest order and well received. We feel that the Canton choir, under the direction of F. E. Clapper, is one of the finest volunteer organizations in this part of the country.

Description of the Building

The new church, while not an imposing edifice, is one of substantial and attractive construction. Situated sufficiently distant from the main traveled thoroughfare to avoid the distraction of traffic noise, yet it is near enough to be easily accessible to the car line, and is built upon a prominent enough corner to present a fine appearance from Tuscarawas Street, which is Lincoln Highway through our city.

The church itself is constructed of brick of mingled shades, set off with stone copings. The windows are of a shade of amber-green that brings out a very soft and pleasing light for the interior. The inner structure is supported by steel construction furnished by the American Bridge Company, one of Canton's own firms. S. W. Link is employed as draftsman for this company and under his direction the men of the church erected the steel at a considerable saving. The Building Committee decided to become its own contractor, and under the able guidance of F. B. Lindower, upon whom brother of the late M. A. Witter, was the preacher. After the evening services it was determined to organize a Sunday school. D. W. Weirick was elected as the first Superintendent. The first session of the school was held the following Sunday, July 17th.

For nearly three years this band of faithful people worshipped together in the City Hall before determining to organize into a church body. After having moved into the

PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA

Although it has been but a few weeks since our last report to the "Evangelist", several important events have occurred in the Pittsburgh church, the publication of which we feel should not be further delayed.

Perhaps foremost among these is the splendid Cantata: "Olivet to Calvary," which our own choir, with the assistance of some outside talent, rendered in the church on Easter Sunday night. Every available bit of seating space in both the Main Auditorium and balcony was taken by an appreciative audience. The solemnity of this Sacred Cantata pervaded throughout its rendition. We can scarcely find sufficient words of praise to our own choir for this, their supreme effort. A large delegation of members from the Church of the Brethren was also placed in attendance, they having recalled their own services for this occasion.

Then the next Sunday evening was the time for our communion service. 108 of our members engaged in the carrying out of these sacred ordinances, which is quite a good representation.

Important and unusual events seemed to follow each other in rapid succession, for, on the evening of Friday, April 29th, it was our privilege to have with us the Ashland College Girls' Glee Club, rendering their last program of a week's tour. A goodly number of the members and their friends were present, and we are sure that all enjoyed the very good concert rendered by the girls. Many favorable comments were heard. We wish to thank the authorities of the College for having included Pittsburgh in the tour of the Club, and we hope that the next time the Club is on a like tour we shall have the privilege of again being included in the itinerary.

We are glad to report that Brother Lynn is "back on the job" again, having recovered sufficiently from his recent throat infection to permit him to take up his duties in the pulpit once more. We do regret, however, to say that Brother Lynn is going to leave us. He presented his resignation to our official board, who passed it on to the Quarterly Business meeting on April 13th. The resignation was held over for a special business meeting of the church on April 27th to afford a committee an interim of time to confer with Brother Lynn about the matter. But at the special business meeting, Rev. Lynn's resignation was accepted, with the deepest regret of the Pittsburgh church. In his resignation, Rev. Lynn had outlined several reasons for it. He felt led to accept the persistent call from the Roanoke church, and endeavor, with the assistance of those people, to build up the work of God's Kingdom in that place. But how the Pittsburgh brethren shall miss him when he has gone to another field of labor. Five years Brother Lynn and his good wife have been with us, and in those five years they have become near and dear to us. They have become as one of us. We shall miss the very able sermons of Brother Lynn, but we must resign ourselves to the decision and rest in the assurance that Brother Lynn is going into another field of endeavor, where he shall continue to do his good work and advance the cause of the Kingdom as he did so well for the Pittsburgh church.

was placed the responsibility of the supervision of all construction, the work has progressed to final completion rapidly and systematically.

The inside of the building is handily arranged and consists of basement, main floor and balcony. The basement is used for the children's division and is a large, light and airy room, equipped for the purpose. It is likewise used as a dining and assembly room. The kitchen is equipped in modern fashion, having an instantaneous water heater, giving hot water to every part of the building; twelve-hole gas range, the gift of the W. M. S.; large sink and plenty of cupboard room. The heating comes from two large hot-air furnaces equipped with fans which gives ventilation as well as heat. The finish of the basement is silver gray and the lighting effect is soft and restful.

The auditorium is the same dimension as that of the old church. The floor is covered with cork carpet and deadens the sound. Five fine Sunday school rooms open on this auditorium and above these in the balcony these five rooms are duplicated, giving ten large class rooms. The main part of the church is finished in gum and stained walnut. The pulpit and flower stands are the handiwork of Mr. Grover Schrantz, and the entire pulpit furniture, with the exception of the carpet, was donated by the Young Married People's Class. The carpet is the gift of the girls of the church.

The two large windows were placed by the W. M. S. and Mrs. T. J. Smith. The bell, which calls to worship, is the gift of the We Pals Class. The grand piano is the gift of the Men's Bible Class. Space forbids the mention of others who have given toward the complete equipment. Our thanks go out to all.

Historical

The Brethren first held services in Canton on July 10, 1904 in the Assembly room of the City Hall. Dr. C. Orville Witter, W. C. T. U. rooms the church was organized by Dr. C. F. Yoder, then of Ashland, on May 26, 1907, with Rev. H. M. Oberholtzer as pastor; Vina Snyder as secretary, and P. M. Snyder and George B. Hang were chosen as deacons and Mrs. George B. Hang and Amanda Snyder as deaconesses. The original membership was forty-five.

A movement arose early in 1908, under the pastorate of Rev. E. H. Smith, to build a church edifice. To this end a lot was purchased on the corner of Tuscarawas Street, E and Schwalm Avenue. The cornerstone of this building was laid in the summer of 1909. The church was dedicated by Dr. A. D. Gnagey on December 5, 1909. The building committee of this venture was Rev. E. H. Smith, pastor; P. M. Snyder, W. I. Zellers and U. S. Snyder, trustees; T. M. Stump, T. J. Smith and J. A. Guiley.

The church grew and under the leadership of Rev. Dyoll Belote the mortgage was paid in 1920. Further expansion forced the issue and the new church became a necessity. To this end lots were purchased on Hartford Avenue and Second Street, N. E. After much prayer and planning and through four years of hoping, there arose the church as it now stands. With little ready cash, but with a great faith in God, we proceeded with the following building committee: F. C. Vanator, pastor; F. B. Lindower, F. E. Clapper, F. E. Smith, M. S. Itskin and S. W. Link. The cornerstone was laid on September 12, 1926, Dr. R. R. Teeter being the speaker of the day. Today we dedicate. For such favor we thank Almighty God.

The following have served as pastors: Dr. C. Orville Witter, 1904-1905; Rev. H. M. Oberholtzer, 1905-1907; Rev. E. H. Smith, (deceased) 1907-1909; Dr. A. D. Gnagey, 1909-1911; Rev. D. F. Eikenberry, 1911-1913; Dr. R. R. Teeter, 1913-1915; Supplied

North Liberty, Indiana, Steps Forward

This church is located about 20 miles southwest of South Bend. They have a good church property and parsonage. Brother John Clark is their pastor and is dividing his time between the church here and at Tiosa. Brother Clark is an enthusiastic Ashland supporter and did everything he could in helping make the canvass.

I had expected to make the canvass here earlier in the season while in this locality, but was hindered on account of a bank failure in this place, which has worked a hardship on some of the people.

I found the people of this church in full sympathy with the College and willing to do their part. My work here was made easy by their co-operation and in not trying to stall by alibis and putting one off.

I think that North Liberty, with local finances in the condition they are, did well. The total gift was $1,169.42. W. S. BELL.

P. S.—I have heard enough alibis for not giving while on this campaign to fill several volumes. I find it is not a question of can I give as much as do I want to give? I find wherever I go that what people want most, they have. I think it mighty poor stewardship and a shameful way to treat the work of God, to spend money for everything we want for ourselves and if there is anything left to grudgingly give God's work a pittance. Why make God last? Why should his work suffer, that we might cater to ourselves? W. S. B.

NEWS FROM JOHNSTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA, SECOND CHURCH

It is doubtless time that some word should emanate from the region of the Second Brethren church, of Johnstown. It has not been that we have been idle in this portion of the Lords' vineyard, but things have been happening rather rapidly, and so the matter of writing for the church paper has been neglected. Of course we enjoy seeing how things are progressing at other points, and we have no defense to make for failing to contribute a portion of the field.

Work at this point continues to make commendable progress, though not of a startling character. All the regular services of the congregation are maintained in orderly fashion. All the various auxiliaries of an established congregation are maintained, with one or two exceptions. The exceptions are not in any way in opposition to the general plans of the brotherhood, but due to a lack of people to make it advisable to organize. It is my settled conviction that it is better to have too few auxiliaries rather than try to maintain all of them and have several weak, struggling organizations. When conditions warrant we shall conclude such additional auxiliaries as may be necessary.

The enrollment in our Bible school has now climbed to 102, with an average attendance of about 85-90. The work of the school is graded as closely as conditions will warrant, and all conveniences and helps are secured for the teachers and pupils as the requests are made by the teachers. There seems to be a live interest in the work of the school and new faces are seen frequently at the sessions. We are striving for greater efficiency among the teaching force, and encouraging the making of earnest preparation on the part of the teachers. A system of Certificate Awards is being used to induce the Bible school scholars to remain for the morning preaching hour, and is bringing commendable results.

Attendance at the preaching services of the church continues to increase. Recently we have had the pleasure of seeing some former members—who had not attended during the present pastorate—at the services. It is encouraging to the pastor to note an increased note of confidence in the stability of the work being done. At a specially appointed meeting of the members of the congregation on Wednesday evening, May 4, two deacons and three deaconesses were chosen, so that we have a full complement of these helpers for the congregation, a condition we did not have previously. These new officers will be ordained in the near future.

Our evangelistic campaign, conducted by Elder J. L. Gingrich, of the Third church, of Johnstown, was a very successful and encouraging undertaking. Brother Gingrich is one of the younger men of the denomination, but has already proved himself an energetic and forceful speaker and worker. The campaign lasted for three full weeks, and the interest during the period was exceptionally good. The evangelist proclaimed the whole truth, without apology or compromise, and while some differed a bit they still respected the speaker and returned to hear still more. The immediate results were as follows: Received by letter and relation, 7; by confession and baptism 7; remaining to be baptized, 4; reconsecrations 8; total 22. Of course the real gains to the membership in numbers will be 18, but in the amount of good accomplished figures are not the proper vehicle for conveying information. It was a pleasure to work with Brother Gingrich, because we have been neighboring pastors for some seven or eight years and I have come to know and love him as an earnest and consecrated laborer for the Lord. Our associations in the weeks of the campaign but cemented our freindship the closer.

One of the most recent happenings in the routine of congregational activities was the coming of the Ashland College Girls' Glee Club among us. The writer was in a measure responsible for the coming of the Club, and it meant some real work and the loss of considerable sleep to carry out the plans for the tour of the Club among the churches of Johnstown and vicinity, but we put it across and sent the Club back to Ashland, after having paid their traveling expenses, kept them in our homes while among us, and listened with satisfaction and pride to the very fine work which the girls from "Our Own School" did at every point. They won the respect and praise of all the Brethren who heard them, and incidentally quite a number of young people are asking questions about Ashland College—which is what the College authorities wanted, I believe.

The Moxham group is planning to co-operate in the putting on of a Community Daily Vacation Bible School in this part of the city, the schools to open on June 13 and close on July 1. There seemed to be a real desire among the churches of the community for a Community school and because of previous experience the writer has been asked to have general supervision of the project. It had been our intention to conduct our own school if the Community enterprise had not been launched. We believe in the D. V. B. S. and shall endeavor to make the enterprise a real success.

The congregation is experiencing a real satisfaction in the use of their new church building. After the inconveniences and unattractiveness of the old building, it is most encouraging to the workers to have a nice, commodious building in which to work and worship. For this added convenience this congregation is duly grateful. And now with rather frequent additions to the membership from time to time, the prospects for the continued growth of this work are quite promising. We need, and crave, an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood that we may be wisely and continually led by the Spirit to lay a broad and deep foundation whereon a permanent and glorious structure may be reared to the glory of our common Master and Lord.

We rejoice in the reports from other quarters of the brotherhood of the gains being made and the plans that have proven successful. Our prayers unite with those of the whole fraternity that the continued blessing of an All-Wise Creator may continue to be vouchsafed unto us for our tasks, and that we may see great things come to pass for the glory of the Kingdom and the Coming King.

Fraternally,
DYOLL BELOTE.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA TO FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

Since the last report from Roanoke the church and all of its auxiliaries have been making commendable progress. The attendance at the services of the church has been good, especially so at the prayer meetings. They have the largest percentage of members attending prayer meeting of any church I ever attended. The Woman's Missionary Society has taken on new life in recent months. The Sunday school, the S. M. M., and the Christian Endeavor societies have been doing effective work under the leadership of consecrated and efficient workers. For the most part the membership were anxious to cooperate in the work of the church. Because of a widely scattered membership we had an Annual Every-Member-Fellowship Canvass, the lay members doing the visiting. This proved mighty effective and helpful, and should prove so in any church, large or small. Since the last report six persons have been received into church membership—five by baptism and one by letter. Our Passion Week services this year were conducted by the Billy Sunday Men's Club of Roanoke, and although there were no confessions, there were many reconsecrations, and the services proved inspirational to all.

About the time of our last report (Christmas), the congregation presented the writer with a liberal purse, and many beautiful and useful gifts were left at the parsonage by both members and friends of the church, for each member of the family.

On the last Sunday in March Mrs. Jacob Nininger of Roanoke, passed to her eternal reward. She was not a member of the Brethren church, but her husband, who passed away a few years ago was. Mrs. Nininger was a member of the Presbyterian church, but was seldom if ever visited by members of her own church. She was practically an invalid and was visited often by Brethren pastors serving Roanoke. She loved to talk of spiritual things and particularly of her future home with the Lord. In her will, after leaving a number of bequests to relatives she specified that the remainder of her estate should go to the Trustees of the Roanoke church to be used as they see fit for the educating of young men for the ministry of our denomination. A conservative estimate places the amount thus intrusted to our trustees at more than twenty thousand dollars. If a friend of the church is willing to do this much, surely we should expect our own well-to-do members scattered all over the country, to remember the worthy causes of the church in their wills.

Despite the fact that everything seemed to be going as well as could be expected, we felt that we could do more effective work in some field other than our home town, so we requested to be relieved of our duties before the end of the pastoral year, and the request was granted. Space does not permit the mentioning of names, but we sincerely appreciate the kindness, good will, hospitality and cooperation shown time and time again by so many of the Roanoke Brethren. We desire to thank again, in this public way, the members who gave us the use of their Ford while in Roanoke. It was an invaluable aid to our work because of the scattered membership.

May God's richest blessings rest upon each member and friend of the church, upon Brother A. L. Lynn as he takes up his duties there, and upon Brother G. O. Walton as he labors among you as supply pastor!

Receiving a call from the Falls City church, we arrived here during the last week of April, and have met pleasant surprises at every turn. Coming from the beauties of the Shenandoah Valley of Old Virginia to Falls City, which had been characterized as "where the west begins and the pavement ends", naturally we were not anticipating a beautiful country, but the realization showed that our anticipations were entirely wrong. The man who wrote the above characterization certainly was not writing about the town of Falls City—pavement is the rule here and not the exception. It is a mighty progressive little town. And what is true of the town is also TRUE OF OUR CHURCH. They certainly know how to welcome a pastor, extend hospitality, carry out a public reception, and last and by no means least attend Sunday services—let's hope that the crowds do not decrease. The parsonage was given some attention before our arrival. It had been cleaned, some repairing done, and new light fixtures installed. When we were ready to uncrate our goods a committee was present and helped greatly. We thank Falls City for what they have already done and pray that God may use us in a worthwhile way as we work together in his name.

HERBERT H. ROWSEY.

FROM AN ITINERATING EVANGELIST

Dear Evangelist: We had a splendid communion service in the home of Brother Charles Workman near Millsboro, Delaware, on Friday night, April 29. This was a spiritual uplift to these good people. Several communed for the first time. All seemed to enter into the spirit of the service. Every member testified publicly, expressing their appreciation of the service.

I am glad to say the third church has hired Brother Braker as their pastor. He has served this church for 13 years. As he works for the Sunday School Union he can afford to serve them cheaper than any one else. This will give them a chance to reduce the debt of their new church.

I certainly have enjoyed serving them in this emergency, although they were much discouraged because of the death of dear Brother Witter. The congregations have been increasing in interest and numbers. I will continue to serve them for a few weeks until Brother Braker can arrange to take charge.

There have been three added to the third church by relation since the death of Brother Witter, that have not been reported. I believe this church will awaken from their depressed condition and go on to success.

Will have some good news from Delaware in my next report.

because the letters bulk large? Size has nothing to do with the value of work. The contribution of a one-talent man is just as essential to society's progress as that of the ten-talent man.

God has bestowed upon his every son gifts differing in value, but each one as being necessary and essential to the filling full this world with happiness. At first our duties may seem as insignificant as the seeds of Comfortas, but soon we shall begin to see that we must plant our talents so that they will spring up and produce abundant fruit. The question we are now facing is, "How and where shall we plant them?" This is a question that we must most earnestly face and solve to the complete satisfaction of our own minds and hearts. If that which you desire to engage in demands a college training, then it is essential that you secure college training; if not, you will find happiness and strength through laboring and struggling with the task at hand.

Dear Christian Endeavor Friends, one and all! may it be our lot and indeed our privilege to think and reflect most earnestly upon our Christian Endeavor theme that we are soon to consider. Our lives, our talents and their relationships to our friends about us. Our responsibility in the world and the place we desire that our young life shall fill. My hope is that this meeting may lead many of us to make our decisions: May we follow his leading even as Edwin Markham has said, "In spite of the stares of the wise and the world's derision, dare travel the star blazed road, dare follow the vision." "There is a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood leads on to fortune; Omitted, all the voyage of their life is bound in shallows and in miseries" (Shakespeare). Is it not important that we make our decisions now?

The Christian college may and doubtless will open up new fields of thought and avenues of procedure to us. We face "A Real Life Situation" daily, but many times unreflectively and not thoughtful of whether we are in the right place or not. Those of you who are the official and thus responsible members of your society, will, we are confident, make sure that the "Real Life Situation" program portrays convincingly and challengingly the need of Christian College trained leaders today. And thus do I wish you one and all a happy and profitable meeting. And as we meet together shall we not remember that:

The glory of life is—
To love, not to be loved;
To give, not to get;

To serve, not to be served, and that Jesus has said, "Service is the true test of greatness."

Hartford, Connecticut.

PORTIS, KANSAS

We are falling in line to report in "due season" ere our attention may be called to it by others. We are "emerging" from the winter season in fine shape. The attendance at Bible school for the first quarter of 1927 is in advance of the former one (last quarter of 26) with an average of an even hundred. We had hoped to "shine BIG" for April, as we were way UP the first three Sundays—135, 131, 139—but the last Sunday followed a week of rainy weather and we sure had mud roads a plenty, so we fell down to 56; But the average for April still is 115 plus—hence a gain after all.

The attendance at all the church services is holding up commendably well. We observe all special days. While our offerings for the special departments of the church at large are not up to the goal asked, we have many who are willing to give something. Three years of short crops have a serious effect on finances, but we always make the appeal, and leave the "amount" to the people to settle. At a recent business meeting we had reports from every auxiliary of the church, and each one could be placed on the "honor roll" in make-up and indication of work accomplished.

The W. M. S. have the largest membership they ever had, and they have from 20 to 27 in attendance at the monthly meetings. Recently they conducted an "Advertisers' Sale" in town, in which they cleared right near one hundred dollars in one day. Our women make many dollars through different avenues of work and plans during the year.

The S. M. M. girls are still on the job all the while and are a dependable group. They help support the church budget, give to missions and other worthy causes; have all debts paid which were pledged for this year and some funds on hands besides. They will have charge of the Mother's Day services.

The church building has received the attention of the painters' brush this spring, —hence the ceiling, the floors, and the outside woodwork has a new coating of oils and varnish. New art windows will be placed soon also, these to be purchased by individuals, classes, and the S. M. M. girls. After five years of service in this field we are planning on closing our work with these good people this fall. They have been profitable years in many ways, and have added to our strength of faith, adaptability, and usefulness. The work in general is in good shape, and a field which most any one will like to labor in. Hence, we are open for a call to a new field in the Master's vineyard, and may the good Lord direct as we seek to follow.

VINCO, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear Evangelist:

Just a word from here at this time. The situation at Vinco is beginning to look more hopeful. On Good Friday we baptized two and others await the rite. We will begin a meeting on the 25th of May to close with a communion service on the 5th of June. We kindly invite neighboring churches to share in these blessings with us. Come. We need your help. The Sunday school is prospering very nicely. We expect Brother I. D. Bowman to be with us in a revival service again in September. His many friends that he made when here last fall will be glad to have him come back. After our meeting may give a more extended report.

IN MEMORIAM

ELDER H. S. JACOBS

Henry S. Jacobs, father of President E. E. Jacobs of Ashland College, died in Ashland, May 2, 1927, following an illness of only a few hours. He was aged 82 years at the time of his death and for 20 years had been totally blind. For the past ten years he had resided at the home of Dr. Jacobs, having retired from the ministry in the Brethren church in 1917.

Born in York county, Pa., November 28, 1844, he moved with his parents to Franklin County, Pa., in the spring of 1849. Coming to Ohio in 1856 he settled with his family in Wayne county and in the same year moved to Red Haw, Ashland county. In 1865 he married Sarah Gault and to this union two children were born, Hattie and

The Late Elder H. S. Jacobs

Alvin. In 1872 he was again married to Lizzie Lindsey, to which union two children were born, Peter O. and Edwin E., of which the latter is the only survivor.

Upon uniting with the Brethren church, Brother Jacobs was elected a deacon in 1868 and was called to the ministry August 19, 1873 in the Brethren church, being ordained in 1883. He took the pastorate of the Homerville church October 20, 1883, and remained its pastor until 1917, despite the fact that he lost his eyesight ten years previous to that date. He was a member of the board of education of Homer township for 32 years. Up until the day of his death he was in splendid health and possessed of remarkable memory.

Survivors are two sisters, Mrs. Yost of near Red Haw, and Mrs. Henney of this city; one son, Dr. E. E. Jacobs and three grandchildren, Cassel, Edwin, Jr., and John.

The above facts are largely from one of the briefest autobiographies I ever read. Brother Jacobs wrote the facts of his life more than twenty years ago.

Funeral services were held from the home of Dr. E. E. Jacobs of College avenue, the pastor officiating, assisted by Professor Alva J. McClain and Dr. Martin Shively.

Miss Dorcas Bame sang "Crossing the Bar." Pall bearers were professors of the college. At Homerville church, Dean J. Allen Miller and Rev. George Pontius, the latter pastor of the church, assisted. Burial was made in the Homerville cemetery.

For his text Rev. Bame used the 90th Psalm, verse 12: "So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom." In his sermon he declared that no one would want to challenge the statement that Rev. Jacobs did apply his heart unto wisdom.

"To have found God as a personal friend; to have given a life in humble consecration, preaching the gospel of salvation for men; to have acknowledged the Lordship of Jesus, humbly trying to do the commandments of Jesus without question as to the greatest or the least; to have made the discovery of the assurance of immortality so that he could face death calmly and unafraid; to have had made known to him that he had the right to the hope and the promises of the Word of God; this is applying the heart to wisdom."

He had gained the victory over self and selfishness so that he could give unreservedly and unstintedly of time and talent, to the church he loved. "He left the heritage of a living congregation of worshippers at the Brethren church at Homerville, and an illustrious son and promising grandsons who may be expected to carry forward his hopes and ambitions for world betterment as he, with limitations they can never know, could not have done. Quietly, unafraid, ready he waited for years, for the end to come which came, quickly, easily and not unwelcomed. Peace to his soul in his home in heaven.

CHARLES A. BAME.

NOTICE TO MARYLAND-VIRGINIA CHURCHES

Conference time in this district is not far away, the date being June 14-16 and the place Linwood, Maryland. This ought to make every church do three things at once:

1. Pray for a great and worthwhile conference.
2. Plan to have a large delegation present. The number of delegates is limited but the number from each church permitted to attend is unlimited. Each church is benefited about in the proportion to the number of members attending. Therefore boost for a large number.
3. Pay your District Mission apportionment. And pay it in full. Then you will have your church on the chart with a PERFECT RECORD. And the figures in the credit column opposite your church will be in red. Send remittances to Harry Haun, Secretary, Woodstock, Virginia.

Pastors and all readers in our district, please get busy and look after your apportionment if it has not already been met.

Yours for a great conference,
G. C. CARPENTER,

The College Supplies the Church's First Need

The church needs many things, but there is one thing that it needs supremely. It needs the education of its young people in a Christian school. Few things are more important than that. Young people of ambition will secure for themselves an education even though it may not be provided. It is therefore a most urgent duty that rests upon parents to see that the education of their children is made possible in a Christian school. It makes a world of difference whether a young person returns home from college with his faith shaken or shattered, or whether he comes home with his faith in God and in the church of his father and mother strengthened and fortified. When one finds a college that can be safely trusted from that standpoint, he ought to send his children there, and he ought to recommend it and support it with his means. Ashland College is such a place, and so has a right to and a claim upon the loyalty and support of every member of the Brethren church, and especially upon those who have children. It is not only safe now, but we are assured that it will remain so, for its control is in the hands of men chosen by the church itself. But this need which the college supplies to the church, that of a Christian education to our young people, is not the thing that the church as such really needs most.

There is the need that young people shall be instructed religiously, that they shall be taught the Word, its great doctrines and responsibilities, and be equipped for usefulness in the local church. In other words, they need a religious education, and that is saying something different from what we said in the preceding paragraph where we urged the importance of a Christian education. All education should be Christian, whether in biology or chemistry, or sociology or philosophy, or whatever it be, that is, it should be in harmony with Christian principles and be characterized by the Christian spirit. But not all education deals with religious beliefs and practices. Education in that field is designated as religious education. Of course one could be educated religiously in Mohammedanism or Buddhism, and that would not be Christian, but when Christian people speak of religious education it is obvious that they refer to education in the tenets and requirements of the Christian religion. It is that very thing that is so sorely needed by our young people today, and the lack or meagerness of which by so many proves their weakness morally and spiritually. They yield to temptation often because they have not been fortified by the Word of God, and they are useless or ineffective in their service to the church because they have not been trained. The church has untold wealth of undeveloped talent and undirected energies, for the want of the use of which it is lagging in its progress and often languishing in its life. Train the young people religiously and equip them for service in the church and the church will be repaid many fold and the young people themselves will be greatly ennobled and fortified in life. The church college is performing this service for the young people of the church, a service so vital and far-reachingly significant that it obligates the church to give the college its most unstinted and sacrificial support. But even this is not the most urgent need of the church, judged in the light of the Great Commission.

The most commanding need of the church is for flaming evangelists of the Cross. It needs men and women burdened with a message, and willing to be set apart wholly to the proclamation of that message. It needs heralds, missionaries, messengers, who feel so urgently the moving spirit of the Gospel that they cannot stay, so long as there are those who have never heard the story. The church needs preachers with burning hearts, men who are keenly conscious of the undone condition of the world, believe firmly in the all-sufficiency of the Gospel, and feel strongly their responsibility for bringing the Gospel to apply to that condition. The church truly has many things that it needs very badly, but this one stands out above them all; this is the church's supreme need, the one thing that bulks largest in the fulfilment of its divinely imposed responsibility, and with the supplying of which all other needs will in no small way be met.

God give us men who feel the weight of apostleship resting upon them, and give us an institution or an agency that will make men's hearts serious and their minds clear as they face this responsibility. God give us men who are willing to know the fellowship of the sufferings of Christ in behalf of a lost and sinning world and give us great teachers who are able not only to train the intellect but to keep alive and burning that passion, or to enkindle it in hearts that have not felt its fire. In Ashland College we have an institution that can thus serve the church and in the noble men who teach in that school we have those who are able, both by training and temper to direct young lives possessed of that holy passion.

No greater service can be rendered the church than this, and it is so essential, so indispensable that the church cannot long exist, to say nothing of extending its borders, unless it is supplied. The church must have its passionate evangel or it will die; it must have its missionary spirit or it will stagnate; it can no more be confined and kept pure than can water. He who has seen the Lord high and lifted up cannot keep quiet about it. Give a man a great religious experience and he will tell it and tell it convincingly. That is the kind of men the church is needing and the kind that will make it a power for God in the world. But deny it this supreme need and we would not care to contemplate its future. It is painful to think of what might have happened to the early Christian church had it not had a Paul to sweep over the Roman world like a flame, burning himself out with evangelistic fervor, and crying with passion in his soul to King Agrippa, "I would to God that not only thou, but also all that hear me this day, might become such as I am—except these bonds." Where would have come the Reformation without a Huss or a Luther? How would the fires of evangelism have been rekindled without a Wesley, or zeal for the Word have been revived without a Mack? These all were men trained in mind and heart, the kind of men the church needs today as much as it needed them then. Without the Christian school they cannot be supplied in anything like adequate numbers. Without teachers who know and love God passionately, the turning out of passionate preachers will not be the rule but the exception. If God has blessed us with such a school and with such teachers, let the church show its appreciation by its support. This is the thing that the church needs most, and if Ashland College is able to supply that need, even in an imperfect and incomplete way, it deserves the most loyal support of every member of the church. And the more faithfully we support it the more fully will it be enabled to meet the needs of our church.

The Followers of Huss

The painting reproduced on the front page is in the possession of the Cincinnati Museum of Art. It is almost two-thirds life size. The following description from "The Church School Journal" will be of interest:

The artist, V. Brozik, a native of Bohemia, has caught the spirit of the Reformation with exceptional skill. See how the light glows in the face of the white-haired reformer, John Huss. The Word is open before him, and with prophetic zeal he interprets it in a language that all can understand. Therefore the papal interdict is laid upon him, and his only pulpit is a dark and secluded cellar. But the sunlight seeks him out, even as the light of the Sun of righteousness illumines his soul.

And there, too, the people seek him—people from every walk of life. We see the rugged blacksmith and the well-groomed gentleman, the peasant with cloak and rough-hewn shoes, and the fascinated lad of six. A maiden seated on the floor and a grandmother by the window are alike entranced by the good news of salvation by faith. Under the spell of the message the mother with her child is transformed into a Madonna, and the wounded soldier takes on the appearance of the Man of Sorrows. The children are as intent as the aged. Even the wayward youth in the shadow of the corner and the haggard figure in the background listen to catch every word that leaps from the lips of the saintly but condemned reformer.

The room is cold and hearts are hungry. All mankind is thirsting for righteousness. All the world with rapt attention faces the light streaming from above upon the Sacred Pages and reflected as by a mirror upon the face of the teacher, preacher, prophet and herald of religious freedom. "There was the true light.....that lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Such are the preachers that the church is needing today, and on such the progress of the kingdom is waiting—on men whose souls are flooded with holy zeal and whose minds are illumined with heavenly light.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

EDUCATIONAL DAY, JUNE 12. An Offering from every member of every church.

Sister Emma Aboud writes of her work in New York City, where success is attending her efforts among Jews and Catholics, as well as Protestants. The Communion service was recently celebrated, being engaged in for the first by most of the group.

Our correspondent at Grafton, West Virginia, reports the work making good progress under the pastoral leadership of Brother Thomas F. Howell. As a result of the Pre-Easter services two additions to the church are recorded and others interested. Brother Gearhart's recent visit to this church was the source of much encouragement.

Brother I. D. Bowman reports continued progress in Delaware, even in the face of great obstacles, sixteen having been baptized and a number awaiting baptism. He asks the prayers of the brotherhood in his behalf that the work may be guided aright and the difficulties solved.

Brother C. A. Stewart, pastor of the church at Loree, Indiana, writes of the splendid work that is being accomplished by that aggressive country church. Brother Stewart has been pastor of this church for nine years and is leaving the field the first of October and will take up the leadership of the Mexico church. Correspondence is invited by the Loree church by any pastor interested in this splendid parish.

Prof. A. L. DeLozier sails on the morning of June 4 for France where he will study the customs and spirit of the French people during the summer and possibly do some preaching among the Protetant churches and distribute portions of Scripture as he goes from place to place. He promises us an occasional report of his experiences.

In view of the fact that churches in Pennsylvania have recently been canvassed by Dr. Bell in the endowment drive, they may feel tempted to let Educational Day pass unobserved. But the request has come to us from the college authorities asking that we appeal to these churches to observe the day with a fitting program even though they may be unable to lift a sizable offering. If your people have given to their limit, have a loyalty program anyway and if there are those who would care to give a small offering, give them a chance. If nothing more than a dime or a quarter from every member, that will count. No one should be freed from the responsibility of deciding whether he has really given to the limit of his ability to this worthy cause. The college cannot be satisfied with the "convenient" gift or the "left-over" offering after every other need has been supplied. It will require some gifts of self-denial if the urgent needs are to be met.

Brother R. F. Porte, pastor of the church at Louisville, Ohio, writes a very encouraging letter. The Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother Louis P. Clapper and his faithful corps of helpers is doing splendid work. It is evident that the pastor enjoys the confidence and hearty cooperation of the membership, which fact doubtless accounts for his optimistic attitude and outlook. It is such a situation that gives hope to any church.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, secretary of the Indiana Brethren Ministerium, writes of the splendid sessions they recently held at Shipshewana Lake, and it would seem from the topics discussed that it must have been a very profitable meeting. It would be good for our church if Brethren ministers would more generally get together in convenient groups to discuss their common problems. It would make for greatly increased unity and harmony as well as efficiency.

The brotherhood will be saddened to learn of the very serious illness of Brother Orion E. Bowman of Dayton, Ohio. The word comes through Brother Gearhart who requests the prayers of the brotherhood to the end that Brother Bowman may recover. Brother Bowman is not only a strong pillar in the Dayton church, but an outstanding leader in the brotherhood, is president of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College and is the only layman ever elected moderator of our National Conference.

Sister Joanna Nielsen gives us a chapter out of the dark side of South American mission life. It is gruesome, but it is nevertheless good that she has told us, for it seems to take just such things to stir us to a realization of the need and of our responsibility. The Easter offering date is not so far past but that you may increase your offering, if you feel that you have not done your best. Surely, considering the urgency of the need of both the African and South American fields, the very best we can do is the least we ought to do.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, writes very optimistically regarding the condition and outlook of the Home Mission situation. The various mission points are making commendable progress and the brotherhood is supporting the work financially in a splendid way.

Brother H. H. Rowsey, pastor of the church at Falls City, Nebraska, favored the Evangelist office with a copy of a notice sent to his members advertising two special services, one the Communion service for June 5 and the other an Educational Day program for June 12.

Brother Mark B. Spacht, pastor of the church at Clay City, Indiana, gives us an interesting report of his work, which proves to be in good condition. The church is not large in numbers, but it has an unusually large number of capable workers, which together with the splendid leadership of the pastor, accounts for the excellent condition of the various departments. Brother Spacht is closing his work here in June and a new pastor is desired for this church. Any one interested may correspond with Brother M. R. Goshorn as directed.

"A Day of Fellowship and Worship" at Shipshewana, July 17. Brother Stewart calls attention of Indiana churches and other nearby churches to this event and urges a large attendance. His notice was set in type for last week's paper, but was unwittingly crowded out, which we regret because of its wide concern. We want to co-operate in urging upon Indiana churches a real interest in this worthy undertaking. It will redound in a blessing to every church to have a large delegation present at this special service.

From Columbus, Ohio, we have a report of a recent special all-day service which was an important event in the life of that church. In addition to the celebration of Mother's Day and the observance of the communion service, a mortgage burning service was a part of the program. The editor appreciates having had the opportunity of sharing the fellowship of the day, and wishes to bear witness to a decided note of encouragement that has taken possession of the faithful brethren at that place. Brother R. F. Gotschall, the pastor, enjoys the full confidence of the members and has been doing a splendid work there, though handicapped by the necessity of giving the week days to secular employment. Such an arrangement was not the ideal, of course, but it seemed to be the best that was possible for the present year. Whether any better arrangement can be effected for another year is yet to be determined. Doubtless it is advisable to put the pastor on the field for full time if such a program can be financed.

GENERAL ARTICLES

We Must Educate

By Dean J. Allen Miller, D.D.

Since 1898 Ashland College has made an earnest and consistent effort to train men for the work of the Christian ministry. I do not mean in this brief article to cite figures to show what this contribution has been. I hope to do this later. For the present I should like to call the attention of the Evangelist readers to the tremendous need of trained ministers. We have serious need in the home churches as well as in the foreign fields. I refer to the wider need of the unsaved and untouched multitudes rather than our limited denominational need.

Every great and worthwhile movement in our world in whatsoever field we wish to choose has had some great leader or leaders. No army ever won a battle without direction from competent leadership. No political, social or religious reform has ever succeeded without trained leadership. No great banking institution, no successful business enterprise, no manufacturing plant has or can be created save by minds trained for the particular tasks involved. Our inventions and discoveries and the application of the Sciences to the practical affairs of life come by way of the disciplined mind.

Let it be said once for all that no great church is ever built except by and through a consecrated and trained leadership. Now this will hold whether we think of one's denomination as a church or whether you mean only a local congregation of the church. How do you build a great local congregation? Who builds it? What sort of pastor as spiritual leader does such a congregation choose after it is great and powerful in its ability to serve and to do God's will? What sort of a man does it want even while growing strong? Does it rest content with the untrained, the undisciplined or the uneducated man? Will such a congregation even be satisfied with the "good men?" To ask these questions is to answer them. A bit of looking around shows what congregations that are doing things say on these questions. They want the trained and efficient leader. The Brethren congregations are no exception. I have seen it for forty years in spite of our handicaps. There is always a demand for men who can preach a sermon of power and spiritual uplift and for one who can wisely and skilfully lead the people forward.

There is another point of view which I wish to present in a few words. It is this. Denominational loyalty is breaking everywhere. The notion that there is "no difference" anyhow and that it makes no difference what a man believes or what he practices or whether he "keeps the word of God" or not has broken down loyalty. We have the very general notion that one thing is as good as another so long as one is sincere. And we are further told by way of considerable flourish and pride in the argument that character counts alone and that men are "good" even though they may be members of no church at all. To put it in another way—the output so to speak of all the denominations is so nearly alike in character that one sees no difference. There can therefore be no great weight attached to the former lines which divided. And this attitude of indifference has fallen upon us with others so affected. And being numbered among the lesser denominational groups it strikes a heavier blow into our faces than it possibly could were we numerically stronger and financially wealthier. The severity with which this lack of group loyalty has dealt with us as a church can scarcely be measured. We seriously listen to the discussion of the question, "Are we a Disappearing People?" before our conferences and ministerial associations. Our strong and powerful congregations like Philadelphia or Johnstown, or like Dayton, Goshen or Long Beach can give a sustained and emphatic negative. But what of the answer of a hundred struggling groups? How can we say "NO" to the above question?

In brief conclusion permit me to suggest what we must do. First, we must have the conviction that as Brethren we can best do the will of God through the church of which we are members. Loyalty to the whole will of God must outweigh all other considerations. Second, we must adhere to what we believe to be the basic and fundamental teachings of the Word of God. We even do this without being selfish or egotistically separate from all other Christians.

Third, we must stress the only determining consideration upon which separate denominational existence can logically and consistently rest. That consideration to my way of thinking is TO BEAR WITNESS TO THE SUPREME AUTHORITY OF THE WORD OF GOD in our day. This means that we receive the whole of the Revelation and receive it as complete and final. Now I know that I am just repeating an apparently trite and quite popular saying. But we Brethren mean more and always did mean more by this statement than others admit they mean. We believe that Christians should be men of character, but they must be more for they must be the "ransomed of the Lord." If the 13th chapter of First Corin-

CAN THE CHURCHES LEAD?

The future of the world will be largely determined by the success of the appeal which Christianity makes to the younger generation. . . . This new life, shaping itself to new conditions, organizing a new world, is irrepressible. Is the new social order, it will shape, to embody Jesus Christ? Can the churches give a new generation a new moral vision? Can the churches lead? They can if they have trained leaders.—The Divinity Student.

CHURCH COLLEGES MUST BE CONTINUED

Every one must admit that, if the church is to continue, there must be an adequate supply of the right kind of ministers. Where are those ministers to come from? A study of the source of supply in the past will throw much light on what is to continue to be the source of supply for years to come. . .

If such statistics mean anything at all, they mean that the church colleges simply must be continued. It is from them that the churches have gotten their ministers and will continue to get their ministers. Preachers do not come in any large numbers from state universities or secular institutions. They come from the church colleges, those smaller schools that must depend upon the generosity of the men and women of the churches for their financial support. These are facts of the most pressing significance to us right now.—Alva Martin Kerr, in "Herald of Gospel Liberty."

thians is inspired Scripture we believe that the 13th of John is also inspired Scripture. In a word we believe that in Jesus Christ alone is there any hope of salvation. Belief and practice, loyalty and consecration with an unfaltering trust that God's appointments are sure—these factors are what our world most needs in order to find its way to God. We must preach the Word and not our opinions about it; Christ himself and not all around and about him without ever showing folks who he is and what he does. But why stress this more? DOES OUR BRETHREN WITNESS TO THE INTEGRITY, AUTHORITY, AND DIVINE ORIGIN OF THE WORD OF GOD RING TRUE? How shall we make it do so?

And the reply is brief. We must formulate a program of church activities that will challenge the best among us and call out our utmost endeavors. This program must lie in the field of Education and Missions. We must give our youth a big reason for giving their loyalty to the church of which they now are faithful members if we wish them to take upon themselves our tasks and responsibilities and remain thus faithful through life to the church of their first choice. And lastly we must TRAIN A GROUP OF STRONG MEN AND WOMEN FOR OUR LEADERSHIP. Preachers? Yes. But also teachers, doctors, engineers, business men, in short men and women in every walk and profession of life, for consecrated, effective and worthy leaders in every local congregation. BUT FIRST ONLY SOUND, FORCEFUL, GOSPEL PREACHING AND TEACHING WILL LEAD IN THIS DIRECTION. Therefore we must educate.

Christian Education and the Study of Biology

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

I think all will agree that the study of Biology is an important subject in any complete course of study. It not only sets forth certain very important facts but also affords a basis for the intelligent discussion of several fundamental questions. One may hold a biological philosophy of life as well as any other opinion and this can be correctly founded only on facts.

E. E. Jacobs, Ph. D., President, Ashland College

As everyone knows, the theory of inheritance rests upon certain biological factors. Inheritances can not be correctly understood apart from Biology and one can not deal intelligently or effectually with certain types of delinquency without knowing something of their inheritances. Morally, then, Biology has something to offer.

But as important as inheritances, is the question of organic evolution. A discussion of this important question has been revived within recent years and much useless verbiage has grown up around it. Many unwarranted statements have been made, both for and against this theory, much of it due to a lack of an intelligent understanding of the biological aspect of the subject. Yet nearly every school boy has heard these discussions and has in all too many cases received a decided bias. With a clear understanding of the facts coupled with a sound knowledge of the Bible, they would be better fortified against the errors which this problem involves.

But more than that, the study of Biology under the guidance of a well trained and Christian teacher, will give God his rightful place in nature. One will not then spell "nature" with a capital letter, thereby discharging one's responsibility as to the First Cause. Nor will he see him only in the cataclysms of life but everywhere, while at the same time guarding against pantheism. Life, death, and all other natural processes will then be viewed in a proper perspective.

Man, too, will then assume his proper place as the highest and last of all God's creation. He becomes the measure of all things and one may see him to be the special favor and care of God. The atheist misses the best part of nature for his vision is warped, and his perspective foreshortened.

I hold, therefore, that the Christian college and the Christian teacher have duties and a strategic position in relation to certain great problems, in the teaching of Biology. And happy is that boy and girl who fall into the hands of such educational forces and unhappy and marred may be the life of those who have their first glimpses of nature through the eyes of the unbelieving scientist.

Chemistry at Ashland College

By Prof. Milton P. Puterbaugh, B.A.

In this scientific age there are many issues developing. Somehow Chemistry has escaped the scorn of the theologians and yet it is no less dangerous than Biology. Indeed when one teaches Chemistry he is putting into a pupil's hand a tool and instrument that rivals fire and water and the elements of Nature themselves in usefulness and destruction. Undoubtedly there is no more fundamental and basic science; there is no faster growing science; there is no more powerful science than Chemistry.

At the same time let us remember that hundreds and even thousands of chemists are at work every day in the realms of this science without ever giving a thought to the Giver of these wonders and the God who made the electron, the atom, and the molecule. As a result these men are not seeking to put their knowledge to work in a way that will reveal God to others.

Chemical Laboratory

Some time ago while visiting a university laboratory where a noted chemist had produced a most powerful poisonous gas we chanced to ask an assistant what had been done to find an antidote for the gas. His reply that nothing had been done along this line of investigation and his implication that they cared little for that side of the story was astonishing.

In our Chemistry classes at Ashland College we do not have Bible mottos hanging in our class rooms. We do not open our classes with prayer. We do none of these things, although perhaps we should do them. But we do hold before the students a vision of the wonderful science God has given and its power for good when rightly used.

We take great pride in the fact that in our classes in Ashland there are pre-medical students who will some day use their skill in chemistry to cure the ills of our body and to heal wounds in darkest Africa. Even now this department is preparing to cooperate with the Foreign Mission Board in getting together hospital supplies for our stations in Africa.

Undoubtedly in our church college we must have a department of Chemistry for with the growing popularity of the science the young people of today demand it. And, while we cannot exactly teach Brethren Chemistry, we can teach Christian Chemistry. But remember, please, that if you send your young people to Ashland College for their training you dare not deny them the splendid equipment of other schools. We must have the same beakers and test tubes and apparatus than any other school uses. As fast as some unChristian and even anti-Christian school develops new methods and new equipment we must keep pace. This is the reason for the unending series of Endowment Campaigns and Educational Days.

Either the church school must meet the attractions of other schools or the church school must confine herself to phases of learning which the other schools neglect and disdain. Which shall it be? Shall we train all our chemists and doctors and engineers in a state university entirely and train only preachers and missionaries at Ashland or shall we turn out from Ashland College a glorious, never-ending stream of brilliant doctors, chemists, engineers, preachers, missionaries, lawyers, architects and artisans who have learned to honor God and to help their fellow men?

The Christian College Normal School as a Missionary Enterprise

By Prof. L. L. Garber, Litt. D.

Education has become the largest word in the vocabulary of life. Never before have such vast resources of money, equipment, and teachers been employed in education. Never before have so many persons been seeking the training it offers; and never before have so large a percentage of the population been traveling this highway to success and high distinction.

In our swift-changing civilization, the teacher-educator is becoming increasingly powerful as the moulder of civilization. "Every school teacher remakes the world." But since the days of the Colonial minister-school teacher, there has gone on an increasing secularization of schools and school teachers. The modern-trained teacher is becoming less and less a moral-social force for righteousness, piety, "plain living and high thinking." Thus, while the home has forfeited and lost much of its religious influence, and while the church has become relatively less predominant, at the same time the school teacher has become a doubtful moral influence because of the conditions under which he is trained.

For many years I have watched with keen anxiety the secularizing, the mechanizing, the demoralizing of the school curriculum, of school teachers, of teacher-training. As head of a department of education and as instructor in a state normal college, I have contended against this growing secularizing tendency. Clear it should be to all of us that a normal school where religious services are almost unknown, where clean young men degenerate into cigarette-smoking loafers, where well-trained girls are caught up in the giddy maze of the dance, the movie, and the social whirl does not furnish the proper atmosphere in which to train the moulders of civilization.

What results? This type of school teacher trained in a school from which direct religious training is excluded is producing a generation who worship material success and whose outlook upon life is essentially pagan. These worldly materialistic, undevout, jazz-minded school teachers impress upon the plastic youth of America life-attitudes that help create the ever-increasing army of youthful criminals. To many modern youth, the highest and best education, "the spiritual interpretation of the universe," is not given. Deprived of the moral teacher who inculcates a discriminating sense of moral-social values, the modern youth, stimulated by the emotional excitement of low literature, suggestive plays, and the cheap dance, becomes the social degenerate, the youthful criminal, or adolescent suicide.

Young Richard Untermyer, born of noted parents, "could find no reason for life", and consequently committed suicide at Yale University. His teachers failed somewhere. They were probably "non-religious," "hard-boiled." He was probably pessimized by a modern debunking historian who "smudged" every noble worthy or by a pseudo-scientist who looked upon man as the evolved quintessence of a mechanistic "mud philosophy" in which the noble sentiments of great literature, the ideals of the Master Teacher, or the belief in a personal Divinity who could be touched with a feeling of our infirmities, found no place. Hence, he passed. Life had no meaning; it wasn't worthwhile.

teacher will be the strongest ally of the church. He or she alone has the opportunity to develop in every child the "good soil" in which the "good seed" may be sown by the religious forces. Such a teacher finds numberless opportunities for vitalizing, interpreting, and illuminating, according to the Christian ideal, school subjects and school situations. What Christians need to do, is to awake to the danger and the tragedy of the present situation; to frankly recognize the high service of teachers trained to religious life-attitudes in the Christian College and Christian Normal School; and to support and to prepare for such training as a part of its program to prepare the world for the extension of the gospel. Some Aspirations of the Modern Language Department

By Prof. A. L. DeLozier, M.A.

As I am on the eve of sailing for Europe at a sacrifice to both me and my family, but for the purpose of bringing my modern language teaching up to a higher standard, I am made to ask myself this question: After all does it pay? Is my life counting for the Master in a way worthy of the ordination vows I took some years ago?

In so far as I am called upon to deal merely with the French or Spanish classics, I may well ask myself these questions. There may be, and really is, some hint of religion and high moral purpose in many of the productions being "dished up" to the students of our Modern Language Departments these days, but this would prove too remote to justify an ex-preacher leaving the pulpit in order to teach modern languages.

But with regard to our work at Ashland I have had a vision of something worthwhile that may be done, although I confess that hitherto it has been rather imperfectly done.

Our Foreign Mission work chances to be in two fields where French and Spanish are the official languages. It happens that these two languages are also the ones most featured in our colleges. So that at Ashland we have our prospective missionaries enroll in one of these languages. Thus they get a grammatical foundation plus some acquaintance with the literature of the people whose language they are to use, but in addition they learn to sing and otherwise to use the language which they must adopt upon becoming missionaries.

This has become especially true of those who are to go to South America, thanks to our good Brother Romanenghi who has very materially aided us in the Spanish department by promoting a club which features many things that cannot be attempted in the class room.

Thus we shall find that when some of our student volunteers get to South America they will feel somewhat at home from the very beginning. They will doubtless be able to get down to serious work much earlier than usual, thus saving expense to the church which is under obligation to train them on the field if they be not trained here at home.

As for French, we have been working in the same direction, but with a bit less of success.

I go to France in the hope of not merely taking some college work there, but as well of mixing with French Protestant Christians, that I may be able to catch the spirit and vocabulary of their work, so that upon my return I may be of more definite service to our prospective African workers.

Allen Hall

I repeat what I wrote a few years ago, namely, that I am dreaming of a time when more of our men leaving the seminary may be able to use Italian or Spanish, thus opening up to their ministry a vast field right here in our own country, a field otherwise not so promising, yet one vastly neglected by the larger number of pastors these days.

If I were a pastor I should want a knowledge of at least two European languages so that my soul-winning possibilities might be stepped up a notch or so.

I may say in conclusion that during our seven years' stay here, we have sold to our students a large number of Bibles and Testaments in French, Italian and Spanish, thus encouraging not only the student volunteers who are to be our missionaries, but all students alike, to grasp the vocabulary of the Word of God.

We ask your prayers that the Modern Language Department of Ashland College may become more than a mere cog in a system which perhaps may have no higher motive than that of adding so many hours to the transcript to be carried away by the student.

Ashland College and Its Department of Physics

By Prof. R. R. Haun, M.A.

I do not recall that anything has ever been said through these columns concerning the work of the Physics department here at Ashland, so I am going to make that the subject of this article.

In the first place I would like to suggest that with the possible exception of English, that to my mind at least Physics is the most practical subject that a student can take at college. And with the present emphasis upon the practical things in all of our education this is quite a point to consider. In support of this idea let me tell you that in our general course in Physics this year we have discussed the principles of mechanics as typified by the lever, the screw and the pulley, the pump, the steam engine, the use of water power through various types of wheels and turbines, the various types of hot air and steam heating systems, the formation of rain, snow, dew, etc., the characteristics of sound and the various types of musical instruments, the characteristics of light and color of objects, the various phenomena of electricity from the production of electricity itself by means of batteries and generators to its use in heating instruments, lamps, motors and radio sets. In addition to the class work the students have laboratory in which they actually test out the principles and have this year completely dissembled and studied the automobile. Does anyone question the value of this material to the average boy and girl in this generation? Do you think one who is preparing for the ministry should be concerned about such things? What about the missionary, who is completely removed from mechanics and engineers and must rely upon his own ability to take care of his machinery and equipment?

In our advanced work in the Physics department we are considering two types of students that may come to us. First, those who need Physics for Pre-Medical, Pre-Dental and Pre-Engineering courses, and it might be of interest to say that we can give from one to two years in these courses here, just as well and I think better than are given in most of the universities of the country. In the second place we are training students here who desire to go on in the subject either in graduate schools or in teaching, and I think that by the coming fall, we shall be equipped to do so well. This year we have installed a machine shop and are making our own apparatus, under the direction of an unusually skilled mechanic, and the apparatus he is turning out can not be distinguished from factory apparatus, although it only costs us about half of the factory prices. With this increased equipment we are giving some new laboratory courses next year as well as a Radio course and then I shall feel perfectly confident that a student will be prepared on leaving here to enter graduate courses in the universities.

It might be of further interest to tell you that during the past couple of months we have been visiting from time to time some of the other colleges in Ohio and examining their Physics equipment, and while I can not say that we have anything to boast about, I do think that comparatively we need not be ashamed and if I could add a few very expensive individual pieces that we are soon needing, I would be very willing to have anyone compare us with the average college of our size. We are ahead of them now in some ways and with a little more equipment we shall be able to give our work not just as well but better than others.

MY CHURCH

My church is the place where the word of God is preached, the power of God is felt, the Spirit of God is manifested, and the love of God is revealed. It should be the home of my soul, the altar of my devotion, the hearth of my faith, the center of my affection, and the inspiration of my daily life. Having united with the church in solemn covenant, I will advance its interests by my faithful attendance at its services, by studying its Holy Scriptures, by observing its ordinances, by contributing to its support, by encouraging its members and its leaders, and by joining with them in all good works. By thus honoring and serving God I shall share with many others the life of the kingdom of heaven.—Adapted from F. Hyatt Smith, in the Watchman-Examiner.

Absolute faith in God, like that possessed by those who had the "old-time religion," is so rare that if one has it now, he is regarded as a religious crank.

Why Ashland College Needs Your Support on Education Day

By Prof. E. G. Mason, M.A.

Constant appeals are being made to the Brethren churches for money. There's a reason. The Brethren church is fostering a large missionary and educational program. We are small as numbers go, and do not have a wealthy constituency. Our program needs are great and our resources are limited. We have gone a great ways toward establishing and maintaining both Foreign and Home Missions. We have supported Ashland College, our only institution of higher learning, and are in sight of that long looked for goal, membership in the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, and kindred standardizing associations. We have gone so far forward with our missionary and educational programs that we cannot afford to turn back or give up. WE MUST SUCCEED. But, neither of these programs will succeed without constantly increasing support from the brotherhood at large. The burden, if it is a burden, must be borne by the entire brotherhood. The missionary activities of the church are dependent upon the college and seminary for their workers and the church is dependent upon the college for its ministry and lay leadership. This means that each congregation must bear its full share of the cost. You are responding to Dr. Bell's appeals but we must have adequate endowment to meet the demands of our standardizing agencies. This endowment must be large enough to insure such an income as

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

WITH CONVICTION AND POWER—Acts 4:23-37. "With great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus; and great grace was upon them all." Preachers of the everlasting Gospel do not stand up and make suggestions, but deliver what they believe to be God's testimony.

TUESDAY

DECEIVERS IN THE CHURCH—Acts 5:1-21. "Whiles it remained, was it not thine own? ... Why hast thou conceived this thing in thine heart? Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." Ananias and Sapphira in the church can do more mischief than all the atheists outside.

WEDNESDAY

DAILY AND WITHOUT CEASING—Acts 5:22-42. "And daily in the temple, and in every house, they ceased not to teach and to preach Jesus Christ." It ought to be the constant duty of ministers to preach Christ. Nor is it the duty of ministers alone; every disciple should be never-ceasing in his witnessing for the Lord.

THURSDAY

GOD'S WORD INCREASING—Acts 6. "And the word of God increased, and the number of disciples multiplied." Even as the seed planted, grows and increases, and yields fruit, thirty, sixty and an hundred fold, so the word of God in the hearts of men grows, fills the heart and reaches out into other lives.

FRIDAY

UNITY OF THE FIRST CHURCH—Acts 2:1-22. "They were all with one accord in one place." That gives one of the chief secrets of power in the early church. Any church can have a Pentecost who will duplicate the conditions of the First church of Jerusalem.

SATURDAY

IN FELLOWSHIP—Acts 2:22-47. And they continued steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and in fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers." They fellowshiped together in practical righteousness as well as in ritualistic observance. When Christian fellowship does not include the two, something is wrong.

SUNDAY

SINGLEMINDEDNESS—Acts 3. "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have give I thee." Peter and John had not given themselves to getting gold since they had become disciples of the Lord; they had concentrated their attention to one thing. It is such men who have power and are able to do the really great things for the Kingdom.—G. S. B.

will buy adequate equipment and pay the faculty adequate salaries. We need to expand our equipment and enlarge our faculty. Let us not be deceived, as the College grows and increases its usefulness, it will cost more and more to operate it. CAMP-FOLLOWERS

With most military armies there are a lot of stragglers who go along and commit depredations which are laid to the soldiers. These vagabonds are known as camp-followers. The army of the Lord is troubled with a similar class of depredators. They go along with the Christians, that is, they manage to get into the church, but they do nothing but serve the devil, and their meanness is charged up to the people of God. They are the wolves in the sheepfold, and it is no little havoc they are working. They are in our pulpits, amen corners, choirs and pews. The world points to them as being fair samples of church piety. They are millstones about the neck of the cause of Christianity.

I have one preacher that I love better than any other on earth; it is my little tame robin, who preaches to me daily. I put his crumbs upon my window sill, especially at night. He hops onto the window sill when he wants his supply, and takes as much as he desires to satisfy his need. From thence he always hops to a tree close by and lifts his voice to God, and sings his carol of praise and gratitude, tucks his little head under his wing and goes fast asleep, and leaves tomorrow to look after itself. He is the best preacher that I have on earth.—Martin Luther.

Opportunity and the Wolf
Met at the door
Of an humble cottage.
The one knocked,
And the other howled.
Behind the door
Lived an optimist,
Full of hope.
He was expecting Opportunity,
And heard the knock,
But not the howl.
And then the two,
The Wolf and Opportunity,
Went to another door.

Introduction

Peter had been originally a fisherman in Galilee, but was among the first called by Jesus Christ to be one of his attendants and missionaries. About A. D. 65 or 66, he wrote this first Epistle to Jewish converts scattered through Asia Minor or other parts of the Roman Empire, and the second Epistle about two years after. The scope of the first is:—1. To establish them in the faith of Christ and comfort them under their severe persecutions, ch. 1; 2:1-8. 2. To direct and animate them to an honorable, conscientious and edifying behavior in discharging the duties of their civil or family relations, 2:9-25; 3:1-7. 3. To the exercise of brotherly love, personal holiness, and a faithful discharge of their respective duties in the church, 3:8-22; chs. 4, 5.—The Illustrator.

More About Peter

Peter was probably employed for the most part in building up and completing the organization of Christian communities in Palestine and the adjoining districts. He traveled about preaching the gospel, accompanied by his wife (1 Cor. 9:5), and visited Antioch in Syria certainly (Gal. 2:11). He is thought by many to have gone to Corinth (1 Cor. 1:12, and Eusebius). It is certainly possible that he went to the Far East, and that the Babylon of 1 Peter 5:13 means the city by that name on the Euphrates. It may be considered as a settled point that he did not visit Rome before the last year of his life; but there is satisfactory evidence that he and Paul were the founders of the church at Rome, and suffered death in that city. The time and manner of the Apostle's death are less certain. According to the early writers he suffered at or about the same time as Paul, and in the Neronian persecution, about A. D. 67, 68. All agree that he was crucified—a fate which Paul escaped because of his Roman citizenship.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Prof. Fisher on Prohibition

"After an examination of all the data, I have estimated that the flow of alcohol down human throats in the United States is at present certainly less than sixteen per cent, probably less than ten per cent, and possibly less than five per cent, of the pre-prohibition consumption," declares Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale, in his new book, Prohibition at Its Worst, which gives a full and careful survey of the whole problem. Professor Fisher also believes that the new recruits to the army of liquor users are decreasing in numbers, especially among the young first offenders.

Though believing that evidently Constitutional prohibition came on the country somewhat prematurely, Professor Fisher blames the brewers themselves for this summary control of liquor traffic:

It was as an indirect result of this second defeat of wartime prohibition that Constitutional prohibition came about. The brewers found that, unwittingly, they had jumped out of the frying-pan into the fire.

It will be time to talk against the Eighteenth Amendment and the Volstead Act when they are honestly, fully, courageously, persistently, and aggressively enforced, as other laws are. If, after ten years of such enforcement, they have not produced the richest, happiest, and purest nation the world has yet seen, it will be time to criticize them and talk about changing or abolishing them. Even with poor enforcement they have amply justified their existence. Let all Christians insist on the perfect enforcement which will compel all men to honor them and thank God for them.

The Amendment put out of business 177,790 saloons, 1,092 breweries, and 236 distilleries. It is absurd to suppose that the hazardous operations of bootleggers and rum runners can supply liquor in any but the smallest fraction of the quantity poured out in the old days by this vast array of agencies.

Can any citizen patronizing bootleggers say, "I will pay a bribe to any one who will violate this law of my country?"

Let us carry the matter a little further. If he does say that, or saying, or not saying or thinking it, does offer and pay the bribe, and so induces some one to violate the law and make a forbidden sale to provide what he desires to drink, can that citizen logically find fault with the man he has bribed, when that man in turn offers and pays part of his bribe to some one to violate another law to get something he wants, or to enable him to escape the consequences of the unlawful act the citizen has paid him to do?

"Obedience to Law is Liberty"

Observance of the law is the very essence of self-government. It is the main source of certainty in all social relationships. Without it all those elements would be lacking on which we are dependent for economic structure. The protection of property, the security of the person, would be gone. The entire basis for credit would be lacking. No standard of value for property could exist. Justice would vanish. The whole foundation of civilization would crumble. The protection of the weak would disappear. The sole reliance would be force. Might alone would rule. It is to rescue the people for these conditions that constitutions are adopted and statutes enacted. But all these will be of little avail unless there is fostered and nourished in the minds of our citizens a rugged respect for law and obedience to its decrees.—President Coolidge.

"LOS ANGELES—1928"

Conventions that bring together the people of different races for the purpose of planning for each other's good are factors for international peace and goodwill among men. Such will be the World's Tenth Sunday School Convention to be held in Los Angeles, California, July 11-18, 1928. Only twice before has there been a convention of this kind held in the United States of America. The second world gathering of Sunday school workers was held in St. Louis in 1893 and the sixth convention convened in Washington, D. C., in 1910. London, England, entertained this assemblage twice, the first time in 1889 and the second time in 1898. Other World's Conventions for Sunday school workers were held as follows: Jerusalem in 1904; Rome in 1907; Zurich in 1913; Tokyo in 1920 and Glasgow in 1924. Inasmuch as these gatherings are now quadrennial affairs, it is not likely that North America will again have the privilege of entertaining this influential group of workers for at least a quarter of a century—for invitations have come from South America, South Africa, Australia, Egypt, Asia and Europe for the convening of such a gathering. The Sunday school as a method of teaching Christian truth has made its way into every land and readily becomes an indigenous institution. The soil it cultivates is childhood. The seed it sows is rightness toward God and goodwill among men. There are over 3,000,000 men and women of all races, languages and color engaged in this work and these will be interested in the Convention to be held in Los Angeles, July 11-18, 1928. Fifty-four nations were represented at the World's last Sunday School Convention held in Glasgow, 1924, and a larger number will be in attendance at Los Angeles. Committees are now at work building the program and securing delegations from the nations of every continent. Detailed information about "Los Angeles—1928" can be obtained by addressing the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

Where We Get Our Ministers

Every one must admit that, if the church is to continue, there must be an adequate supply of the right kind of ministers. Where are those ministers to come from? A study of the source of supply in the past will throw much light on what will continue to be the source of supply for years to come. Study the significance of the following telling facts:

To fill the vacancies occurring in the ranks of the ministry 5,000 new preachers are needed every year.

There are 127 Protestant seminaries in the land.

These graduate annually about 2,000.

In thirty years the average decrease in the ministry in the various denominations in the ratio to communicants, was 31%.

The denominational college is still the great source of supply.

Of the preachers 90% and of the missionaries 93%, come from denominational colleges.

Hope College, with a total alumni group of only 625, has furnished 316 ministers and 53 missionaries.

A small Methodist Episcopal College in New England, which is over one hundred years old and never had more than 100 students enrolled in any one year, has sent out 542 ministers, 74 missionaries, 102 college professors, and 32 college presidents.

In a period of five years, Northwestern University sent out more foreign missionaries than all the State universities in the country combined.

In 1906, in ten typical State schools, only four out of one thousand graduates were preparing for the ministry.

In 1915, in eleven seminaries with 1,165 students, there were only 96 of these who came from State institutions.

The University of Illinois in 1917 issued a list of all of its graduates to date, totaling 29,404. Of this vast number, only 83 were classified as ministers and six as missionaries.

The first ten classes graduating from Yale sent 73.2% of their number into the ministry. In 1916 the Yale class, numbering 325 men, had only nine who were preparing for the work of preaching.

Of the first twenty classes in Harvard, 508% were ministers.

From its first ten classes Princeton sent 51.8% of their number into the ministry. At present only about 6% of the college graduates from such schools are becoming ministers or missionaries.

If such statistics mean anything at all, they mean that the church colleges simply must be continued. It is from them that the churches have gotten their ministers and will continue to get their ministers. Preachers do not come in any large number from State universities or secular institutions. They come from the church colleges, those smaller schools that must depend upon the generosity of the men and women of the churches for their financial support. These are facts of the most pressing significance to us right now. Defiance, Union Christian, Elon, Palmer, are face to face with great financial need just because our men and women of money have not been making them donations in ten or twenty or fifty thousands of dollar gifts. Nothing but such gifts will save them. And unless they are saved, our churches will die from want of pastors. These are the plain and indisputable facts which our men and women to whom God has entrusted money must face—and face prayerfully.—Dr. A. M. Kerr, Editor, "Herald of Gospel Liberty."

A GREAT AND GOOD MAN GONE HOME

In the passing of Dr. Francis E. Clark from this mortal life a great and good man has gone home to glory. Brethren Endeavorers will feel deeply their loss. In answer to a message from Secretary Edward P. Gates we sent the following message to the Christian Endeavor World:

"The death of Dr. Francis E. Clark brings sorrow to our hearts. All the Endeavorers of the Brethren church extend sympathy to Mrs. Clark.

"With all the Endeavorers of the world we share the heavy loss, but at the same time we join in praising God for the life and work of Dr. Clark, the founder and leader of the world's greatest young people's movement.

"For many years his example of humility and earnestness and devotion has been an inspiration to the writer, as it has been to many millions of young people and also to millions of adults.

"Someone has said that the noblest memorial of a heroic life is not a reverence for his dead body but the reproduction of his heroism. May his works follow after him and continue to bless the whole world throughout all time.

"Like his Master he 'went about doing good,' going up and down this earth, bringing hope and opportunity for a larger life to unnumbered youth. Who can picture the brightness of the crown that awaited him! And who can estimate the greatness of the reward he will receive! The whole world loses a great and good man.

"Yours with deep appreciation and sincere sympathy,

How Great Games are Won I Cor. 16:13

"Oh, Mother," said James with the tears streaming down his cheeks, "I have been playing croquet with Sis and some other kids and they beat me every time. I don't like to play croquet. They said that they 'skunked' me. What does that mean?"

Mother took James on her lap. James was old enough to begin to like games and she decided that she would see what was the matter with him. First she said, "Weren't all the children bigger than you?"

"Yes", said James, "but they were not much bigger and I want to beat them even if they are bigger."

"Well, suppose I tell you a story, then maybe you'll want to go play some more."

"Good, maybe I'll play some more but I don't think so. Go ahead with the story."

"Once upon a time there was a little boy and his name was James, just like yours is. This little boy was not so very big but his sisters and brothers were all bigger than he so he always played with big boys and girls. Now James was a very bright little boy. His eyes were brown like yours. He was about your height and he liked to go to school and to work. In fact, he was a very happy little boy.

"Now James did not have a very easy time when he played games with those big brothers and sisters. He used to lose so many games. Sometimes he told his mother about it. Sometimes he didn't say anything at all. One day the children got a new croquet set and James thought, 'Now, I'll be able to win. This game is new to all of them, so I'll try real hard. Maybe I can beat them.' But James was disappointed again. He told his mother about it that time and she said, 'There are some rules that I want to give you. If you want to win you will have to practice a whole lot. When the rest of the children are busy at something else, why don't you go out and practice knocking the ball through the wicket. That's one rule for you—PRACTICE.'

"Another rule is, be patient. When you are playing with the rest and they get ahead of you, keep cool in playing. Maybe they'll make some mistakes and you can still win. If you get impatient when you are behind then you can not play as well. That's your second rule—BE PATIENT.

"Next stick to the game. If you give up every time you make a mistake you will never play enough to overcome them. Never give up and some time you'll come out ahead of the rest. Your third rule is—STICK-TO-THE-GAME.

"I might give you some more rules but I am not going to. You remember those three and see if you don't win."

"Then the boy left his mother and started right in to follow those rules. He practiced as much as he could. He stuck to the game and he was always patient. The first day he lost just like he had been doing. He did not say anything though, for he thought, 'Maybe it will take me a couple days to win.'

"But, the next day he lost again and the next the same thing happened. It was getting harder to remember the rules now. It seemed pretty bad to follow the rules and still lose. He had been playing a lot, all by himself just to see if he could learn to knock the ball through the wicket from a long distance. Then one day when it seemed to him that he would have to give up if he did not win soon, he almost won the game. He got right up to the last wicket and there he missed his shot.

"Soon he won a game. He had not forgotten his rules though. He was very happy over that first game that he won. He told his mother about it. Then he said, 'I am going to keep on following those rules.'

"He remembered them all summer As the days passed, he won more and more games. Finally, at the end of the summer his sisters

Home Mission Notes

Spiritual Outlook

We are confident there is reason for us to be optimistic relative to the spiritual condition and outlook in our Home Mission points. Your Board has endeavored to secure the type of pastors who were true and loyal to the good old Book. As far as possible, strong, capable, experienced men have been chosen and proper remuneration has been given due consideration. As a result of this we feel there is splendid progress being made in most of our Mission points. We lost one of our best Mission workers when our Brother M. A. Witter was called home, but we trust the Lord will raise up others to take the places of our good Brethren who have done so much for the Brethren church in days gone by. If our church is to go forward as she should in the great cleansing, uplifting and beneficent work brought about through the promulgation of the true Gospel, we must continue to secure our best men for our Mission points.

Financial Outlook

How frequently we hear the expression, "If we only had the money, how much more could be done." Our Lord, at first, sent out some of his best and most capable workers without any money and we know great things were accomplished, but he gave instructions before he returned to the glory world, that his messengers should be provided with purse, scrip and the necessities of life. We have been blessed again with funds sufficient we believe to meet the budget voted by the National Board last August, and in addition we have a handsome sum in our Church Erection fund, which we know will be a blessing to our denomination in making it possible for more new church buildings to be erected.

We should endeavor to soon reach the time when we are interested sufficiently in our Kentucky Mission work that we will contribute enough for that field to not only meet the budget each year, but also to make possible the extension of it without the use of so much of our General Fund. We hope Sister Srack's visit among some of our churches during the vacation period will help bring about such a condition.

A Letter from Miss Nielsen

Rio Cuarto, Argentina,
 April 19, 1927.

Dear Friends at Home:

During the Easter season, so full of joy and hope for us, we are constrained to think more than ever of the vast difference between the Christian's attitude toward death and the attitude of the one who does not know Christ.

It is not often that we write about the gruesome things that we see about us. Perhaps we should. Perhaps if more were known of that side this land would be less apt to be thought of as being all right and in no need of missionary effort. Be that as it may, I think I shall tell you something of the dark side this time.

Recently there has been a bubonic plague scare in this part of the country. There were no cases in Rio Cuarto, but in Cabrera, where Brother Sotola is located there were 16 deaths, and the schools, churches, theaters and all places for public gatherings were closed.

One of the believers there knew a man in the poorer part of town who was very ill and went to see him and see if he could not be persuaded to give himself to the Lord. He only scoffed at all that was said and soon after died. Then came his Catholic friends for the "velada" or watch. They spend the night with the bereaved family, jauching, sometimes doing all sorts of queer things, supposedly to divert their minds and cheer them up. That is the custom. But this crowd spent the night carousing, drinking, smoking and what not. They lighted cigarettes and placed them between the lips of the dead man, then proceeded to smoke these same cigarettes. They held bottles of wine to his lips and then drank from the same bottles. Thus they caroused and the body remained in the house for three days, although according to the law it should have been buried within 24 hours.

Finally it was discovered that the man had the bubonic plague. One after another of those who had participated in the mad revels, took sick and died. So that night's sport cost 15 lives besides all the harm that has resulted in other ways. Every one leaving Cabrera had to have a doctor's certificate and even then they were not always very welcome. People stopped trading in Cabrera and business has been dead; so all suffer for the sins of the few.

Recently an old lady died here in Rio Cuarto. She had made all the arrangements for her burial, and to be on the safe side, I suppose, she had Brother Yoder come, and then afterwards had the priest come to administer extreme unction. The poor old soul seemed to be so loath to leave this world that she lingered for days after she was thought to be dying and every day the undertaker went there to see if he were needed yet. She made preparation for her body, but alas! until the very last seemed to have little thought for her eternal dwelling place.

Sometimes there is real grief over the departure of the loved one and then the wailing is a terrible thing to hear. And yet when one realizes that probably they are bewailing a lost soul, any words of comfort seem decidedly out of place. Death is sad enough at any time, but when it brings with it no ray of hope for the future it becomes a terrible thing.

As I have said, the custom is to go and spend the night sitting around the casket, but even at that time they talk and laugh and play games and smoke and drink. Still, these same people are greatly scandalized because we are so heartless that we can actually sing a hymn at a funeral.

When you go along the street and see the people looking well-fed and well-dressed and reasonably well educated, many of them, it may be possible to forget that this is not a Christian land, but go to the place where there lies one dead and it leaves no room for doubt that this land needs the Gospel and needs it NOW. Will you help send it to them?

MISSIONARYING IN AFRICA

Missionarying in the heart of Africa means a number of things to the wife of a medical missionary, according to Mrs. W. B. Lewis, who will return some time during the spring to the Congo with her husband, Dr. W. B. Lewis. Among other things, Mrs. Lewis's work includes nursing, giving and teaching first aid, assisting her husband in operations, and teaching the school. The school teaching is of particular importance, as no native is allowed to become a church member who has not made a faithful and earnest effort to learn to read and write. Mrs. Lewis' pupils include grandfathers, grandmothers, fathers, mothers, and children. "The older women are most difficult to teach, for they are sunk in their old superstitions and easy-going ways", says Mrs. Lewis, "but when their confidence is gained they are absolutely faithful in their loyalty and love."

Dr. Lewis preaches the gospel by ministering to some forty or fifty students each day who no longer fear the Doctor but beg for his assistance. Mrs. Lewis is called by the natives Mamma Unyia (the sun), and Dr. Lewis's name is Owandji Wetshi Yimba (chief doctor of wisdom).—Christian Advocate.

SOME FAMOUS BIBLES

In the J. Pierpont Morgan library, in New York, the greatest private collection of books in the world, which has become a public reference library through the gift of the present J. Pierpont Morgan, are some of the most wonderful Bibles in the world. First in general interest is the Gutenberg Bible, which is the first printed Bible and the first printed book ever seen in a civilized Christian land. Among the other famous Bibles is The Jeweled Bible, originally owned by the Emperor Charles V of Spain; Oliver Cromwell's Bible; the Golden Gospels, illuminated in gold on purple vellum, owned by King Henry VIII; the great Ashburnham Bible; Mme. de Maintenon's and Sir Walter Scott's Bibles; Bibles in Icelandic and many strange tongues; and the Hebrew Bible of 1482. Among all these the Bible that stirs me most is that of Cromwell. I could not handle that with quiet nerves. But I have a Bible in my own library, or rather a New Testament, that makes my preacher's pulse beat faster than any of these. It is the New Testament that Henry Moorhouse, that marvelously sweet-spirited English evangelist who gave Moody a new vision of the love of God, gave to Moody in Chicago in 1866. From Moody's hands through others it has come to me from the hand of a dear friend, and I cherish it as my greatest literary treasure. After all, the Bible that has been used to save souls is the best Bible.—Expositor.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

LOUISVILLE, OHIO

A report has not come from this part of the brotherhood for more than three months. Some worthwhile things have happened since our last report.

Our Sunday school has done some very creditable work during the year. A very liberal White Gift Offering was received and sent to our National Sunday School Treasurer. The Sunday school also prepared and delivered a fine Christmas pageant which was beautifully illustrated by colored electric lights. This work was directed and planned by our Sunday School Superintendent, Brother Louis P. Clapper.

On Mother's Day Brother Clapper again directed a very impressive service called, "The Mothers of Men" written by Ira B. Wilson. This was something different from our usual Mothers' Day services. A series of pantomimes illustrated the life in the Christian home. Brother A. S. Knoll read the story of a boy's life in the home until he leaves the home for one of his own. Appropriate songs helped to add effect to the service.

During the month of January the church granted the pastor an opportunity to engage in evangelism. It was our privilege to work with one of our close friends and fellow-pastor, Brother T. C. Lyon and his good people at St. James, Maryland. Now if any of our Brethren don't know where St. James is, I shall just say that it is just inside "The Gateway to the South" on the south side. We had a good time during the three weeks I was there. The people were most kind to me. In some ways they were too good to me, especially in the bountiful meals I was privileged to enjoy. This is a beautiful country, lying near the historic Potomac river and not far from Antietam. The weather and crowds were good and from later reports from there we feel that the meeting was somewhat of a success. I have a very happy recollection of the time I spent in Maryland and the generous hospitality and Christian fellowship.

Things are happening here at Louisville since I returned to my pastoral work. The pastor held a week of meetings during Easter week. We received our Foreign Mission Offering. One addition was made to our church membership. Some of our energetic young business men started something which begins to look like greater success is just ahead for this work. I am not going to reveal just now what these boosters did, only say this, that their accomplishment is so big they cannot keep it covered up. Some of the committee will tell the brotherhood of our later successes and hopes for the future in a later letter.

I must not forget to mention the fine work being done by our choir. I have a choir on duty at every service, and with at least one special number. Mrs. Louis P. Clapper has directed this phase of the work with meritorious success. At Easter the choir sang the beautiful Easter Cantata, "Our Living Lord." We were assisted in the preparation of this music by our good friend, Brother F. E. Clapper.

Our Primary department of the Sunday school rendered some very interesting numbers on Easter Sunday morning before the sermon. We have a very efficient Primary department, directed by Mrs. Floyd Miller and her able assistants. It is this part of our work that we are planning to enlarge to greater proportions.

The pastor is quite willing to confess his indebtedness to a large number of faithful people in the church here who help to make things go on. The people have expressed to us in a tangible way their loyalty and love. The spirit of the membership speaks of coming success in the work of the Brethren church here. If time and space would permit I could show the proof of the fine work our people are doing here. It is a real pleasure to work with them and to help encourage further achievements. I believe that before so many weeks go by we will have some more interesting news from this part of the Lord's vineyard. We are always glad to have our friends remember us, both in prayer and by visits. The work of the Brethren church seems to be doing well in Stark county. Our Canton Brethren who just a few years ago were a struggling mission church now worship in a magnificent modern church. The secret of these successes we believe, is the oneness in the Lord which seems to be so clearly manifest. Let all the Brethren work in unity for the glory of Christ and the Whole Gospel and our joy will be complete and full.

R. F. PORTE.

A DAY OF FELLOWSHIP AND WORSHIP

At our District Conference at Warsaw, last fall, there was a general feeling on the part of those present, that there should be a day set some time this year, in which we as a district could get together for a day of fellowship and worship. There is a need of closer cooperation among the churches, and a day set when we could come together and enjoy the fellowship of each other. It was also suggested that we should set that day on Sunday preceding the week of Religious Education at Shipshewana Lake, which will be Sunday, July 17. The churches of their district and all others that are near enough to come and enjoy the day with us, are urged to make every effort to get there on that day. We want every pastor and as many of the members as can to be there. There will be a splendid program. The first of services will be Sunday school at 9:30, and Rev. Raymond Schutz will deliver the morning sermon. There will be special features at each of the services. The best talent of the various churches will represent their church. The Nappanee band will furnish us with music for the Sunday school and will give a concert in the afternoon.

We ought to make this a great day. It will be a great spiritual uplift to get together in a service of this kind. You ought to go and see what we have at Shipshewana. I am sure you will be proud that we have such a clean, beautiful place to go, and to send your children. If you go once you will return, because its power and beauty are irresistible, and there is the purest and best water in the land, flowing wells everywhere. Just the right kind of a place to get together for worship and visit, renew old acquaintances and make new friends.

The churches of the southern part of the state should make a special effort. The roads are good and pavement part of the way. A new pavement out of Goshen goes within one mile of the park.

Let's go to Shipshewana Lake, July 17, with flying colors and let the world know that we are keeping pace with other churches in having a place we can call our own. There will be places to eat and sleep for those that care to go on Saturday and stay over till Monday. Come on. Let's go. C. A. STEWART.

INDIANA PASTOR'S RETREAT

May 9 and 10, the pastors of Indiana with their wives held their annual spring meeting. This year the meeting was at Shipshewana Lake, our Brethren Retreat. This makes an ideal place of meeting, for our purpose. The Lodge is very commodious for us. Here we hold our meetings in the lobby, slept in the adjoining rooms, and take our meals in the basement, which serves as an excellent dining room and kitchen. The W. M. S. of the Brighton church served our meals. Too much cannot be said in praise of their wonderful cooking, which added to the pleasure and success of our Retreat.

Monday evening, Brother C. C. Grisso led the devotions, Brother O. G. Lewis gave an illustrated Bible lecture, and Brother E. A. Duker brought an excellent sermon.

Tuesday morning was known as a problem session. After the devotions which were led by Brother Grant McDonald, Brother J. W. Clark led the discussion on, "The Problem of the Pastor and Personal Work." Brother S. M. Whetstone led in the discussion on, "The Problem of Our Pastorless Churches." Brother G. W. Rensch led in the discussion on, "The Problem of Bible Interpretation," and Brother D. A. C. Teeter in the discussion of, "The Problem of Attendance."

Tuesday afternoon was an ordinance session. After the devotions which were led by Brother Delbert Whitmer, Brother B. H. Flora read a paper on, "His Last Table Talk," Brother H. F. Stuckman read a paper on, "The Beauty and Purpose of Baptism," and Brother G. L. Maus spoke on, "The Anointing Service and its Value."

The matter of the Young People's Camp and Training School was then presented by Brother W. I. Duker. The pastors asked many questions relative to this school. The wonder of all was, why they do not receive more information regarding this school.

It was then announced that a gathering of young people from Nappanee, Goshen, Ardmore, South Bend and Elkhart churches resulted in 160 (one hundred and sixty) attending a banquet at the First Brethren church of Elkhart at which time the training school was presented to them. It was further announced that there will be another similar gathering at the Goshen church Thursday, June 2, when young folks from all our churches are invited.

A motion then prevailed after discussion that we hold our Spring Ministerium next year at the same time and place.

The session on Tuesday evening was led in devotions by Brother L. W. Ditch, after which Brother G. W. Rensch preached the closing sermon of the conference.

The fellowship that developed at this meeting was of the kind that builds in mind and heart.

S. M. WHETSTONE, Presiding.
B. H. FLORA, Vice-President.
N. V. Leatherman, Secretary.

LOREE, INDIANA

This church is enjoying a steady growth, while not making great strides we are going forward with a healthy growth, which means a permanent and stabilizing force in the community. Every department of the church is in good condition. The Sunday school is taking on new life now, since the winter months are over and folks can get out. We have missed our superintendent, W. A. Shinn, the greater part of the year. He was in California during the winter, and when at home he is doing county work a good part of the time. He is County Superintendent. The last two years Miami County has had the largest county conventions she has ever had, but it takes a lot of work, which takes away from us our superintendent. But the work has been carried on in a splendid way under the leadership of the assistant, Mr. Edward Loppold.

We have a fine group of young people who are loyal to the church. It is a rare thing to see any of them leave the services after Sunday school, and we have a large number of them. We have just organized a Christian Endeavor, and find that we have some splendid talent that only needs a little attention for development.

This church is a unit, and one of the most loyal churches I know of. Both old and young stand by the church and pastor. And it is with no small amount of sadness that we sever our relationship as pastor in October. But we have been on this field for nine years and held six meetings and feel that it is the wise thing to do. The new pastor, whoever he may be, will find a splendid group who will cooperate in every worthy cause, and it will be a pleasure to work with them. They have a good building and a good parsonage, with eight large rooms and three small rooms, good basement and electric lights, with four acres of ground. A beautiful place to live, on a good pike, eight miles from Peru, Indiana. Those wishing to correspond with the pastoral committee, can write to W. A. Shinn, Peru, Indiana, Rural Route 9. Charles Stuber, Peru, Indiana, Rural Route 9, or Mrs. E. B. Turner, Peru, Indiana, Rural Route 9. We will take up our new work at Mexico, Indiana, in October.

C. A. STEWART.

NEW YORK CITY

Greetings from the "Big City":

You will be glad to know that the dear Lord has been blessing us in our open air work at Broadway and Columbus Circle. His holy presence is greatly felt by saint and sinner alike, and real revival of spirit has come upon us since the 11th of this month. Praise the Lord, souls are being born again among Jews and Catholics, proving that the Gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth. How I long and hope that a suitable Brethren place might be opened up in this big city! God grant it soon.

We had a communion service observed by our Bible class on Thursday, April 14. I am letting our Sister Thomas write about it in her own words, which are as follows:

"Dear Brethren People:

"Our Bible class of which Rev. Emma M. Aboud is the teacher, and which meets in the home of Henry Smyth, 81 Grant Avenue, Brooklyn, New York, celebrated the Lord's Supper, and what a precious time we had together! Most of the members had never celebrated the Lord's Supper with the Feet Washing before. The Lord's presence in the person of the Holy Spirit was felt.

One member of the class, Mrs. Max, of 85 Grant Avenue, Brooklyn, in testifying on the following Monday said she had experienced a healing of the body on that occasion. Another member, a Mrs. Mirander, also testified to a healing on the same occasion, having been previously anointed by Sister Aboud. Every one present received a blessing in one way or another. How sweet it is to follow his example! Your prayers for this class are earnestly requested.

"Yours sincerely in him,

"Sister Thomas."

Praise the Lord for his great mercy and power. Pray for us that God may bless us more and more. Yours in his service,

EMMA M. ABOUD,

Astoria, Long Island, New York.

FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH

Clay City, Indiana

It has been some time since I last wrote a letter for the Evangelist readers so I will let you know in regard to the work at Clay City.

We have here a rather small but loyal group of Christ's servants earnestly endeavoring to do their part in the care of his earthly kingdom. All branches of the church work are quite active. The Sunday school, under the efficient leadership of Brother C. C. Roush, is moving along nicely. The average attendance to date this year 62; for the corresponding period last year 61. This is not a large increase, yet we are thankful for a gain even though it is small. Taking into consideration much sickness in the families of the church and the extremely wet weather prevailing throughout the winter and spring, we feel that the efforts put forth by these people have been far from a failure.

The W. M. S. and the S. M. M. with Sister Anna Megenhardt and her daughter Ruth, a teacher in the Clay City schools, as presidents, respectively, are doing very effective work and add greatly to the spiritual welfare of the church. One or two of the goals are difficult to attain, as this field is closely gleaned, and when a member is lost through removal or otherwise, it is difficult to fill the vacancy. Nevertheless, they are a real working force of the church.

Brother Garvin Goshorn, a senior in the Clay City High School, is leading forward the Christian Endeavorers of the church. He is a consecrated leader and the Endeavorers have much confidence in him as they recently re-elected him as president of the society. We have a membership of about forty—a mixed society—however, the young people holding the major offices thus taking the active part in leadership. The society meets each Sunday evening, taking a full hour for its meetings. These meetings have been so interesting of late that the leaders are obliged to dismiss become completing the lesson in order not to encroach upon the preaching service. Rev. Harold Fry of Oakville, Indiana, secretary of the Christian Endeavor work of the Indiana District, was with us Monday evening, May 9th and gave us a very instructive and helpful message. Brother Fry boosted Shipshewana. I have heard some of the young people express a desire to attend the young people's gathering there in July. If they can so arrange it it would be a real feast for them both spiritually and recreationally.

We meet in prayer meeting every Wednesday evening with an average attendance of 25. The majority of this group are young people. They take an active part in the study of the lessons. A large majority of these young people pray in public, which is gratifying indeed to the heart of a pastor. With such consecrated youth as this I have a vision of great possibilities in the future for this church.

Our revival meeting which was held in March has already been reported, but I would like to write somewhat in reference to it. Brother Claud Studebaker of Leon, Iowa, was the evangelist and he proved himself to be a preacher of deep sincerity, consecrated to the Master's service. Brother Studebaker has a wonderful command of the Bible, quoting chapter after chapter from memory. Very seldom does he read directly from the Bible, choosing rather to read it from memory. For three weeks Brother Studebaker preached each evening and three times on Sundays. He is also a tireless worker in doing personal work—one of the most pleasing and effective personal workers I have been privileged to yoke up with. He is sound on the Scriptures, thoroughly Brethren, a good speaker and possesses a pleasing personality. I have had Brother Studebaker in two meetings, the one here and one at Pleasant Grove, Iowa. If ever privileged to do so I would have him again. I heartily recommend him to any church needing his services. The outward result of the meeting was six added to the church by baptism. We cannot estimate the spiritual benefit, for we feel that all were drawn closer to the Master.

We are closing our pastorate here the middle of June. Rather unusual circumstances, especially for a minister, have brought this about. The estate property in Ohio has been rented for the past several years with very little profit. For example, last year the renter had out 20 acres of corn and hardly any of it was husked, being almost a total loss to us. There are in the county this year nearly 150 farms that will not be farmed, simply because of a lack of renters. None of the other heirs are in a position to help out in this situation, so I am moving on the place myself. The church here has kindly given me the privilege to leave in June. The Clay City church will be open at that time and solicits correspondence with any minister who may be looking for a location. Direct your correspondence to Martin R. Goshorn, Clay City, Indiana. I feel that this church will not be long in securing a pastor as it is in a fine spirited town of about 1500 where the churches work harmoniously together. If interested, write to Brother Goshorn.

Soliciting your prayers, I am

Sincerely yours in his service,

MARK B. SPACHT,

Clay City, Indiana.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

We want to give the brotherhood some news from the First Brethren church of this city. Brother R. E. Gotschall, our pastor, enthused the members to realize the need of redecorating the church and making other repairs, also of liquidating the debt on the church. We praise and thank God that all has been done, and the mortgage on the church was burned on the eighth of May, when we also observed Mother's Day. It was an all-day service, with Mother's Day program in the morning, a service of rejoicing and mortgage burning in the afternoon, after a happy dinner together in the basement, and a communion service in the evening. Brother G. S. Baer, president of the Ohio Mission Board, was with us and preached a grand Mother's Day sermon, talked to us again in the afternoon and conducted communion at the request of the pastor, in the evening. Brother S. E. Christiansen was with us and enjoyed the day, speaking in the afternoon and assisting in the communion in the evening.

We are grateful to the State and General Mission boards and to the W. M. S. for their aid. We have found it quite an undertaking to build up a Whole Gospel church in the city. It leads us to trust in God more and to be prayerful. We are greatly encouraged, but we realize we are only at the beginning of the work here. We think with our worthy pastor and his faithful companion that a great and good work can be done. We hope by the help of the Lord that our pastor can be released from his daily labor in the near future, so as to give all his time to the church, but as a congregation we know that we must do our part. Yet we fear that this would not be sufficient; our active members are not very many, though they are willing and faithful. We feel now is the time to go forward, but we need more outside help. It is expensive for a pastor to live in a city, and our pastor has five children. He has already sacrificed much by laying off from work to serve the church, but the demands are so great that calls for him in some homes must go unanswered. We desire the prayers of God's faithful for success in his cause.

MRS. E. J. HORNE.

RESOLVED

By Ord Gehman

I hereby resolve to start over again,
And reset my pace for the run;
My few, numbered years seem in vain,
But the journey has only begun.

I hereby resolve to do better each day,
And be a worthier friend,
So folks can say when my life is over "His hand he always did lend."

I hereby resolve to live not in vain—
And spend my time upbraiding
The work of someone more worthy than I,
Though to me it may seem degrading.

I hereby resolve to apply myself more,
My heart's frivolous desires denying,
I'll follow close to an inspiring motto—
"Don't try dying, but if necessary die trying."

I hereby resolve to live better each day,
And make the world seem fairer,
I'll follow the One, an example for me,
And I'll be his standard-bearer.

GRAFTON, WEST VIRGINIA

We are certainly glad to report the progress of the Lord's work in this part of the brotherhood. While we haven't been heard from lately, our work has been progressing very nicely, with Brother Howell as our pastor and his good wife, who is such a great help to us.

Since our last report we have gained ground considerably. Our Sunday school is quite well attended and is growing all the time. Brother A. D. Hovatter organized another school in a new addition of our city which we are praying may flourish and grow and the fruits of it may be seen in eternity.

We had our week of Pre-Easter services which was well attended considering everything. Two additions to the church resulted and we think quite a lot of others are thinking seriously. At the close of our meeting on Easter Sunday, Brother Gearhart from Dayton, Ohio, was with us and entertained us on that evening with a fine lecture and his stereopticon views, which we appreciated very much. We all certainly did enjoy Brother Gearhart's visit with us and we feel that we have been greatly strengthened by his being with us, and we are greatly in hopes he can be with us in the near future again.

We are planning for our church anniversary, about the last Sunday in June, which we hope to be very fruitful. There are a number of other points that we are looking forward to being of help to when we get through with some of our own work. Our Ladies' Aid is doing a fine work here, in helping in the finances. The Christian Endeavor is taking a very active part in their work; it is filling a real place in the activity of the church. No other organization is set for the same things or aims to accomplish the same work as Christian Endeavor.

Our mid-week Bible study is very well attended, and all our work is progressing very nicely. Brother Howell certainly has labored hard and earnestly since being with us, and I am praying that the church and the brotherhood at large will stand back of him, for he certainly is worthy of all encouragements. We do thank the Mission Board for their help and more than appreciate the encouraging letters and advice given us through them and Brother Trent especially.

Brother Howell has just returned from a few days' visit with the Brethren at Accident, Maryland. He preached three sermons for them while there. We ask an interest in all your prayers for the great work committed to us here.

FROM AN ITINERATING EVANGELIST

Dear Evangelist:

I have been very busy since my last report. I have been giving a few sermons on the "True Apostolic Church" at the Third Church of Philadelphia. The membership say they have been greatly benefited by them. I preached in Philadelphia over Sunday, but I am now in Delaware, where I had a great meeting last night. Every member gave a testimony after the sermon, even ten-year-old children. To splendid girls confessed Christ, also a mother and daughter expect to be baptized on my return.

As the Lord more and more manifests his power, some who have lost their first love, have become sensational, Pharisaical, encourage all kinds of falsehoods and misrepresentations. They preach about me instead of the Gospel. They belittle the baptismal service, and also speak slightly of the Communion service. I say nothing about them, but preach love for all and God has been very merciful to us and is greatly blessing us. I am trying in the midst of persecution (all unjustly) to speak of no man, but to encourage all to increase more and more in love. It will take some time to solidify the work. But we have already baptized sixteen and have some six or seven more applicants, besides two who were discouraged and have professed a renewal of their faith.

It will require great wisdom and much love to get this work back to where it was four years ago. I came on the field eighteen months too late. More than a hundred people stayed at home looking for a place where they could worship God according to their conscience and as they understood the Bible. My wife and children and a number of our best preachers urged me to throw myself into the breach and save the situation. After four pathetic appeals and much prayer, I reluctantly consented to go to their aid, knowing that I would forfeit the friendship of a few long-loved friends. I feel very sure now, that had I gone eighteen months sooner, I could have saved at least fifty more than I have been able to rescue so far. The Lord is working above my expectation and every indication is for a final victory for the Lord.

I have written this article that the brotherhood may know how to pray for me and these good people. Pray that I may show kindness and true love for the falsehoods and misrepresentations and hate that are shown towards us. ISAAC D. BOWMAN, and brothers said at the dinner table, 'James is the champion croquet player. He can beat any of us.'

Leesburg, New Jersey.

"Then mother said, 'James, do you want to give them the rules to work by so that they can win their games, too?'"

"James told them the rules but he was already ahead of them and he remained the croquet champion."

"That was a nice story, mother. Now I'll go out and see if I can win just like that other James. Will you help me remember the rules?"

The children are not in the church and most of us are not greatly disturbed about it. But we are greatly annoyed that the young people are not in our church services in any considerable numbers. We feel their loss and complain of their absence. We freely give expression to suspicions that something is wrong with the home, or with the young people, or with the Sunday school, or with outside agencies competing for the attention of young people. And truly something is wrong in all these directions, but the principal thing is that we have neglected the children. We have waited until the trouble was fully upon us, whereas we should have anticipated it and applied the remedy while it was yet in its incipency. And that is the task of the church right now with regard to those who shall be its young people of the next decade. It must secure their attendance and plan to interest them in its services before the habit of non-attendance has become so widely and firmly fixed, and before the child has become so hardened to appeals and so involved in antagonistic influences. Unless the church shall do this, unless it shall undertake to prevent or correct the evil before the individual has passed out of the period of childhood, it will find itself up against a discouraging proposition.

On previous occasions we have stressed this very point, but it is so vital to the welfare of the church that it needs to be often and strongly emphasized. We have had reactions from former editorials dealing with this subject and several of our ministers have expressed deep interest and some have assured us that they are giving serious attention to the matter, trying to encourage the attendance of children at their church services and seeking to provide something of interest for those who do attend. And in some quarters sufficient success is rewarding the efforts put forth to make the outlook encouraging. But there is still in evidence a considerable lukewarmness and indifference, and occasionally even coolness and opposition toward the presence of children in the church services, so that there is still much need of being awakened to the fact of this responsibility.

Pastors, parents and Sunday school teachers, all need to be stirred at this point. We can understand to some extent the parents' lack of interest in the attendance of their children, for it is not always a pleasant and easy task to take children to church and attempt to keep them properly behaved. Often a mother is so disturbed by her children's restlessness in church and feels that she gets so little out of the service, that she prefers to remain at home with her children until they are older. But we are inclined to think that such personal annoyance should be endured for the sake of getting the child started in the formation of right habits, even as parents endure and carry forward many another type of disciplining for the child's sake.

It is not so easy for us to understand the unconcern of the pastor regarding the church attendance of children, in view of the far-reaching consequences upon his congregation. For the habits of the children will be carried over into youth and adulthood, and the attitude that is adopted or encouraged in childhood toward church attendance will likely be continued when manhood and womanhood are reached. It is true, of course, that children sometimes disturb the services and annoy the preacher somewhat by their restlessness, and yet after all the extent to which such restlessness is disturbing largely depends on the preacher. He who has himself well in control, has a stirring message well lighted up with illustrations, and has a Christlike love for childhood and appreciation of its worth, will not have much trouble with the children present. It is largely a question of the appreciation of the importance of children in the church. Where there is a strong conviction that they should be in the church, no little disturbance or extra effort necessary will be allowed to interfere, but rather long strides will be taken toward getting them there.

The Sunday school teacher also has a responsibility for the presence or absence of children in the church services. They should encourage such attendance both by precept and example. The large majority of our Sunday schools are held just preceding the morning hour of church worship, and the teacher's attitude toward the church service will determine in no small way the feeling of the pupil toward it. Not infrequently the teacher, instead of encouraging the child in appreciation of it and with a sense of loyalty to it, gives out the impression that the child is not expected in church, that it offers nothing for him, and that he would be out of place in it, as it is practically a service for adults only. And some teachers teach by their example that it is not really important even that adults should attend, and under such circumstances the children cannot be expected to take an interest. A Sunday school teacher who does not show any sense of responsibility toward the preaching services, but regularly absents herself from them, is by her example working a great injury to the future of the church and should not be permitted to retain her position any longer than a more worthy successor can be secured.

Every one connected with the religious life and instruction of childhood should somehow be brought to realize that the church needs the child and should prepare a place for it, also that the child needs the church, that it has a place in it, a responsibility to it, and that something worthwhile and enjoyable is to be gotten from its services. The child ought to be in the church.

China Wants Missionary Support

Notwithstanding the widely-heralded Chinese attitude towards foreigners, brought on by foreign aggression and disregard of Chinese rights, some of the outstanding leaders of this country recognize the worth of Christian missions and urge that support of such enterprises shall not be withdrawn, claiming that the fierceness of the anti-foreign wrath has about spent itself, and that the mass of the people never did favor such rashness as has been in evidence. W. W. Yen, Ex-Prime Minister of China and under appointment as ambassador to Great Britain, has issued through the American office of Yenching University, a fervent appeal for continued support of the American universities of China. Yenching is the only Christian university in Peking and was formed by a union of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Congregational and London Mission colleges. Following is his earnest and glowing appeal:

"A serious and very injurious effect is felt by institutions established in China purely of an altruistic nature,—such as Yenching and other missionary universities for the education in a modern way of China's young men. Supporters in America begin to withdraw their financial help, and professors and other workers on the spot doubt their own usefulness in helping China under such circumstances. There is a general feeling of uneasiness, discouragement and even despondency.

"All this is understandable. We are in the midst of a great storm; waves, mountain-high in some places, seem to sweep away and swallow up with seeming ease vessels believed to be staunch in every way. Other ships, manned by brave and noble officers, begin to dread to try their strength against the howling hurricane and the foaming billows, approaching nearer and nearer. The idea is prevailing more and more to give up the fight,—to regard the situation as hopeless and all constructive efforts as futile, at least for some years to come.

"No one would be foolish enough to prophesy that the morrow would see the sun shine on a China with all the symptoms of disorder removed, but he would be a hopeless pessimist, if he thought that the Chinese people had lost all their common sense and abandoned entirely the dictates of reason. As a matter of fact, there is already a pronounced reaction against the excesses of the extremists, never approved of even from the beginning by the large majority of the Chinese people. There are signs, indeed, that the storm has already commenced to spend its force, and in the comparatively near future, the destructive elements will exercise less and less influence.

"I feel confident that the severe test that is applied to the Foreign Missions and their laudable activities in China will only bring out more distinctly the inherent and indestructible worth of such institutions. Much greater and more dangerous trials have fallen to the lot of Christian workers even in their own lands in times of the past, and in every case the true and the good have triumphed over the false and evil. May we not as students of history expect the same course of events to happen in China?"

EDITORIAL REVIEW

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK

"What must I do to be saved?" is the cry of the weary, restless world; and that is its one fundamental need. Do not feed men the sawdust of theological fancies and quibbles.

John S. Lyon, brother to the late Elder W. M. Lyon, and prominent member of the church at Washington, D. C., died on May 20th after an operation.

From a clipping sent us from a Warsaw, Indiana paper we learn that Brother C. C. Grisso has resigned his pastorate there and is to take up the work at Sunnyside, Washington, September 1.

In reply to inquiries received concerning the condition of Brother Orion E. Bowman's health, we are sorry not to be able to report progress. The latest word is that his condition is quite critical.

"Ask and ye shall receive" is fundamental to the victorious life. The divine promise is "My grace is sufficient for thee," but we must ask if we are to receive it, for the Lord forces his gifts upon no one.

A good sister from Altoona, Pennsylvania, writes of a visit she and a friend made to the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, and of the happy impression made on them by what they saw and experienced.

President E. E. Jacobs in his "College News" gives an account of the proposed whereabouts of the various members of the faculty for the summer. They will all be busy and most of them very much in the service of the church.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his canvass of the churches at Roann and New Enterprise, Indiana. Roann makes a gift of $800.56 to the Endowment Fund, while New Enterprise, where they are experiencing a struggle to maintain themselves, the amount was only $57.22.

As we were going to press we received notice that Brother John Perry Horlacher of Waynesboro, Pa., has resigned his pulpit to do further school work and the church is seeking a pastor. Any one interested may communicate with W. E. Minnich, 503 S. Pottomac Street, Waynesboro, Pa.

From Cerro Gordo, Illinois, we have a splendid report of progress and increase. Brother H. E. Eppley was with these people for several months stirring them to renewed activity and baptizing about sixteen souls into the church. He plans to return to them for the winter after spending the summer at Winona Lake, Indiana.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter, president of the Maryland-Virginia district Mission Board, writes of the splendid progress being realized at Winchester, Virginia, and incidentally fulfilled his promise to shout when that mission should reach an attendance of 100 in its Sunday school. He also calls upon all churches of that district to pay up their mission apportionments immediately, Brother C. D. Whitmer, pastor at La Paz, Indiana, writes that he is closing his work there in August and will consider a call to a full time pastorate. Though busily engaged in clerical work, work, Brother Whitmer has found time for a number of years to serve churches out from South Bend and is at present giving splendid service as writer of the Christian Endeavor lesson helps for the Angelus.

Brother Herman Koontz, pastor at Masontown, Pennsylvania, writes of the good work being accomplished there under his consecrated leadership. He went about the task of acquainting himself with the field in a very thorough way and has succeeded in building up a splendid spirit of prayer and evangelism among the people. During the pre-Easter services in which Professor McClain assisted, nine souls were added which brought the total additions since he took charge to twenty-nine.

Dr. C. F. Yoder forwards a tract that should be of special interest to us as showing the spirit of the Catholicism that prevails in South America and which fairly represents the inherent Catholic attitude toward Protestantism. If the people in Catholic countries are to have the Bible, Protestants must take it to them, and if they are to be taught the true Gospel of Christ Protestants must teach them. And to this end there has been laid upon us a large measure of responsibility in the Argentine.

Miss Mary L. Emmert, who is conducting a mission school in Africa, writes interestingly of the various activities on our African mission field. Every letter concerning the work over there convinces us more and more that our missionaries are laying wisely and well the foundation for a great uplift of those benighted people. The instruction, so evidently necessary in every line of interest is being taken care of as they find themselves able, so that we shall see not only a great turning to God, but ultimately also a notable growth in strength of character, in culture, and in standards of life and industry.

Beauty and Purpose of Christian Baptism

By H. F. Stuckman

(Paper read at Indiana Pastors' Retreat at Shipshewana Lake and voted published in the Evangelist.)

In leading this discussion, I shall forget for the time that you men before me are ministers, and that the things which I say upon the subject are the very ones you have said many times to the people with whom you labor. In other words, I shall discuss this whole matter, as if I were in my pulpit on a Lord's Day morning, speaking entirely to laymen.

When the purpose of baptism becomes apparent, then the beauty is revealed unto us. So I shall discuss first of all the purpose of it. There are a number of events and practices in the Old Testament that in a measure foreshadow baptism.

Paul says that the act of circumcision in a measure was like our Baptism—"In whom (Christ) ye were also circumcised with a circumcision, not made with hands, in the putting off of the body of the flesh, in the circumcision of Christ; having been buried with him in baptism, wherein ye were also raised with him through faith in the working of God, who raised him from the dead. And you being dead through your trespasses, and the uncircumcision of your faith, you I say, did he make alive together with him, having forgiven us all our trespasses—Col. 2:11-13.

Circumcision was a rite kept by Abraham and his followers to remind them of the covenant of faith, which they had with God. Much the same is baptism unto us—"For we are the circumcision, who worship by the Spirit of God, and glory in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Phil. 3:3. So as the circumcision became to Israel a sign of covenant faith in God, so baptism has been to us a sign of faith in him, through Jesus Christ, no longer do we have confidence in the flesh.

Paul uses the passage of the Red Sea as a foreshadow of baptism—"They were all baptised unto Moses in the cloud and in the sea" 1 Cor. 10:1, 2. What was involved here? (1) Leaving the Old Life in Egypt. (2) Burying the sinful past in the sea. (3) Emerging into a new life. (4) Obedience in this new life a means by which they were to enter the promised land. In each of these respects, baptism answers the same purpose for us.

Peter makes the ark a type of baptism—"While the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight souls, were saved through water; which is also a true likeness doth now save you, even baptism, not the putting away of the filth of the flesh, but the interrogation of a good conscience toward God." 1 Pet 3:21.

Here the points of similarity are: (1) As they left Antediluvian life, so the Christian dies to sin.—Rom. 6:12. (2) As sinful the world was burned beneath the flood waters, so we are buried in baptism into death, Rom. 6:4. (3) As Noah and his family in the ark passed through the flood waters, to enter a new covenant with God, so from the baptismal grave we rise to walk in newness of life, according to Romans 6:4. (4) As Noah and his sons proved their obedience unto God in it all, so baptism is the answer to a good conscience toward God."

As Brother Yoder so clearly points out, these do not represent the triple action of baptism, because God did not reveal himself to men, at that time, as Father, Son and Spirit. But the fact still remains that the Jewish washings before atonement are mentioned by the Hebrew writer in Hebrews 10:22, as a symbol of baptism, and these according to the best of Jewish scholars were always by the triple action. To this day orthodox Jews continue the triple washing, as a sign of the renewing of the heart. Even Proselytes from Gentile faith were required to be immersed as a sign of cleansing, before they could become Jews, according to Hastings Bible Dictionary.

This hurried study of types and symbols from the Old Testament reveals to us, that God was preparing minds and hearts for the advent of Christian baptism, which was begun with John's baptism and indulged in by Christ himself, and commanded by him in the Great Commission as a part of the great task resting upon the apostles and leaders, "baptising them in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." As we look back over the unfolding of truth on this subject, it is not a far distant leap which was made from Jewish washing, to Christian baptism, indulged in and commanded by Christ himself.

The purpose of Christian baptism is not hard to understand in the light of this unfolding of truth through signs and symbols. But with these we have abundance of evidence, as to its purpose throughout the New Testament itself. To these let us now go for an answer to the first question involved in the subject under discussion, namely, "What is the purpose of baptism?" May I state what I think that purpose is in a few words, and then substantially vindicate myself in the answer which I give by calling attention to certain of the New Testament teachings bearing on the answer?

"BAPTISM IS A SYMBOL OF REGENERATION." Its purpose is to proclaim to us the passing of the believer from the old life of sin to the new life in Christ Jesus. It sets forth the different steps which the believer must take, to experience the new birth.

Baptism means a Death of the old man of sin. Romans 6:11 says, "We reckon ourselves to be indeed dead unto sin." This crucifying the old self is being baptised into his death. In the likeness of Jesus' death," Or are ye ignorant that all we who were baptised into Christ Jesus were baptised into his death?" Rom. 6:3. As Jesus voluntarily gave his life (John 10:17, 18), so we by a voluntary action, forward, are baptised.

Next in turn comes the burial of this old crucified man of sin, represented by putting him in the baptismal grave, Rom. 6:4, "We were buried with him through baptism into death, that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so we also might walk in newness of life." This salvation of ours is not only from the penalty, but also the defacement and power of sin in us. Hence our salvation through Christ is not a something that saves for the moment, but something that keeps us saved.

Now with the old man reckoned dead and buried, there must necessarily be a resurrection of the new man in Jesus Christ. This is called a birth by John, as he tells of that memorable conversation between Nicodemus and Jesus. Over and over the regenerated ones are called babes in Christ. (1 Pet. 2:2). From now on we mean to do the will of God. Importance must be attached to this change that comes over us, when we remember that Jesus said it is necessary, in order to see the Kingdom of God. The water is a symbol of all this cleansing, while the spirit actually carries out the work itself. (Tit. 3:5).

Baptism represents to us the saving work of each member of the Trinity. This fact is passed by lightly by all single immersionists, but is none the less true. The Great Commission gives us the Trinitarian form, not the unitarian one. Time forbids me entering into a discussion of the definite and specific evidence to show that they are separate personalities. To any one who has given thought to the different passages bearing upon this question, the names are not interchangeable. If he had meant a single action, as representing a unitarian theology, he would have said, "In the Name of the Father" and been done with it all. But here he is particular to say that the baptism is to be in the name of the Father, and in the name of the Son and in the name of the Holy Ghost. Necessarily it must represent to us the saving work of each member of the Godhead. What does the New Testament say about the part of each?

The Father accepts the penitent sinner, forgives him of his sin (John 3:16 and Eph. 4:32). These new born babes are accepted as his children (John 1:12). If he accepts us as children, then we accept him as Father. Being baptised therefore in the name of the Father, means that we recognize God as our Father, who will accept us by faith, and forgive us of our sins, and annex us into his household.

The Son works propitiation for our sins (To appease, Rom. 8:3) and bears divine life to us (1 John 2:1, 2). To be baptised in the name of the Son, means that we have faith in him by which God's wrath for sin is appeased, and we have eternal life.

The Holy Spirit, the third member of the Trinity, to be baptised in his name, signifies that we have been convicted of our sins, for that is his office work in the world (John 16:8). The Spirit also magnifies Jesus, and enables us to live the Christ life, by guiding us into all truth (Gal. 5:16-18).

Baptism is presented to us as an attitude of faith, repentance and obedience. "He that believeth and is baptised, shall be saved" (Mk. 16:16). "Repent and be baptised every one of you for the remission of your sins" (Acts 2:8). "And now, why tarriest thou? arise and be baptised and wash away thy sins, calling upon his name" (Acts 22:16). The purpose then of baptism is to symbolize regeneration in all its working to the believer who receives it. To me it is essential to salvation.

The beauty of it now becomes apparent. We see in it God in the role of the Father, anxiously, longingly awaiting the return of the wanderer. And when he does return the Father receives him royally and forgives him. What picture could be more beautiful than that, and that is exactly what baptism should convey to us.

And Jesus in the role of Savior, came forth and offered his life in our stead that we might have our sins forgiven. Until the very life blood within him oozed out in the thought and agony of it all, as he wrestled with the problem of man's sins in Gethsemane.

The Holy Spirit like a good father, guiding his son aright, and pointing out to him the pitfalls along the way, and in the errors which he commits, never allowing him to move on without having the marred places removed, by convicting him of his wrongs.

I am afraid, brethren, that even we ministers have not yet fathomed the meaning of baptism, and been able through our teaching to lead others to fathom it. I wonder if these last observations which I have made, have been a part of our teaching on this matter.

Personally, from boyhood, there has been something about a baptismal service that awed and fascinated me. Many are the times, when I have tried to imagine myself at Jordan when John administered the rite of baptism to Jesus. Over and over have I tried to picture the scenes at the River Eider, when the first little group of Brethren gathered to be baptised. And standing out ever green in my memory are the services at the creek sides I attended when as a boy at home with father and mother we went reverently here and there, as such services were to be carried out.

There is always beauty indescribable in a willing obedient child of God going forth at his call to the commands of the Master. Just as Abraham is beautiful in his leavetaking of Ur of the Chaldees, and Paul setting his face steadfastly toward Jerusalem, that he might finally preach the gospel in Rome, so the faithful child of God going down into baptismal waters at his command, to arise and walk in newness of life in his service, is beautiful to behold.

My Father

By C. F. Yoder

(Dedicated to Elder Eli L. Yoder)

My father was a wealthy man and left a legacy,
Such as no Croesus ever can leave to posterity,
Each heir received, not part but all of that great heritage,
And church and state participate in each succeeding age.

My father had a bank account of energies unspent,
A body, strong and sound, was his, and he was well content.
No vices robbed him of his youth, nor claimed his vital force,
And that inheritance of strength continues in its course.

My father had a vast estate, broad acres finely tilled,
A world of mind whose crops are thots, each thot with treasure filled.
No earth-forged fetters ever held that mind to sensual plane.
It rose and soared and still explored the wealth of its domain..

My father owned a precious mine of jewels without compare,
Each jewel created for a crown for sons of God to wear,
On every jewel is engraved an attribute divine,
And Christian character, the name of that celestial mine.

My father held the title deed to mansions in the skies,
By that sane, simple faith he had in life's eternal prize.
'Twas sealed in blood. 'Twas bound in truth. 'Twas certified in Heaven.
And that same heritage of faith to all the heirs was given.

My father was a wealthy man. He sought no sordid gain.
Not skilled was he with dice or cards, nor lured by earth's domain.
For wealth, true wealth, is life divine, in Christ the Lord conferred.
And heirs, true heirs, are they who take by faith the living Word.

(Editor's Note: The above splendid poem arrived too late for the Memorial Day number of the Evangelist for which it was written, but its merit is not dependent upon a particular date, so we gladly pass it on for the appreciation of our readers.)

May I Do What I Like With My Own?

"Hang it all, man, I can surely do what I like with my own." I overheard the word in a political club in the north of England. I can say nothing of the matter they were discussing. That was the only sentence that disturbed the sedate silence of the club room.

It sounded reasonable and defensible in a political club room. The word followed me through the day as I threaded my way through our city life. Yes, that was the tacit understanding on the part of everybody.

As I saw men turn in for a drink or turn aside to register a bet, as I saw women crowd the bonnet shop or file into the cinema, as I saw the coin of charity given or refused in the streets, I understood that we all lived on the assumption that we had a right to do what we liked with that which was our own.

Late that same night I took up a little devotional book and the first word that caught my eye was "stewardship."

Here was a totally different attitude toward life from the one taken by the city I lived in. I read again the story of the talents. Life, my life, my goods, my all, were mine, held as trust and a responsibility.

A trust—that was a very beautiful thought. Someone in the unseen realm of reality had committed into my hands the gift of life. Someone had trusted me with this amazing enterprise of life.

But coupled with this thought was the grave sense of responsibility. Nothing was my own in the sense that I could do what I liked with it. Everything was my own in the sense that I could use it and multiply it.

This sense of trust graciously set my life free from a thought of indifference on the part of God. At the same time it set life sternly forth as an accountable affair. If life is a trust, then I can deal with the discouragement or even despair of the one-talented. If life is a responsibility, then I can deal with the pride of the five-talented.

There is a word that runs, "Some are born great; some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them."

Most people prefer to think of themselves as in the second category. Men like to recall their personal achievements. The possessions won by their own efforts seem so indisputably their own. Even when you point out the advantages of birth and parentage, they give one the impression that they showed their wisdom even in the choice of their parents!

But here is another attitude toward life—that all I have, all the initial advantages, all the talents of industry and intelligence, are a gift to be held in trust, for which I shall be held responsible at the last day. Life is mine to trade with. My time is mine only to use. I must give account of my leisure. I must redeem the time.

My experiences are mine to trade with; even the dark-er experiences. What have I done with the bereavement, the disappointment of the tragic happening? Did I find treasures in darkness and the hidden riches of secret places?

I must give account for the deeds done in the body, even when the body is torn by a cross that was fashioned for my hurt by another. I hold all in trust—my handicaps and superiorities. By the providence of God and the necessity of nature we are born into an unequal world.

Legislate as you will, men can never have the same chances, the same opportunities. Here is the ground for injustice and for bitterness. Here is the ground for exploiting, for arrogance, for divisions and strife.

Yet how wonderfully our Lord has anticipated all our present difficulties in this idea of life as stewardship. How this thought smites the disdain of the mighty, the heedless contempt of the strong, the complacency of the prosperous, and how it lifts into dignity the handicapped, those who seem to have been forgotten and overlooked when the prizes of life were distributed. The one-talented were not overlooked. The talent was a gift, and they are so far accountable.

I sometimes wonder in these years of rapid success, when so many of our own people have shot up into stations of life, new and wealthy, whether this sense of stewardship does hold with them. How quickly they pass from smaller to larger houses, from two-seaters to expensive cars, from this to that more costly furniture.

It is not a question as to whether they are giving more proportionately to the church, but whether the idea of responsibility is with them as a sober thought or not.

I remember one very wealthy man in London who had been persuaded by his minister to look at some sketches a young girl had done. She was in financial need. The man of wealth bought one or two and allowed the girl to name her price. They were mediocre art, but the girl asked an extravagant price. The wealthy man was troubled, though he paid.

Talking to the minister afterward on the subject, he said, "I have made much money, but I feel I hold it all as a trust, and I shall be held responsible for the way I have spent or given my money. In this matter I feel I have been careless and squandered money."

It is a sober way of looking at things. I remember as a youth hearing the Rev. John H. Goodman, to whose preaching I would have walked further than to that of any other man in our ministry.

He was speaking of buying books. He said, in so many words, "I stand outside a bookshop. There is a book I want. It will cost five shillings. If I take the trouble to find out, I can discover five men who want a dinner. Ought I to spend five shillings on a book?" "Yes," he said, "If I am sure that the deep motive with me is so to equip myself that I shall be a better minister of the gospel, a gospel that can deal with every problem of moral and every other need."

That is dangerous arguing for any but sincere men. It is holding life as a trust.—A. E. Witham, in "The Methodist Recorder."

A WARFARE

"The beginning, the progress, and the end of the Christian life is no day draem. It is a warfare. Not alone for ourselves, but for our loved ones, for this nation and for its moral leadership in the world, I plead that you now venture your souls on Christ's power. Launch out, quit skirting the inlets, put your helm hard about and steer straight into the unfathomable ocean of Divine Love. No lesser course of faith will serve in the present emergency."—Dr. S. Parkes Cadman.

Conventional ministers, satisfied with little essays on modern socialism and untouched by great, deep passions of salvation, are nothing more than animated scarecrows in the pulpit. Formality is an evidence of spiritual death. It makes the altar a coffin and the church a corpse. If Christianity had been one tithe as much interested in building itself into the hearts of men as it had been in building monuments to itself in cathedrals of stone and brick, the World War never would have been fought.—Rev. Dr. George Hugh Birney.

Desertion from God. II Timothy 4:10

By Mrs. Edna Nicholas

"For Demas hath forsaken me having loved the present world." This scripture implies "desertion from God" and the truth will apply to all of us.

We have often wondered why a deserter from the army should meet such terrible punishment, but the study of the above text will help us to understand why.

All of God's people have enlisted in the army of the Lord, and you are, if you are his child, in that army, battling for God's cause—for the cause of Truth and Right. You are using the weapons God has given you and these weapons must be used faithfully to the honor and glory of his name.

Every young man who enlists in the army of his country must pledge his allegiance to his nation, the people whom he serves. He becomes a servant of his country. He takes upon himself an oath to sustain at all hazards and under all conditions the integrity, the honor and standard of his nation, even to the laying down his life, if need be.

When a man deserts the army, that deserter having been caught, is courtmartialed, convicted and punished, and in many instances his life is forfeited. Surely it is one of the most terrible things we can contemplate, a betrayal of trust. In military circles this means disgrace and a violation of the oath of allegiance.

Every Christian has pledged his allegiance to the Great King—you are pledged to maintain the standard of God.

If you enlisted in his army you are his—your life is subject to his commands. This life is not ours. "You have been bought with the price."

Having been purchased you belong to God and his work. The greatest work of this life is to maintain the cause of our King. Shall we do it or shall we not?

Our text tells us Demas left the hallowed association of the apostles because he loved the world.

We know very little of this man but the little that is given is favorable up to the last hour. He had been closely associated with the apostles, stood high in the spiritual life and in association with the men of God in that age!

You see that even association with good people does not always save men from breaking with God and deserting his cause. You may be in good company and still be bad at heart. A man may be in very good company and fall into deep disgrace as in the case of Demas.

We stand, if we stand at all, not by the force of considerations or condition, but by the force of real character, for what we really are.

It is quite common to hear men say, "I will be saved, I am in the church." My friend, there is a possibility that you are not in the church in the sense Christ intended you should be. You may have taken your vows before men and still not be a member of Christ's body. Outwardly you may appear to be a very good soldier but you have never entered into the spirit of his work or become engrafted into the true and loving vine. Every effort put forth should be to the glory of God and the salvation of men.

The departure of Demas teaches the strongest to take heed lest he fall, the happiest to rejoice with trembling and to keep his garments unspotted from the world. If we do not keep ourselves in control we may yield to temptation; we may desert the army of the Lord.

Those who are enlisted in the army of the Lord are expected to be battling soldiers of his army, you must be up and doing, you are using God's weapons and are supposed to be executing his commands.

If you ever desert his army there will be some cause. I believe the greatest cause for desertion is cowardice. Many a man has gone from God because he was afraid to take upon himself all the obligations of a Christian. Many say, If it were not for the humiliating obligations of the church, I would be a Christian. They are afraid to show the world they have put on Christ.

There is no other pathway through which we can travel but the pathway that will lead you to the Cross of Christ.

Some may have deserted because they neglected to pray. "Pray that you may enter not into temptation," that you may not be overcome in the heat of the battle, that you may successfully maintain the "Standard" of the King. The poor Hindu will not enter the ranks of battle without first having prayed to his god as best he knows, then he goes forth fearlessly. If we win we must go forth in the strength of Israel's God; this strength comes through prayer.

Demas loved the present world—like many today, he loved the alluring pleasures of the world—they desert their Lord, they forfeit their right to eternal life.

It is not the world, nor its money, nor its honors, nor its enjoyments the Bible condemns, but the love of them. The world is yours, but not in the sense that we should center our affections on it. It is yours in the sense that you belong to Christ. It is yours to use to the honor and glory of God. "Whosoever loveth the world is not of the Father." Give your hands to the world but keep your heart for God who loved it with such love that he gave his Son to die for it.

There is no reward in the army without service faithfully performed—no reward without hardships and bravery in keeping the emblem of his country to the front and in maintaining the standard of his people.

It takes fortitude and strength to maintain the Standard of our Lord before the world, but if we are to win a reward, we must stand fast and faithful to his principles and teachings—we must be never-failing in executing his commands. If we are to receive a crown, we must bear the Cross. Through much tribulation we come into the Kingdom of heaven.

A soldier who deserts the army, who betrays the trust his country has given, who breaks his oath of allegiance, lives in dishonor and dies in disgrace.

The man who deserts the army of the Lord, breaks his covenant with his God, betrays his trust and tramples on all righteousness,—having loved the present world—he forfeits his interest in heaven—eternal life.

WHY HE BELIEVES BIBLE INSPIRED

The fact that the Bible has lived through the centuries, despite the many attempts to destroy it; that it is the most highly respected book in the entire world today; that it has the power to convert men even without the aid of a minister; and that it consists of 66 books written by 40 different authors during a period of 1,600 years, and yet dovetails each book into the other, as if written by one author, with the exception of minor differences of style, is sufficient proof to me that it is the Word of God and that its authors were inspired men.—Dr. A. A. McGeachy, Presbyterian pastor.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

How to Shine

Brightly--Conspicuously--Individually--Constantly

By D. A. C. Teeter

TEXT: Even so let your light shine before men; that they may see your good works and glorify your Father who is in heaven.—Matthew 5:16.

It is the design of God that his true followers should show the world around them what they are; that they should not possess unto themselves alone the qualities of faith, love and the other fruits of the spirit, but should manifest their Christian character to the world and let it be seen that they are of such and such a temper and will, that they have such and such affections, aims and hopes. It was never intended by God that religion and goodness should be a secret locked up in the heart itself, that none should know of it but the individual self, but that it should remain from birth to the grave an unseen treasure. It was intended by God that goodness should be seen and that the sight of it should inspire others and that the mind of others should be raised and their affections warmed by the sight of it—that every servant of God should spread a circle of light around him.

We are intended by God to be witnesses for him in the world, witnessing to the truthfulness of Christianity and to the power and excellence of the Gospel, and to that end it is necessary that the light of our good works shall shine before men. The greatest testimony that can be given is a life. We are bound then to give this testimony and give it with a purpose that others shall see and be influenced by it.

When the Son of Man came into the world to save sinners, he said, "I am the light of the world." When he would give us a conception of heaven, he said it was a place of light. There shall be no night there and they need no candles, neither light of the sun, for the Lord God giveth them light and we shall reign for ever and ever. In the strictest sense Christ is the light of the world. As the moon and stars reflect the sun, so the followers of Christ reflect his light. Therefore he said, "Ye are the light of the world." But along with this fact, he said, "Let your light shine." This duty enjoined is imperative and every Christian should follow the command.

Note first the positive injunction, that Christians are to do everything in their power, that their light shall shine as brightly as possible. This is to be done, first, by the position we assume. A lamp on the floor will not send its rays as widely as if it were suspended from the ceiling. So every Christian should connect himself with the church and should do this not only for the sake of the Master, but also for the sake of the outlying world, and should accept any place in the company of the faithful to which he may be called.

Secondly, by the character which we form. The influence that a man exerts depends on his character. Even as the fragrance of a flower depends on its nature, or the fruit of a tree on its kind.

Third, this injunction is to be obeyed in the exertion of effort for the conversion of our fellowmen. Look at the negative side of the injunction which requires that we remove everything which tends either to hide or obscure our light, or which so affects its shining as to make it suggestive of ourselves rather than God. That means that we should get rid of that self-consciousness and that self-centeredness by which multitudes are characterized and which keeps the true light of character from shining with as powerful an influence for good as otherwise it might. This injunction implies that we should avoid all self-display. The purpose of letting our light shine, is that God, not ourselves, may be glorified.

Astronomers tell us that some of the smallest stars among the heavenly bodies have the brightest light and are of the most service to the world. In order to have our lights shining brightly there must be no obstruction in the way, nothing to dim the light that is in us. This figure of light is quite common with us. If the wicks of our lamps are not trimmed and the chimneys are not clean the light will be dim. It cannot shine brightly. So it is with our hearts. If we are to shine brightly we must have clean hearts.

Solomon said, "Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life." David prayed, "Create in me a clean heart, O God and renew a right spirit within me, then I will teach transgressors thy way and sinners shall be converted unto thee." David realized if sinners were to be converted it was necessary for him to have a clean heart and a right spirit. So it should be with us. It is not the enlargement of our endowment that we have to consider, but the transparency and luster of our lives.

We are to shine conspicuously. This large and animated gospel view is opposed to every corrupt notion of the human heart, that a man may be a true Christian and a secret Christian, that he may be a true Christian by a mere inward feeling and sentiment which he has cherished through life without any active manifestation of his course and standard of life. In a word, the idea that a man may be a true Christian and yet not a witness to Christianity is false and an impossibility. The text declares that the goodness must be visible, must show itself and must be an object for the mind for those around to rest on, otherwise there is no effective goodness.

This is what Christ meant when he said, "A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." It is the duty of every Christian to place himself where he can shine conspicuously for Christ. This does not mean conceitedly, but conspicuously. There are conspicuous places and I believe the most conspicuous place in all the world is the home. The home is the center of all society. Well did Talmage say, A republic within a republic, a country within a country, a state within a state, a city within a city is spelled with four letters, H-O-M-E. We have heard people talk about the church being in a precarious condition and that Christianity is losing ground. That statement is possibly true, but may I say there is no time when individual efforts count so much as in time of peril. Certainly individual light is demanded at the present time. Were you ever on an ocean liner in the midst of a storm when the wind was blowing hard and the waves rolling high? At such a time every officer and sailor is at his post. Individual effort counts wonderfully.

We are to shine individually. Dr. Wharton tells of a storm that occurred one night when one of our ocean steamers was in danger of being lost. The whole crew was individually at work. One of the sailors fell and hurt himself and could not do much, but was willing to stay by his post and do all that he could. But the captain ordered him to his state room. He was depressed that he did so little to save the ship. While meditating he heard a cry, "A man overboard." He instantly was buoyed with a noble spirit and lighted his little lamp and held it at the port hole. The feeble rays of light fell on the water so the other sailors could see the drowning man and save him. This is what God would have us to do. While our individual efforts may not be seen to count for much, they may bring great results when faithfully exercised.

Let your lower lights be burning. If you are a light, "SHINE." The light-house keeper is not able by taking pains to cause the ships tossing away out at sea to behold the beam that shines from his lamp. All he has to do is to feed it and tend it. And that is all that you and I have to do, is to tend the light, not like cowards, cover it up, and it will shine. Modestly, but bravely he must let the light of his Christianity shine by abstaining from "fleshly lusts which war against the soul." "That with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." "Love the brotherhood." "Fear God." Be not as a dark lantern burning with the slides down, illuminating nothing and nobody. LIVE YOUR CHRISTIANITY. Remember that candles are not lights merely to be looked at and admired for their beauty. They are lit that something may be seen. So live that men may see God through your conduct and words.

Lastly, we must shine constantly. There is much spasmodic Christianity. We have what is called the up-and-down Christians and some of them are down more than they are up; up when things are going well, down when they are going hard. It is no wonder that the Apostle Paul said, "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering." Constant effort is the essential demand of Christianity. Let your "light shine" constantly for the Master.

I remember reading about two men who had charge of a revolving light in a light-house on a storm-bound and rocky coast. Somehow the machinery went wrong and the light did not revolve. They were afraid those at sea would mistake it for some other light, and they worked all night through to keep the light revolving around, so those at sea might have a safe voyage.

This constancy, this faithful continuing in well-doing is the demand of the Master, so those out upon life's billows may see "OUR LIGHT" and thereby be brought to the "Lamb of God" that takes away the sins of the world.

Thus we may shine, Brightly, Conspicuously, Individually, and Constantly, until the ransomed church of God is saved to sin no more.

GOD AND ETERNITY

Remember that God is working for eternity, and has eternity to work in. It takes centuries to make an oak tree; things without worth complete their life-course in a day or a week or a year. As for yourself, have patience with yourself, for you are building up a character which shall have eternal worth. Have patience with God in the working out of his purpose, for he is making a kingdom which shall endure forever. . . . Be patient with other people, and out of the patient expectation try to help them.—James Iverach.

Our Worship Program

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT
(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST—Mark 1:16-20. Instead of planning our own life and activities, every sincere soul should ask, What would Jesus have me do? He knows best; he has a plan for every life and he will make it known.

TUESDAY

THE TEST TOO SEVERE—Matt. 19:16-26. "Go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, . . . and come and follow me." Nothing can be allowed to stand between the disciple and his Lord; anything that would separate, must be given up. This is a test too severe for many, and they prefer to go their own selfish, unsundered way.

WEDNESDAY

FULLY YIELDED—Acts 9:1-9. "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" That is the question of a surrendered man, ready to be directed by the Lord Jesus. When one has reached that point through prayer and meditation; when he has come from the presence of Christ with pure heart and shining face, he is ready and willing to undertake whatever task awaits him.

THURSDAY

VINE AND BRANCHES—John 15:1-10. "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love." Here we find the secret to that vital union suggested by the "vine and the branches"—it is love. That is the power that binds the Christian to his Lord and makes fruit-bearing possible. And "we love him because he first loved us."

FRIDAY

THE DISCIPLE'S REWARD—Matt. 19:23-30. "Every one that hath forsaken, . . . for my name's sake, . . . shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life." Jesus makes very exacting requirements for discipleship, but his rewards are as generous as his requirements are exacting. We cannot refuse the one without being denied the other.

SATURDAY

CHRIST'S EXAMPLE—Phil. 2:5-11. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus." What a challenge that mind of humiliation and service is to every Christian disciple! He who was equal with God, was willing to divest himself of glory and become a servant to the humblest child of earth.

SUNDAY

LOVE AND SELF-DENIAL—Rom. 14:16 to 15:3. "And not to please ourselves." But that is the very thing we like to do—to please ourselves. The reason is, of course, that our love is directed supremely towards self, rather than towards others. Rather than denying self, we seek to pamper self—we do until our hearts have been regenerated and flooded with self-denying love.—G. S. B.

Review: Life and Letters of Peter

Devotional Reading—Isa. 55:6-13.

Golden Text—Come ye after me and I will make you fishers of men.—Matt. 4:19.

Review Suggestions

It is often said that Scripture truth is hard to understand because it is so unlike anything else men have known. Just as Jesus spoke as never man spake before, so the truths he uttered were unlike any man had known before. In that sense Scripture truth may be difficult. It is the Infinite God revealing himself to finite beings—a tremendous undertaking even for God.

But in the lessons of this quarter much of this truth is exemplified in the life of a man, and that makes it much easier to understand. We can so much more readily grasp the meaning of a thing when we see it done than when we are merely told about it. Peter experienced many of the fundamental experiences of men in his call, his discipleship, and his apostleship; and the lesson which we have studied reveal the effect of Scripture truth in and upon a life that honestly and sincerely strove to live after the manner of Christ. Let us study this character from several viewpoints.

1. Study Peter's strong points. First of all he was not an idler. He was engaged with his father and brother in the fishing business. He was open-minded. When Andrew told him of Jesus he was ready to investigate the claims made for him. After he had satisfied himself of the truth of Jesus' claims he was ready to forsake his business for the greater thing to which he was called. He was enthusiastic, heroic, and loyal to his Master, and had all the qualities which made him the leader among the apostles.

2. Study Peter's weak points. He was impulsive sometimes to the point of rashness. He was conscious of his own importance, as when he advised Jesus not to think of the cross. He suffered from discouragement when he was rebuked or failed in what he undertook. Nor was he always master of his former life and early habits, as is evidenced by his behavior in the high priest's house at Christ's trial.

3. Construct his character from what he reveals in his epistles. He expresses his faith in Jesus Christ, his love for the Savior, his assurance and abiding hope, the high dignity of the Christian, the meaning of trials, the need of a holy life for the believer, the blessedness of suffering for righteousness' sake, exhorts believers to live in the will of God, to be subject to human ordinances, to live useful lives, warns against false teachers, and inspires saints to lives of steadfastness. What manner of man would write such letters?

4. Study Peter's life from its experiences. He witnessed the transfiguration, saw the crucifixion, had a personal interview with Christ after his resurrection, and was miraculously delivered out of the hand of Herod. Only a great life can have great experiences.

5. An interesting slant on this character may be had by studying some of his expressions. He made five statements to Jesus himself which are illuminating. Two he made in connection with the healing of the lame man, and one in the home of Cornelius. All these with many others will well repay a careful study.—The Otterbein Teacher.

This form of review, which is especially adapted to the older classes, will study different phases of Peter's many-sided character, each phase being illustrated from Peter's entire life, and applications being made to modern Christians. 2. Peter's Leadership

A Children's Day Service That Was a Bit Different

By E. J. Betterley, in Lookout

Would Children's Day be really Children's Day if we could not have the masses of flowers that always beautify our churches now, and sweet, eager voices piping up from behind fragrant blossoms in the children's concert? Probably, those same earnest, willing children have spent the previous day gathering flowers and carrying them to the church where older hands arrange them in front of the altar. And before that, over and over again the children have "said their pieces", and rehearsed them for the teacher.

Oh, the infinite patience, and the hours of planning and preparation that go into a real concert. Verses, monologs, songs, marches, Scripture, it matters not through which mediums the sentiments of the day are expressed, the loving work has been done by patient faithful teachers. Their reward comes during the concert when up front the children praise God, and down in the audience happy, proud parents and friends lift their hearts in silent praise that glows and shines upon each face like a benediction.

And the children, do they get any lasting benefit from the concerts? I am sure that they do. Certainly we can look back to the days when we "spoke pieces", and still feel the mingled spirit of importance and peace. The praise and peace and happiness of our pieces sank into our hearts to stay, though today we remember not a word of our verses.

These ideas worked about in the mind of one Sunday school teacher until she determined to try something a little different,

A Living Religion

"Christianity is a living religion. The way of entrance is that of death, but it is the way that leadeth into life. This was so in the work of our Lord. In order to save, he died. The salvation into which he brings men through his death is that of life, and that more abundantly. So with all who receive that salvation. The condition upon which they do so is that of death, the self-denial which is the ending of all confidence in self, and all endeavor to win life by effort. When that condition is fulfilled life is received as a grace-gift of God. Then dedication begins. This is an important distinction. When the soul yields to Christ, it is not giving anything to God. It has nothing to give. It is sinful unworthy. It yields just as it is because it cannot make itself worthy, and because in grace he calls for its surrender and trust. When this surrender of a sinful and unworthy being is made he takes the polluted life and pardons, cleanses and renews it. Now the renewed, cleansed, pardoned one is called upon to present himself or herself to God as alive from the dead. 'Just as I am,' I cannot dedicate myself to God, but I can yield myself to the Savior. When I am what the Savior makes me I can present myself to God and I shall be accepted in the Beloved. Such dedication is implicit in my yielding to Christ. It must be explicit in the resulting life."—G. Campbell Morgan.

Those who have grown up in church work realize the importance of learning Scripture when young. How many times, in the struggles of later life, do the comforting encouraging passages return to help us. Yet what child likes to be compelled, or forcibly urged in any way, to learning so, how much of it is retained long in the memory?

The previous Christmas concert, a class of boys had told the tale of the Nativity by each reciting in turn two or three verses from the second chapter of Luke. One of the boys had also received for a Christmas gift a booklet giving the same story, taken from the same passages, but told in rhyme. How eagerly that boy went over every word to note the difference. So, argued the teacher to herself, the children do take an interest in Bible verses. Now, how to make it interesting to learn them.

For the Children's Day concert, then, she arranged the entire spoken concert to be given in Bible verses, interspersed with the usual Children's Day music. In some cases, entire classes stood up together, each having one or more verses to say. In other passages two or three children recited the verses. Occasionally, one child would recite alone a Psalm, or portions of one. She chose "Children," "Love," and "Praise," for the keynotes, and these were the passages distributed among the children to learn: Mark, 10:13-16; 2 Timothy 3:14-17; Psalm 34 (entire Psalm); Ephesians 6:1-4; Proverbs 15:1, 2, 5, 6, 7, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 23; 1 John 4:7-13; 1 Corinthians 13 (entire chapter with

The Christian Endeavor Pledge

By John Visick, Intermediate C. E., First Brethren Church, Long Beach, Calif.

(An address given in The Intermediate C. E. Oratorical Contest, Long Beach California, taking second place in the contest).

Friends: my topic this evening is, "The Christian Endeavor Pledge."

This organization here represented is but the result of a simple pledge, yet a pledge simple only in words, for it bears every distinction of being a divinely-directed author. It has led some millions of young people to a more happy life in Christ, through the medium of Christian Endeavor. It has established the principles for the simplest and finest Christian life. It is not every organization that has to its credit such worthy accomplishments and principles as have been carried forth on such a plan as this.

Christian Endeavor has not prospered by means of financial aid, neither has it endured because people of exceptional genius are at its head, but the secret of its success rests solely in the first clause of its pledge: "Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength."

It has been said that all the duties of the Society are embraced under this head and are interpreted by this clause, for without him to whom the pledge refers, the whole organization would have been a complete failure.

We are satisfied that no genius or combination of genius could have in forty-five years introduced into every land a movement so great as this, covering seventy denominations in over sixty countries.

It does not matter what the nationality may be, the pledge of Christian Endeavor has been adapted to all races as well as to all churches and ages. It is safe to say that the Christian Endeavor pledge does not involve any creed or dogma, for in nearly a half century of use there have been no disputes as to creed; there have been no matters of religious difference to adjust, but the Christian Endeavor pledge has pointed to Christ as the foundation stone of the organization.

The success of any Society is attributed to the keeping of this pledge.

Even though the pledge has been called "Iron-Clad" by many, yet it has not changed its original form. There have been criticisms leveled against it, and some of them multitudinous, but the pledge has continued to keep its original form and it does work advantageously wherever it is used.

Christian Endeavor goes beyond the wilful antagonist who would seek to evade the high purpose of the organization and who would offer in its stead something supposedly more interesting for young folks.

Dr. Clark has said that Christian Endeavor glories in the fact that it is distinctly, decidedly, and rejoicingly a religious society. It does not seek to camouflage its religion with worldly attractions; it does not bait its hook with doubtful amusements. Worldly attractions have never made the Christian Endeavor compromise nor lower the principles that it should maintain.

Christian Endeavor is not the debating society or "pink tea" that some would make it, but it is an organization with a purpose,—"For Christ and the Church"; and a method,—"By Prayer."

The founder, Dr. Clark, has discovered that a prayer meeting can be made more interesting than a debating society, and that young people even of today, have a religious nature that religion only can reach and effect. He has therefore given it this high purpose and adopted this method.

It can be truly said that prayer has made the Society in its numbers, its spirit, and its cause, and we are always glad to recount the number who are in the ranks of Christian Endeavor. But we are more seriously inclined to forget the greater number that are outside of any young people's religious organizations whatsoever.

Let us therefore, every one, make it his solemn duty to God and to humanity to show others the Christ who is in Christian Endeavor.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for June 19)

What Does Reverence Mean?

Ps. 19:14, 95:1-6

In a certain town there once lived a number of children who were very good little children but they did not know how to be respectful and reverent as they should be in God's house. They talked and laughed and so became very, very noisy.

One Sunday evening there were a number of these children out for Junior Christian Endeavor. The superintendent looked them all over and said to herself, "I believe that this would be a good time to teach these children that lesson about reverence that I have been feeling that they need."

When it was time to start the meeting, she told the pianist that she wanted her to take the children and teach them some music. Then while the rest of the children were singing, the superintendent selected four and told them to come with her for she had some special work for them to do.

She took the children with her and they went up to the church proper, for the Juniors met in the basement. When they had gone upstairs, she said, "Now, children, we are going to practice a little play that we will have for the rest of the children. Our play is going to be called, "Reverence." First, Mary, you go back to the door and come into the church. As you come in, you are to laugh and call across the church to someone that you want to sit with. Next, James and Robert, you come in talking together. Just as you get inside the church door you are to begin arguing about something. You may talk very loud and be very cross at each other. Then last of all, you may come in, Catherine. You are to be carrying your Bible, and as you come in I want you to smile as though you were happy but walk very quietly as you go up front and take your place. You other children should wander around awhile before you finally sit down. Now we will go through it once before we call the other children up."

When the little play had been practiced they sent word to the other children to come upstairs. All the Juniors except Mary, James, Robert and Catherine were told to sit up in the very front of the church where they could see the whole church.

The children who were in the little play acted their parts very well. Each of them did just as he or she had been told to do. It was only a short time until it was over and the four children had seated themselves in the church. Then the superintendent said, "This little play is called "Reverence." Which of the children who came into the church just now was the most reverent and which of them were not respectful?"

"Mary and Robert and James did not act nice. They were not a bit reverent," said one Junior.

"I think that Catherine was reverent," said another Junior.

"I think that everyone ought to act quiet and nice like Catherine did when they come into church," said another of the Juniors.

"That is fine," said the superintendent. "That is what I hoped that you would say. The church is God's house. We come to the church to worship God and when we come into it we want to remember where we are going. We show our respect for God when we come into his house quietly and think of him while we are here. Now before we go downstairs for our closing song, I want all of you to go outside of the church and come in the way that you think God would like you to come into his house. Remember that he wants you to be happy, but see if you can remember to show your respect for him by being quiet in his house."

All the children went out of the church and came in as nicely as they could, and they resolved that never again would they be noisy in church.

DREAMING AND DOING

Dreams and visions have their use and time, but we can not "sit and sing ourselves away to everlasting bliss" when the fields are white unto the harvest and there is a shortage of workmen. The church is a labor guild, and to every one, even the humblest follower of Christ, comes the injunction, "Go work today!"—Intelligencer.

Missionaries as Catholics See Them

By C. F. Yoder

The following is the translation of a part of a tract widely distributed in Argentina. It carries the notice that it has been blessed by "his holiness Pius 11th" and the faithful who recite the prayers accompanying it are promised plenary indulgences, applicable to the suffering souls in purgatory.—C. F. Y.

"In the last four hundred years of European history there is no spectacle more sorrowful than Protestantism. When Europe was marching forward in civilization and was on the point of blossoming out into the sciences and arts, marching into the fields of peace after an interminable series of wars, suddenly a galaxy of men of low passions and stupendous pride, Luther, Calvin, Henry the 8th, and others like them, appear and pervert the half of Europe.

But the Protestantism of today, thanks to the destructive germ which it carries in its bosom, is divided into hundreds of warring sects. These, however, may all be divided into two groups. One includes the learned people who sincerely seek the truth and when they find it return to the mother church. The other group go the length of their errors even to atheism.

"To be a Protestant is for many to protest against the authority of the church and make a boasting show of false patriotism, becoming ordinarily, in their incursions in Catholic countries, agents for great commercial enterprises.

"Well has it been written, 'After the Bible comes the dollar, after this the machinery, the capital and the bank, then monopoly, trusts and the law of the strongest, and then will come the embassies, the impositions, the warships and the oppression.'

Awaken them, above all, you Catholics of South America. Refuse all dealings with this aggressive and mercantile sect from the north which seeks to destroy the faith of your fathers, and will then suck the blood from your veins and will leave you in subjection and misery."

Now, brethren, do you think we should withdraw from this field and leave it to these truthful, loving priests! Or shall we go forward with that same Bible which has made the wonderful difference in the civilizations of North and South America?

A Letter from Miss Emmert

Yaloke, March 27, 1927.

Dear Friends:

Sometimes when we think everything is running smoothly in its regular routine, then the most unexpected things take place. The Hathaways had returned from their visit to the stations and the Conference; the trip had been made to Bangui for business; and Mr. Jobson taken back to Bassai. Mr. Hathaway was expected to return the next day with the auto, and all would be back to normal. But he didn't return at the appointed time. Two or three anxious days passed by. Surely he was sick or else the auto had broken down a long ways from nowhere, or else it had met with some worse mishap. Can you imagine four days without news in such circumstances? The fifth day brought a runner saying that Mrs. Jobson was ill and that it was deemed best to have the auto close in case a trip to Bangui were necessary. The same day brought the auto back, and who should step out of it but Miss Myers. Mrs. Jobson had recovered and Miss Myers had come to Yaloke to go on an evangelization tour with Miss Tyson. Perhaps you can imagine the joy in seeing her and in knowing that Mrs. Jobson was all right again.

Since then the girls have gone on their itinerating trip. They have gone towards Carnot and will probably reach there tomorrow. As you remember, this is where the Gribble party waited for so long. On a previous trip in that direction we found that the people were very responsive to the Gospel and we have been anxious ever since that some one might go to them again.

I can not itinerate while school is in session, as my forty little live wires keep me rather occupied. They are real boys, only more so, I think at times. In school hours I can keep them fairly straight, but after school hours in work and in play their village training is very apt to come out and there are always fights and quarrels to settle. The encouraging thing, however, is that after they have been here awhile and heard daily preaching and seen the example of those who have lived here longer, they become a bit tamer, and gradually learn that one can enjoy themselves without picking a quarrel with someone else. Nearly all of them are already Christians, but of course it will take more than two months of training, or even two years of training, to make them strong, proficient workers. Pray for us.

At present we have three chair makers from Boali to teach the boys to make chairs. We call them Mission furniture for fun, but they are really reed chairs, the framework of which is heavy wood. They will be nice for the church platform and for the verandas. The school boys take quite readily to the work, especially since their practical work before consisted of carrying brick and ant hills. You will wonder why we want ant hills, and what they look like. They are a mushroom shaped hill that the ants make out of dirt and secretions of their own. When pounded and sifted it makes an excellent mortar for the brick buildings. The scholars work three hours a day to help pay for their food, but on Saturday afternoons they have the chance to carry a few of these ant hills to earn money. Yesterday I told all those who wanted to work to commence and that in the evening I would go to see what they had done and mark them. Much to my surprise I found that Bombo was one of those who had worked. He had been too sick to come to school Thursday and Friday, and upon questioning him Saturday morning I suspected he was getting the measles. I told him to go and stay by the fire, but he recovered rapidly when it came to earning money.

I must tell you a joke. I suppose it is on me. Mr. Jobson was traveling toward Bossangoa, when a soldier stopped him at one village to read a paper. The soldier said that one of the men of the village had brought him this paper saying that the white man thereby gave permission to this man to take a woman of the village as his wife without paying for her. The soldier was much perplexed because he couldn't read and he was afraid to disobey the white man. This man already had his wife but the father was objecting and trying to collect money for her. Mr. Jobson took the paper and found that it was headed Des Moines and addressed to me. Some one had helped themselves to my wastepaper basket and put the paper to good use. Usually they like scraps of paper to make bill folds in which to guard their money, but this was a new and original idea, which would probably in time lower the high cost of living in these parts.

We have a new evangelist here at Yaloke. He is the captain of the stone workers and has supervised several of the new foundations. He has not been converted more than a year, but his growth has almost been visible since that time. His name is Volongou and he is from Yaloke's village. He is a middle aged man and one very much respected by the villagers, always quiet, and not at all forward. We are hoping that he will be much used amongst this tribe in particular. You know that our most faithful evangelists until this time Yolo, Jodawan, and Yama, respectively, have been from the Baya and Boufi tribes.

The building work is going on as usual. The church is completed except windows and doors. It will probably be dedicated Easter Sunday. The dispensary is going up quite rapidly, but at present no other building work is in progress. At Bossangoa I believe they are working on their first dwelling house.

We are all well at this station and trusting that they are at the other stations also. The Lord blesses and undertakes for us in a marvelous way day by day and we are happy in his service.

"A NEW CREATION" ON THE NIGER

The Church Missionary Society calls attention to the transformation which has taken place in the Owerri district of the Niger Diocese, West Africa, in the last quarter of a century. Then it was the general custom at the funeral of any important man to capture a slave. In the course of the burial rites a luxurious meal was laid before the captive; immediately afterwards, he was bound hand and foot and thrown, as he was, into a deep grave, the coffin being dropped on to his living body, and the grave filled in. Today in this same district there are connected with the C. M. S. Mission a hundred churches in different stages of progress, all of them places in which the Gospel of Christ is being preached. Pastors and catechists and schoolmasters all are housed and provided for by the people themselves. Another district of ninety churches has also been taken out of the original district, and is now self-supporting and developing rapidly.—Sel.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Roann and New Enterprise and the Endowment

Roann, Indiana Church

This is one of the oldest churches in Indiana and its name is familiar to the brotherhood. It is located about 35 miles south of Winona Lake.

This church like many others has suffered loss by death in its leadership and financial supporters. The membership showed interest in the College and gave every courtesy.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter is pastor and is dividing his time between Roann and New Enterprise churches. I have worked with Brother Teeter before and it was a real pleasure to make the canvass with him, in which he gave me every aid.

The total gift of the church to the endowment was $800.56.

New Enterprise, Indiana

The church is located in the country, about five miles from Roann, and its membership is made up of people living in that locality. They have a small membership here and are having a struggle in keeping up their services and running the church. This church is being served by Brother Teeter with half time service. It is their love and associations with the church here that leads the people to maintain their work and not uniting with the Roann church which seems the inevitable in time. Because of their members and the heavy local financial burdens, I was unable to receive but little for the endowment, their gifts being $57.22.

W. S. BELL.

three year course. The class is held during the Sunday school hour and has an average attendance of twenty-five. This year the class is using as a text-book Evans' "Great Doctrines of the Bible."

During the Easter season the church held a two weeks' revival. The services during the first week were in charge of the pastor. Prof. Alva J. McClain of the Seminary at Ashland concluded the meetings with a series of his thought provoking and inspiring Bible lectures. Nine persons made the stand for Christ, which brings the total of new members up to 29. Since the special services an increased interest in the study of the Word, and an added devotion to the cause of Christ are very apparent.

In the winter a Sunday school was started in a nearby mining town and it continues to perform a valuable service to that community. From forty to sixty attend every Sunday afternoon and show a pleasing desire to learn the Gospel.

This church is located in a big field of labor, and demands the earnest and untiring efforts of both pastor and his people if it is to fulfill its task.

HERMAN W. KOONTZ, Pastor.

LA PAZ, INDIANA

There has been nothing written about the LaPaz work for some time, therefore, as I am their pastor for the remainder of the church year, I feel that I owe them these few lines.

Some people seem to have the opinion that there isn't much here to write about, because of some trouble they have had concerning their house of worship, but I want to inform the readers of the Evangelist that there is as fine a bunch of Brethren at LaPaz as can be found anywhere. It is a mission point and you know how difficult a work mission work is. It is true that there are but a few people, but they are loyal to their faith in spite of their trials.

They proved true to Dr. Bell and the College, as five men gave about Two Hundred Fifty Dollars to the College. Last Saturday evening, I conducted their spring communion for them, and great interest was shown. I have been giving two Sundays each month to their work and then I have been preaching twice each month for a Community church about seven miles north of South Bend.

I am closing my work at these places in August, and I wish to state now, that I will be ready to accept a call from some church for full time work if God so directs. I would also suggest that some pastor should write to the good people of LaPaz concerning the pastorate for next year.

I would appreciate corresponding with some church concerning a full time pastorate. You may write to me at the following address:

MASONTOWN BRETHREN CHURCH

The Masontown Brethren church extends greetings to all the churches of the brotherhood. We rejoice to read in the "Evangelist News" of the continued blessing of God upon you all, and we join with you in praising him for his gracious presence with us.

The Masontown church is composed of a splendid band of loyal workers who have evinced an inspiring spirit of cooperation with their pastor. Upon their arrival, the pastor and his wife received an indication of their future kindness and generosity in the splendid shower given them, and many other instances have since occurred to prove this fact.

During the first weeks of the pastorate, in order that the pastor might become well acquainted with his field, a church canvass was made in which a number of the members assisted. In this way the location and number of families, as well as the number of church members were placed on record, and this has been a constant source of help to the pastor.

The mid-week prayer service is composed of an enthusiastic and earnest group of people, a large percentage being men and young people. Cottage prayer meetings beginning with one a week, and growing until two or more are held weekly in different localities, have been instrumental in adding members to the church.

At the beginning of this year a Teacher's Training Class was organized. The interest in such a class is intensely gratifying to the church. Thirty people signed to take a

CERRO GORDO, ILLINOIS

It has been a long time since the readers of The Evangelist have heard from our church, located in the heart of Illinois great corn belt.

We were without a pastor the first few months of our church year, but we gave Rev. H. E. Eppley a call to serve as our pastor for a period of three months, and he accepted, preaching his first sermon on February 13th.

The field here is not new to Brother Eppley, as he served the church as resident pastor about nine years ago.

After his coming this spring our Sunday school attendance was greatly increased, weekly prayer service has been held and a Young People's Christian Endeavor Society formed. We have a splendid group of young people and Brother Eppley organized a Chorus class and trained them in singing sacred songs.

In spite of a bad rainstorm late in the evening, there was a good attendance at our spring communion service. Some fifteen or sixteen converts were baptized by Rev. Eppley during his stay.

Mrs. Eppley and daughter were with us four weeks, and Monday they returned to their Winona Lake home for the summer, but we are looking forward to their return in September. The plans are that they be with us until the spring of 1928.

We are earnestly praying for a successful revival campaign Rev. Eppley expects to conduct soon after his return.

Yours in his Service,
MRS. LLOYD CRAW.,
Recording Secretary.

REV. C. C. GRISSO ACCEPTS CALL FROM FAR WEST

"Rev. C. C. Grisso, pastor of the Brethren church in East Warsaw, has accepted a call from the Brethren church at Sunnyside, Washington, and will take up his work there on September 1. The Sunnyside church is one of the largest churches of the denomination and is located in the heart of the world-famous apple region of Washington, being 100 miles south of Spokane. The church provides a fine modern, furnished parsonage for the pastor.

"Rev. Grisso will conclude three years of service as pastor of the Warsaw church on September 1. During that time the church has moved forward with perfect harmony and has grown in membership and strength. About 75 new members were added during Rev. Grisso's pastorate.

"The call from Sunnyside came to Rev. Grisso entirely unsolicited and as the result of the unanimous action of the large congregation of that church. Members of the Warsaw Brethren church and citizens generally will be sorry to learn of the contemplated removal from the city of the Grisso family, but all will be pleased to know that Rev. Grisso has an opportunity to advance to a larger field."—From the "Warsaw Union."

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

It was our privilege to be present during a part of the First Anniversary Day program of the First Brethren church of Winchester. There are many signs of progress and the congregation and pastor deserve our hearty congratulations. Of course they with us desire to give God the glory. The Maryland-Virginia District ought to be glad and greatly rejoice in the growth of this mission church. And some of the members of the church are already predicting that this church will not long be a mission church.

The church membership has been more than doubled during the year. The Sunday school enrollment has likewise been more than doubled. The Christian Endeavor is young but promising.

At the dedication one year ago the writer promised to shout when they had in Sunday school an actual attendance of one hundred. A few weeks ago they had 98, but on this Anniversary Sunday they went over the top with 110, and the promise to shout was fulfilled. We said "Hallelujah! Praise the Lord!" and then asked all to join in the shout by singing "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow." The faithful pastor, Brother Emerson J. Rohart, deserves much credit as does the enthusiastic superintendent of the Sunday school, Brother Charles Buhl, and as does practically the whole membership of the church, the loyal women included. Great things are in store for this church if they labor on with the Lord as leader.

And out of gratitude to God for his blessings upon this church which is being aided by the Maryland-Virginia District every Brethren church in the district ought to pay up its district mission apportionment in full and be credited in red on the chart at the coming District Conference at Linwood, Maryland on June 14-16. All working together in Christian cooperation assures success.

G. C. CARPENTER.

A VISIT TO THE BRETHREN HOME

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I am writing this letter in behalf of the Brethren home, at Flora, Indiana, where Brother and Sister Briggs are the caretakers. They are certainly capable people for the place.

Sister Sollenberger and I were out at the home on a visit May 1st and 2nd, and we certainly did have a fine visit. Such hospitality is wonderful; we were all through the building and found it a wonderful place. They have plenty of everything. Just shelves upon shelves of bed clothes and everything in the cellar one would want, milk, butter, canned goods, jellies, meat, potatoes, all kinds of vegetables. Plenty of everything except towels, they would appreciate it if some church or society would send some towels.

The inmates are a cheerful and happy crowd of people, and speak highly of their treatment there. Their one request is that more of the people from different Brethren churches come to see them. One bed room is kept up by the Goshen church entirely. One of the most beautiful sights we saw was the big lawn by moonlight. It was covered with dandelion flowers and looked just like bright yellow stars among the green grass. One must surely see this place to appreciate it.

We were at the Brethren church in Flora, Indiana, on Sunday and there we received just such a friendly welcome as we did at the home. We were invited to attend the Junior part of the Sunday school and here we found everything working fine.

After church we returned to the Home for dinner, which was a bountiful one, enjoyed by all. After dinner we left for the train and our trip home, feeling that our visit was time well spent, and anyone going out there can be sure of a hearty welcome by both caretakers and inmates.

REMARKS ON "CHRIST'S APPEAL TO YOUTH"

610 Franklin St., Johnstown, Pa.,
May 23, 1927.

Dear Brother Baer:

I wish as a Brethren and a Christian to make a few remarks on the article "Christ's Appeal to Youth" in "The Evangelist" for May 21.

It seems to me that we are on most dangerous ground when we speak so much of the humanity of Christ, and so very little of his deity. This is evident in a lot of the so-called religious literature of our day. The book, "The Man Nobody Knows", is an example of this. Now we Brethren have always been known as a people who stay very close to the infallible Word. Let us be careful to exalt him. Even Napoleon Bonaparte, though not a Christian, had a most noble estimate of the Lord Jesus Christ. He said, "Here I see nothing human. Everything is above me."

Christ surely did know everything that was to occur in his life on earth. Why not? Is he not God? And would he the self-existing one need problems or variety to furnish him with inspiration?

"In the beginning was the Word", the definite article before "beginning is not found in the Greek so literally this is," In beginning was the Word." This takes us beyond the first verse of the Bible. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth", this is the beginning of creation, but here is another beginning, a timeless beginning.

He who is the Word was in the beginning. He who is before all creation has no beginning.

The word "flesh" as applied to him does not mean that he took on "sinful flesh." His was a holy body, a prepared body. When the angel spoke of him to Mary he said, "that Holy Thing", a being which cannot be classified. The blood that he shed was the blood of one who was not man only, but God.

He was able to carry on the work he had started, not because of personal magnetism or his ability to recognize hidden capacities, but he was able because he is God!

The human mind cannot fathom the depths of the incarnation of Christ. When we meditate on it, we do not dare to compare him in any way, with any other man who ever trod the earth. The incarnation brought God to man, but it required something more to bring man to a holy God. He came to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. He, the Author and Prince of life, came that he might give his life a ransom for many.

Let us exalt him more and more.

Sincerely,

MRS. CLARENCE MILLER.

word "love" in place of "charity"); Psalm 67 (entire Psalm); Psalm 91 (entire Psalm); Psalm 9:1-6, followed by prayer.

Scripture concerts have the whole Bible to draw from. There can be the stories of Ruth, of Daniel, of Joseph. There can be recitations of the Commandments, the Beatitudes, the twenty-third Psalm, Lord's Prayer, and other subjects generally taught in classwork. There can also be concerts of Psalms only. Parents enjoy hearing Bible verses from their children's lips, while the children not only memorize their own passages, and become familiar with those spoken by the other children, but also are led to glance at, and read, other passages of the Bible as they hold the Book to learn their concert piece.

And who can tell when, years later those same Bible "pieces" will return to mind to help the child full-grown? Who can tell when temptation may flee before the thought of one's little child, bravely facing the audience and talking of God's love? No one can tell just how much good each verse may do, but Sunday school teachers have this way of making the memorizing of Scripture interesting for children who already "have" to learn so much at day school. Speaking pieces isn't work, it is a privilege to be sought for, a friendly competition to see who shall speak the best.

Flowers and Scripture on Children's Day, with children all eager, and parents so proud. "Just pieces" may please, and sound very sweet coming from childish lips, but nothing sinks in as does Bible verse spoken by children surrounded by nature's praise to God, the flowers.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

JONNIE THE JOKER

By Elizabeth Annie Slater

Jonnie Jones came down the back walk looking very much as if he had lost his last friend; mother saw him coming as she glanced through the kitchen window, and wondered what had happened, and when Jonnie took his seat upon the lower back door step and sat looking gloomily across the yard toward the house of his nearest neighbor, mother thought perhaps she had better go out and see what was troubling him.

"I am troubled, mother," said Jonnie thoughtfully when his mother questioned him, "because Lucy played an April fool trick on me. She—she—put a brick in a box and placed it on the sidewalk right before our gate, and—and—of course, I tried to kick it out of the way and stumped my toe."

"Well, now," laughed mother softly, "everybody has to watch out for tricky folks on April the first, and Lucy I'm sure didn't mean to hurt you."

"But she laughed when I stumped my toe," said Jonnie with a little tremble in his voice, "and—and—it hurts, too."

"You'll have to think up some way of playing off on Lucy, I guess," answered mother softly, "but I'm not strong for April fool tricks; sometimes folks play jokes that hurt when they don't intend it that way at all."

"Yes'm," answered Jonnie with another glance towards the home of his playmate—"but I—" For a minute the boy sat silently regarding the aching member of his foot, then he reached down and put his shoe back on—"I was just thinking, mother, about the Sunday school lesson we had last Sunday—about 'do unto others'—and—some way I don't think Lucy would like if I played off on her like she did me."

Then mother laughed outright. "I have it, sonny," she said pleasantly. "Suppose you play a lovely trick on Lucy instead of a bad one, to even the score."

"That would be one way of showing that I remembered the Golden Text, wouldn't it?" answered Jonnie—"but—what can I do?"

"That sounds like a problem," replied mother Jones, "but I'm sure you can think up the trick," and then before Jonnie had time to make a reply, his mother went into the house and closed the door behind her.

Just how long Jonnie sat on the back step mother Jones never knew, but when she happened to glance through the window again, a glow of happiness filled her soul, for to her delight she saw Jonnie with Fido beside him, carefully gathering the choicest buttercups growing in the row he called his own, and placing them in a box, and then she went back to her work.

When dinner time arrived Jonnie came to the table wearing a broad smile that seemed to affect everybody present, and a joyous meal followed, and just as they had finished eating, the back door opened and Lucy King came in, and everybody stared in amazement at the unhappy expression on her face.

"Oh, Jonnie," she exclaimed eagerly, "you've made me so ashamed of myself ... I'm so—so sorry I put that brick in your path, but I've learned a lesson—from now on I, too, am going to play off on my friends at April time with a lovely deed instead of an ugly one."

And then mother Jones learned that Jonnie had slipped the box of lovely buttercups inside of Lucy's front door and left her to solve the problem of where they came from.

But don't you know it took Lucy a whole year to think up a nicer trick than that to play on her friend Jonnie—but that's another story.—Evangelical Messenger.

IN THE SHADOW

SELLERS David Sellers passed away March 22d, 1927 at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry Swope, at Fort Seneca, Ohio, aged 82 years, 7 months and 3 days. Brother Sellers was a Civil War veteran. He was one of the charter members of the Fremont Brethren church and served as deacon in the congregation. He was a fine Christian gentleman, and as a final tribute a large attendance of his old friends and neighbors were at the funeral at Fort Seneca. He, although isolated from the church of his choice, kept in touch with the work, by attending the Love Feasts and homecomings. He was a diligent reader of the Brethren Evangelist, and often spoke about the sermons and the church news. He attended the local Ft. Seneca M. E. church until his health failed him. He is survived by four daughters, four brothers and one sister. Services by the writer and Rev. Hahnen, pastor of the Fort Seneca M. E. church. S. C. HENDERSON.

ASHMAN George R. Ashman was born at Bridgman, Mich., May 15th, 1858. He departed this life to be with his Lord, April 26th, 1927. Had he sojourned with us until May 15th his years would have numbered 69.

He leaves to mourn their loss, the wife, one sister, three sons, two daughters, twelve grandchildren, and a number of other relatives and friends, who shall miss his congenial personality and Christian helpfulness. The deceased was the father of Brother Charles Ashman of Johnstown, Penna. He enjoyed a life of exceptional health and activity, until the moment of his sudden departure. He was energetic. Within the last year he visited his only sister in California, at the commemoration of her 75th birthday. He made many friends because he was friendly.

He was always interested in the promotion of community interests, and his advice and leadership will be missed. For a number of years the deceased has been an active member of the Brethren church at New Troy, Michigan. His faith in Jesus Christ and the Bible was genuine and strong. Now he is absent from the body, but at home with his Lord, in the blessed hope of the resurrection. His body was laid to rest in the New Troy cemetery in the presence of many friends, April 28th, 1927. Services by his pastor. J. H. ENGLISH.

LYON—John S. Lyon, son of Iliam and Margaret Lyon, was born in Greenland, Grant County, W. Va., October 20, 1868, and departed this life May 20, 1927, aged 58 years, 6 months and 24 days. September 26, 1899, he was united in holy matrimony to Miss Florence E. Reeves. Since then he has lived in Washington, D. C., working as a clerk in the Judge Advocate General's office of the War Department.

As a young man he felt the clear call of the Savior and followed him. Most of his church life was spent as a parishioner in the congregation of his late brother, Rev. William M. Lyon, organizer and long pastor of the Washington First Brethren church.

From our midst has gone a loving and faithful husband, a cherished friend, an esteemed citizen, a Christian gentleman. To mourn his departure, he is survived by his widow, two sisters, Mrs. J. L. Hott of Keyser, W. Va., and Mrs. Fannie Bate of Burlington, W. Va., besides other relatives and a host of friends.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer and interment was in Cedar Hill Cemetery beside his beloved brother. REV. HOMER A. KENT.

CROUCH—In the Warsaw congregation on May 26, 1927, Mrs. H. C. Crouch passed on to her eternal reward at the age of 64 years. Her former husband was Michael Mitterling who was called home on June 1, 1910. She was the mother of six daughters, all living and members of the Brethren church. She was a member of the Brethren church for many years and was faithful in all her relations to God's house. Funeral services were held in the Warsaw church on Sunday, May 29 in the presence of a large throng of people, conducted by the family pastor, assisted by Elder B. H. Flora. C. C. GRISSE.

RIDDLE—Infant child of Arch and Lena Riddle of Tanner, W. Va., the young couple's first child, just in the home one night and passed on May the sixth, 1927. We certainly sympathize with them in their disappointment and bereavement. Funeral services by the writer at the Mt. Olive church near Racket, W. Va., with a host of friends and relatives. N. D. WRIGHT.

SCHINDLER Miss Alice Schindler passed to her heavenly home on May 6, 1927, at the age of 83 years. She was for many years one of the most faithful members of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, Maryland. She lived a consistent Christian life and hers was a happy and glorious home-going. There remain one brother, Benjamin F. Schindler, and two sisters, Miss Fannie Schindler and Mrs. Nora Reed, all of Hagerstown. The funeral service was conducted by her pastor and Dr. J. M. Tombaugh. Text: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." G. C. CARPENTER.

BOWERS Esta Mack Bowers, daughter of David and Ida Mark, was born at the home farm, near Glenford, Ohio, August 8, 1897, and departed this life January 31, 1927.

About 18 years ago she confessed her Lord in the Brethren faith at Barracra, was baptized and received into full fellowship. She remained true to her calling until death called her home.

She was united in marriage to J. W. Bowers, November 29, 1916, and to this union was born a daughter, Dorothy Louise. This couple were very much attached to each other. Harmony and goodwill in home life, church life, and social life was always evident.

This sister met her death through the explosion of an oil can in preparing a fire. Her testimony amid her suffering was, "I am not afraid to die." She leaves her husband, daughter, father, mother, three brothers, two sisters, a number of relatives, and many friends. Services were held at Glenford church by the writer. R. F. OWENS.

(The above obituary notice by Brother B. F. Owen, was received a number of weeks ago, and publication was delayed through misplacement of copy, for which we are sorry and ask the pardon of Brother Owen.—Editor.)

WESCOTT Edith M. Lester Wescott was born at Duane, New York, November 7, 1847. She departed this life April 14, 1927. She was married to D. M. Wescott at Malone, New York, August 18, 1870. At an early age she confessed her Lord and united with the Methodist church. Mr. and Mrs. Wescott came to Sunnyside, Washington on May 12, 1905, where they resided at the time of her death. In December, 1913 both Mr. and Mrs. Wescott united with the First Brethren church of Sunnyside. Sister Wescott was a great sufferer for a number of years, but through it all she gave a real testimony and although she was not able to be in the public services she continued to be interested in the church to the end. She is survived by her husband, three sons, three brothers, one sister, and nine grandchildren. Funeral services were conducted by the writer from the First Brethren church of Sunnyside. J. C. BEAL.

Are Our Preachers Mercenary

It is not uncommon to hear that preachers are mercenary, as much so in their way as men in other professions. This impression has grown largely out of the struggle the preacher has been compelled to make to secure for himself a barely living salary in the midst of the rapidly rising prices of the last decade. He has, unfortunately, found it necessary to champion his own interests in the main. There is no labor union to speak in his behalf, and the church, a few happy exceptions notwithstanding, was not disposed to pay him more than he asked. He had therefore to make his own demands, or to quietly leave the ungenerous pastorate and seek one that was more willing to deal fairly with him. It is unfortunate that the readjustment had to come about in this manner, for the unthinking and unsympathetic were given the impression that the preacher was in his profession for the most he could get out of it financially.

Even yet there are some churches that are disposed to drive sharp bargains with their ministering servants, who find themselves faced with the necessity of making their own demands or of denying themselves and their families of many things needful for their physical and intellectual welfare. We are of the conviction that the pastor is not to be criticised for insisting on a salary adequate to meet not only his daily physical necessities, but to secure for himself a home, to educate his children and to keep himself mentally equipped and spiritually refreshed by means of new books, magazines, attendance at conventions, pastors' conferences, Bible conferences and an occasional summer school of religion. And the church that is wise, even if not moved by the higher motives of fairness and justice, will not deny its pastor his right. We are not disposed to make a suggestion as to what an adequate salary might be. It varies with localities and individuals. But it can easily be ascertained by any intelligent, fair-minded committee of laymen. We are disposed however to urge that churches shall take this matter upon their hearts and act voluntarily and relieve pastors of the necessity of making demands out of self interest. Some of our churches have dealt very considerably with their pastors, and there is a growing disposition on the part of many other congregations to deal more generously than in the past. But there is still no small number of churches that need to revise their attitude, and instead of bargaining with their pastor for the least he will possibly agree to, they should endeavor, in so far as they are able, to make it possible for him to be relieved of financial worries. In this way they will get better service and will also lessen the occasion for the impression that the minister has his eye upon salary advances.

In this connection it is only fair to say that the minister ought also seek to avoid giving the wrong impression so far as possible. He is human and it is quite possible that he may lose sight to some extent of the high urge that pressed him into the ministry and allow the popular pulpit and the large salary to influence him unduly. There are occasionally those who do lose the spirit of sacrifice and the joy of service and fall into the grip of the mercenary motive. While we believe in the right of the pastor to an adequate salary and freely urge it, yet we are convinced that the spirit of sacrifice and self-denial must never be lost to the ministry, and the preacher who has the mind of Christ will never desire to avoid the necessity of it. When he loses that, he will lose the thing that gives him power with God and causes the world to reverence his calling above all others.

But the ministers who become mercenary are decidedly the exception. There are not many who lose the spirit and desire for sacrifice, though in some it takes deeper root than in others. There are not many who are in the ministry merely as a profession and seeking to use it to their highest material advantage. The insinuation of the thoughtless and the cynical that the preacher is influenced by the dollar sign as much as men in the professions and in business is not true; the very nature of his calling, if he is sincere, precludes it. The very fact that the occasional individual who leaves the ministry for purely financial reasons is widely talked of and his case is gathered up by the newspapers as good news is evidence that he is the exception, and that the average man who remains in the ministry is not actuated largely by pecuniary considerations.

A writer in the Christian Advocate some time since told of a man who brought upon himself a good deal of criticism by leaving the ministry and going into business and by frankly stating that he had left the ministry because the pay was too small. This writer, without criticising the man or his decision, then told why he had reached the very opposite conclusion, namely, that he was going to stay in the ministry because "the pay was too big." Then he explains what he meant by saying:

"I was called one night to find a boy. He had been in our Sunday school at one time, but evil companions had stolen him away, and for some time past he had been pretty wild. His mother, a widow, was almost frantic. I found the lad in the city jail, where he confessed the whole sorry business. The next morning I appeared in court and pleaded for him, with the result that he was paroled to me. That was four years ago. Today he is a university student, with a fine record, and well on his way to a successful manhood. I invested less than forty hours in that boy, and his mother and I have today two friends for life—a boy's confidence, a mother's gratitude, and a huge draft on the Bank of Satisfaction, besides a lot of valuable experience. That's pretty good pay for forty hours' work."

The writer went on to tell of other inducements to remain in the ministry, the opportunities that come to him, as they do not to men in any other vocation, to minister to the sick and sorrowing, to give wise counsel to the perplexed and tempted, to strengthen faith, to bring new light and joy in times of darkness and discouragement, to skillfully strengthen home ties and prevent disruptions, and to help men get a new grip on themselves and bring moral victory out of threatening defeat. He said:

"I am going to stay in the ministry because of the burdens it imposes. I stand with my people in their moments of highest joy and deepest grief. I see the human soul laid bare. I hear confessions poured out without reserve that could never be wrung from the people by the best criminal lawyers in the land. I share the worries of fathers out of work, mothers of prodigals, wives of drunkards, children of divorcees, employers who want to run their business on Christian principles, workmen with wives in the hospital, policemen who want to do their duty, students who have flunked and are afraid to write home, and all the anxious cares of the boys and girls who have come down from the country to the big city to find a job. It is under this load of woe that I find another of the rewards of the ministry.

"I am glad to stay in the ministry because I am striking at the very foundation of evil—the wrong principles of living. I never find a man in trouble that I do not discover the cause of it in some mistaken ideal of life. In the New Testament I find the right ideal and undertake to make him understand. Other agencies will relieve him of many of his difficulties, but I know that I have the cure."

And truly says The New Outlook, in commenting on this testimony to the values of the calling of the ministry, "These are not mercenary rewards, and they may not appeal to the man of mercenary spirit, but if the truth were told they are among the chief inducements that hold ministers to their divine calling in the face of considerations which offer what may seem to be an easier task." The appeal of the ministry would not be strong were it not for these rewards, but when these are understood and appreciated it has the mightiest appeal of any calling in which man can engage. These make it truly a spiritual ministry.

The Bible Conference at Shipshewana

We recently got a glimpse of the program of the Bible Conference to be held at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, July 10 to 17, and we were impressed with the strength of the program. If the Brethren of the Indiana churches and those nearby in other districts were made to realize what a treat is in store for them, we feel they would gather there in large numbers and stay for the entire week, but we fear not enough has been said about the conference program as a whole, and so we wish to say a word about it and urge upon those who can possibly attend to allow nothing to prevent it. We do not have the program before us as we write, and do not recall all who are to have a part on it, but we recall that Dean J. Allen Miller is scheduled for about a dozen lectures during the week, and a number of these will deal with his travel experiences in Egypt and the Holy Land. It will be a wonderful opportunity for any one to sit under the teaching of Dr. Miller for a week, whether bringing interpretations from the Book, or from the Land of the Book, and if those who are to be favored with this opportunity do not take advantage of it, they will be guilty of gross neglect of their spiritual enlightenment and welfare, and of failure to show appreciation of a man of God who has a great message. He is to give two lectures each day. We recall that on the closing Sunday of the Bible Conference, July 17th, Prof. J. Rayfond Schutz is to be one of the speakers, as has been previously announced, and it is needless to tell our Indiana Brethren that he is well worth hearing; they know it. Also the name of Dr. G. W. Rench, one of the most widely-loved preachers of the brotherhood, appears as one of the preachers for the week. And if our memory serves us right as to what we saw in that single glance at the program, other Indiana pastors who will be there with strong messages and will deserve a good hearing, are Brethren Grisso, Leatherman, Maus, Wirick and Clark. There may be others whose names we do not recall, but these are sufficient to warrant a large attendance on the part of the conference constituency.

Then following the week of Bible Conference is the week of Religious Education, about which much was recently said in "The Angelus" and which has the heartiest commendation of "The Evangelist." Young people will find it very much worth while to take advantage of this week of instruction under such capable men as Prof. J. A. Garber, dean of the school, and the other efficient members of the teaching staff, who are Prof. R. R. Haun, of Ashland College, Prof. W. I. Duker, Revs. George H. Jones, E. M. Riddle and N. V. Leatherman. Churches will find themselves greatly profited by making it possible for their young people to take advantage of this school. Each student will pay a registration fee of two dollars and it is said the board and room will be kept within the total cost of eight dollars. It is a fine opportunity for recreation and religious training and deserves large support. Remember the date of the entire program is July 10 to 24.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

We learn that Dr. W. H. Beachler, pastor of the Dayton church, was compelled to submit to a rather serious operation. Pray that he may successfully undergo the ordeal.

The informing report of Miss Myers, one of our pioneer missionaries to Africa, of an itinerating trip made by Miss Bickel and herself, will be read with much interest.

Brother C. F. Yoder writes more encouraging news of the work in Rio Cuarto, Argentina. Notwithstanding the fact that it is harvest season when many are away from the city, the membership and attendance of the mission are increasing.

We are glad to report that word from Dayton brings the good news that Brother Orion E. Bowman is greatly improved and is expected to fully recover. His condition had been despaired of, but now is said to be improving rapidly.

Brother E. M. Riddle issues his "Last Call" in behalf of the International Christian Endeavor convention to be held at Cleveland, July 2 to 7. It is a great opportunity and ought to be largely taken advantage of.

According to news relayed by Dr. Gribble from the African field, the work there is going forward in a splendid way. Brother Sheldon, who suffered his first serious illness since being upon the field, was raised to health again. During his illness Mrs. Sheldon single handed, courageously coped with the emergency of responsibilities.

In this issue is to be found the financial report of the secretary of the Superannuated Ministers' Fund. The response to the call for funds for this cause seems to have been very creditable. Doubtless many have not yet made remittance to the secretary, and he is likely anxiously waiting for it. No one ought to fail to do his duty at this point.

Brother James S. Cook writes of the progress of the work at Martinsburg and McKee, Pennsylvania, where he is the enterprising pastor and where, as he says, though the churches are neither large nor wealthy, they have a mind to work, and we should say also, a mind to give. The Martinsburg group, on top of all the rest that they have done, are now remodeling their church at an anticipated cost of "six or seven thousand dollars."

Prof. J. A. Garber gives another installment of his valued Sunday School News and among the items that ought to have the prompt attention of every superintendent and pastor is the request for the return of the long delayed statistical blanks. In a number of instances the work of the Brethren has been made to appear disappointing when general church and Sunday school statistics have been broadcasted because Brethren leaders are so careless about filling out statistical blanks. This ought not so to be.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports a gift of $725 from the Sidney, Indiana, congregation, of which Brother George Swihart is the capable pastor, and who gave every cooperation in the canvass. Dr. Bell's commendatory words of Brother Swihart, who recently came into our church and ministerial ranks from the Church of the Brethren, are in accord with our own pleasant impression of him received a year and a half ago while permitted to speak in his church at Center Chapel. The gift of Sidney makes the Endowment Fund among the churches total $110,732.94.

President Jacobs reports the events of commemorative week at Ashland College and we are glad to witness to the highly satisfactory manner in which the entire program was rendered, and also to note that the school year just closed was so successful both from the standpoint of attendance and finances, notwithstanding the loss of the old gymnasium by fire and of the athletic coach by death. The total enrollment for the year was 729 and the total number of graduates this June was 70. The announcement that Prof. Alva J. McClain has resigned the chair of Old Testament Theology in the Seminary will be received with general regret. Not only will his place in the Seminary be hard to fill, but he and Mrs. McClain will be greatly missed in the Ashland church where their services were highly valued. Brother McClain, in a conversation with the editor, told us that he deeply regretted leaving this highly important place of service in the church and that the condition of his health alone had brought him to this decision. He assured us that he would continue to be a strong booster for Ashland College and that he believes the future of the college is assured. Brother and Sister McClain are traveling leisurely across the country as his physical condition may dictate, toward sunny Southern California, visiting relatives and friends on their way, and may possibly arrive at Sunnyside, Washington, his old home, in time for the district conference at which he is scheduled to give a series of Bible lectures. Then they will make their way on to Los Angeles, where the climate serves him better and where on to Los Angeles, where the climate serves him better and where he has accepted a teaching position in the Los Angeles Bible School.

The Future of the Church in the Childhood of Today

By Nora Bracken Davis

"The boys and girls of today are the men and women of tomorrow." Thus, the church of the future depends upon the nurture and training of the children. The training of the children in the church is an infinite task. We sometimes give little thought to this great work until we look into the city homes and streets and over the countrysides of our nation and then over other nations and see what a vast multitude of children there are. As we look out among this multitude of children and see the great number who are not in the church, some of them who were once under the care of the church but are gone, and then look back into the church and see the few children we have, we are made to feel in a measure the greatness of our responsibilities as church leaders.

And while we still have this panorama before us there arises these questions: Why are there so many children outside the church? Why are not more of them sheltered in the fold?

Probably we work half heartedly or probably we do not understand how to care for the children and away they go like "The Gingerbread Junior."

Once upon a time there was a little, old Sunday school, and one of the little, old teachers took a boy and pinched and shaped him to suit herself. She stuffed him with traditions and taught his lips to repeat several ingenious Bible acrostics. She had him sing "Fast Falls the Eventide," at nine forty-five in the morning, and she told him that it was wicked to play ball. Then she looked at him and said, proudly, "Now, I have a Junior after my own heart."

But, as she spoke, away ran the Junior boy. The little, old teacher ran after him, but he just laughed and said,

"Run, run, as fast as you can,
You can't catch me, I'm a Junior, I am!"

And she could not catch him. They ran until they met the minister in the doorway, and the minister said, "Stop, Junior boy, I want to ask you if you are a good boy."

But the Junior boy said, "I've run away from general discomfort, hymns that have no meaning for me, a misunderstanding about ball, and I can run away from you, I can!"

"Run, run, as fast as you can,
You can't catch me, I'm a Junior, I am!"

So the minister joined the little, old teacher and they ran and ran. Soon they came to the courtyard, and the temperance superintendent was just coming up the path.

"Stop for about half an hour, Junior boy, while I read you some statistics concerning intemperance," he said. But the Junior boy called back as he ran, "I've run away from general discomfort, hymns that have no meaning for me, a misunderstanding

The Silent God

By C. F. Yoder

You say you are a Christian
And you ask me to believe
Your loving Heavenly Father,
And you ask me to receive
The Bible as the story
Of his dealing with mankind,
And yet with all my searching,
Your God I cannot find.

I look in all directions,
But no deity I see.
I cry aloud and listen,
But no voice responds to me.
Nor touch nor taste nor smelling
Reveals this silent one.
If he loves me as a father,
Why hide from me, his son?

I search the starry heavens,
But I cannot find his throne.
I explore the depths of ocean,
But I find myself alone.
Alone amid the forces
That with unchanging laws
Proclaim that there is nothing
Without preceding cause.

Creation is a unit,
And law must rule the whole.
If part is ruled by forces,
The rest can have no soul.
A silent God is useless.
Why does he never speak?
Just show me how to find him
And I will humbly seek.

My doubting friend, come with me
And if you are sincere,
Your quest shall be rewarded,
For God is very near.
He is no silent being,
A father deaf and dumb.
He speaks with myriad voices
To call his children home.

He speaks in voice of nature,
In his good providence,
In voice of human conscience,
In rod of punishments.
He speaks in voice of prophets.
The Bible is his Word,
And Jesus Christ our Savior
Speaks as our living Lord.

Not the senses for the forces,
But the conscience we must use
To discern the eternal Spirit,
Who can love and think and choose.
He that willet to obey him
Shall discern him, and shall know
What it is to have communion
With him in this world below.

You say, "Show me the Father
And I will serve him too."
I say, "Seek first the kingdom
And God will come to you.
For he is not more silent
Than you are deaf to hear.
Just love, obey and trust him
And you will find him near."

about ball, the bother of deciding whether or no I am a good boy, and I can run away from you, I can.

"Run, run, as fast as you can,
You can't catch me, I'm a Junior, I am!"

So the temperance superintendent joined the little, old teacher and the minister and they all ran and ran. At the gate they met the missionary superintendent, from whose hand fluttered a long paper, and he said, "Wait, Junior boy, while I read you this list of diseases that it is possible for missionaries to contract. I will also note the climates that have proved to be the most unhealthy for missionaries." But the Junior boy tossed his head and said, "I've run away from general discomfort, hymns that do not apply to me, a misunderstanding about ball, the bother of deciding whether or no I am a good boy, an intemperance talk, and I can run away from you, I can!"

"Run, run, as fast as you can,
You can't catch me, I'm a Junior, I am!"

By this time the Junior boy was in the street, feeling very sure that he could not be caught by anything, when suddenly the billboards in front of a moving-picture palace caught his eye.

"Stop, Junior boy," they said, "while we show you a picture about the smartest way of running away from home and Sunday school. It might appeal to you at this time."

The Junior boy looked over his shoulder and saw that the general discomfort, hymns that did not apply to him, the bother of deciding whether or no he was a good boy, an intemperance talk, and a list of diseases were still running after him, so he put his missionary offering through the ticket window, went in and sat down. As the picture carried his interest along, the thought of running away impressed him more and more deeply.

"Dear me!" he said, "my interest in Sunday school is decidedly dampened." And as the plot grew deeper and deeper he said, "Why! I'll never waste time going to Sunday school again." And the Junior boy was all gone!—Elizabeth Colson.

It behooves us to open the doors for the children, gather them in and tenderly care for them. If we want our Brethren denomination to live we must do our part in caring for the children. We must hold our children. We must Brethrenize them. If we would train and hold the children in the church we must make the church a place for them as well as for adults. They must be taught that the church is God's house, a place where we meet with the heavenly Father to worship and praise him and to study his word. They must be made to feel that the church is theirs as well as it is ours and that they should have a part in supporting it and keeping it up. They must be so filled with enthusiasm and liking for the church that they will not want to stay away from it.

As the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society are the two training schools of the church, for the children, it is through these organizations then that we must win and hold the children. It is therefore necessary that much thought and time be given to the work of these organizations. We must provide our very best of teachers, materials and equipment.

Our future church does not depend wholly upon the training of the children in the church but it depends also upon the cooperation of the parents with the church and the training of the children in the homes. Parents must find their respective places in the church, show interest in it and attend services with their children. Staying home to cook Sunday dinners, entertaining and various other things when mothers and fathers should be at church with their children is a detriment to the church and also to the home. Parents, we must see our responsibilities of the training—of the religious training of our children. If we would expect our children to grow and find themselves fitted for their places in life—in society and the church—then we must find time to truly live with them, work with them, study with them and play with them; indeed, we must be real companions with them.

Pastors, are the children of your parish looking up to you as their shepherd? Are you feeding the lambs?

Teachers, you who have the opportunity to lift "the little fledglings to the angel's seat", are you striving to do the best of your ability?

Parents, you whose opportunities are the greatest of all, are you trying to so live, and do all that is in your power to help those little lives unfold into the fulness of the highest type of Christian manhood and womanhood?

Thus by daily leading them to him who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me," shall they find their places in his fold; then shall the church fully realize her future in the children of today.

Keeping the Boy in Our Sunday Schools

By Prof. Arthur P. Petit

In this brief article we shall proceed on the granted premise that if we do not lose the younger boys from the Sunday school, we shall be able to keep them in the church through manhood. A big problem facing leaders of Christianity is to secure more men in the church. Hence, if we can keep the younger boys, ages from 8 to 14, in the Sunday school, we will have solved a long standing problem of the church. This treatise will not solve the problem. Its purpose is to point out how we may help in solving it.

To plunge immediately into the problem, we will come to the conclusion that the way to keep the boys is to make the Sunday school such that they will want to attend of their own free will, which at once leads us to the question: How shall we attract the boys to Sunday school?

The first thing to be done to keep the boys in Sunday school is to secure younger teachers for their classes. Sunday school classes of boys are often taught by older men so far removed from the youth both in age and mental makeup that they have little or nothing in common. Teachers who have just passed through the boy stage themselves will be better able to understand the attitude of the youngsters. If the young teacher is of a discreet but firm and admirable disposition, the boys will do anything for him. Boys are by nature hero worshippers and if a fine upright young man can be secured to teach a Sunday school class, he can mold the life of every one of the boys into a manly man.

Too much stress cannot be placed upon the selection of the teacher for boys. We do not realize the importance of this work of training Young America. Many times when teachers are to be selected for Sunday school classes, the best trained are picked to teach the Adult classes and the Junior classes must select from the residue. It is this class that really needs the trained teacher but it only gets what is left.

Three precautions should be laid down in selecting a teacher. (1) Be sure the prospect is upright. He is destined to mold by his every word and action, the lives of the young people he comes in contact with. (2) Be sure he understands boys. Boys will not respect a grouch. He must know how they will react to a given stimulant. He must be ready to help the boys in their childish troubles and he must "stick up" for them. Boys like a defender who does not order them around. (3) He must be heart and soul in the project of conserving young men for the church. He must use as much vigor as if he were making a fortune for himself in money instead of in young lives.

The second way in which the Sunday school can be made more attractive to the boys is by fitting it to suit the nature of the boys. This includes activities both inside and outside of classes. The outside-of-class activities should be of the nature that boys enjoy. Hikes, baseball games, and many other things can be devised to help the boys. If the church is alive to its opportunities, it will provide a playground for the boys where they can play much as they want, as long as play does not become violent and dangerous. The wide awake Sunday school teacher will be out there with his boys often, acting in an admirable way so that he may be admired by the youngsters. He can forget dignity in the work of God. Hikes can be planned with a good "feed" at the end and one will be surprised how the boys will respond. Where boys are concerned, it pays to be generous. They are ever watching and they overlook very few things that one does. One can get into their confidence easiest by rough and tumble hikes into the country, or in games as mentioned before.

In class is another place the nature of the boy should be respected. Too many times, Sunday school teachers come into classes and at once begin to ask hard questions of the boys. Now, boys seem to instinctively hate lessons. They get their fill when they are forced to study and in nine-tenths of the cases the Sunday school lesson is neglected. And anyway, what does a boy care whether the earth was created in 4004 B. C. or not. It means nothing in his young life. Teachers sometimes think they are doing just the right thing in asking dates in classes of younger boys when, in truth, they are doing more harm by far than good. A good variation and one which never fails when in capable hands is to go over the lesson in story form with illustrations from everyday life interwoven among the facts. To secure the cooperation of the boy in class, one must appeal to the experiences he has had.

A boy is naturally full of "pep" and we often try to curb it in a Sunday school class. It is the job of the teacher not to curb the pep but to divert it into wholesome channels. To expect the boy to sit still in Sunday school is impossible. He has just climbed out of bed, swallowed his breakfast, and hustled to Sunday school. He is just beginning to wake up. A good plan for diversion is to spend the first five minutes of the study in a talk about hikes, parties and the like and then settle down to the study. Always encourage the boy to give any experience he has had and discuss it with him and you will not be bothered by any surplus "pep".

The last suggestion is that the wrong appeal is made to boys. If we would show the boy where Christianity will help him in his life instead of merely telling him he will go to heaven, we would have established connections with him. When the latter appeal is made, the boy, sharpwitted and shrewd, will begin to figure how long it will be before he will get there and finally give it up as too much effort. Often heaven is pictured in a distorted manner also and the boy loses interest thinking that the least mistake he might make will disqualify him.

Another wrong appeal is in establishing a flock of "DON'TS" for boys to follow if they are to receive the Starry Crown. The boy doesn't go back to Sunday school any more because he has enough negative orders at home. Make your appeal positive, not negative.

Don't talk above boys. Talk so they can understand it and you will put the thing across.

Fathers seldom have any time to be a father to their sons and of course the youngsters must give vent to their energy some way and it is turned into evil channels. It is the job of the Sunday school teacher to bring this diversion into legitimate channels which work for good. A boy revolts at force, but satisfying his desires will go farther than anything else. It is to this end that the Sunday school should strive and we shall be able to hold the pride of our schools, the boys.

The Secret of True Substantial and Abiding Happiness

By Thomas Gibson

The great object of life is happiness. It seems to be the ruling passion of the heart. Men and women are in pursuit of this priceless gem. Priceless, because money can't purchase it. But in the pursuit of happiness few are overtaking it, because it is not being pursued in the right direction.

Some think to find it in wealth, so they are striving to acquire riches. Some hope to find it in worldly amusements. Some think it is found in the dance hall. Some expect to find it in the movies. Some hope to find it in traveling abroad. Others think it is found at the gambling table.

No doubt some happiness can be found in all of these things, but there is no substantial and abiding happiness to be found in any of these things. The happiness found in these things is like "the dewdrop that clings to the newly born rose, which glistens for a little, but when the rays of the morning sun meet it, it vanishes forever.

The pleasures of sin are all fleeting,
They have nothing for yesterday's pain,
But, hope of tomorrow receiving,
And then it's tomorrow again.

The happiness sought is still far ahead.

King Solomon, who desired not riches, but wisdom, received from God a double portion of both wisdom and riches. So, having great wealth he had access to all that his heart desired.

He was arrayed in fine garments, he indulged to his heart's satisfaction in all material things, even to the gratification of his fleshly appetites and passions.

And concerning the glory of his kingdom the Savior said, when speaking of the beauty and loveliness of the lily, "Solomon in all his earthly glory was not arrayed or adorned like one of these."

And the queen of Sheba, when she beheld the glory of his earthly kingdom, declared "the half had not been told." But after he had indulged his heart's desire in everything that could be found, after he had tasted the sweets and the bitters of life, we hear him crying out: "All is vanity of vanities, all is vanity and vexation of spirit!" Nothing substantial, nothing durable, nothing permanent or abiding!

And towards the end of his empty, wasted, unfruitful and unprofitable life, he found the true solution of the problem—the secret of a happy life—when in his prayer he besought the Lord that he would give him neither riches nor poverty, but "feed me with food convenient for me lest I be full and deny thee, and say who is the Lord. Or lest I be poor and steal, and take the name of the Lord in vain."

He knew that riches tended to forgetfulness of God and that poverty was a temptation to steal. So he found a happy medium between riches and poverty. And the true solution as he summed it up was: "Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God and keep his commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

Part of the conservation between Jesus and his disciples "in the upper room"—was pertaining to the solution of this great problem. He told them that true happiness would come to them by doing the things which he had commanded them to do. We often sing: "I'll do what you want me to do, dear Lord—I'll say what you want me to say—I'll go where you want me to go," etc. That is a beautiful sentiment, and it expresses a lovely frame of mind. And when we reach that condition of mind—and we are willing to do, to say and to go where the Master wants us, then we experience true, substantial and real abiding happiness!

David says: "Happy are the perfect and sincere who walk in the way of the Lord." "Happy are they that keep his testimonies—and that seek him with the whole heart." "Happy are those who trust, fear and delight in God."

Some other things that are essential to happiness: righteousness, uprightness, faithfulness, poverty in spirit, meekness, mercyfulness and the spirit of peace and peace-making.

Our happiest moments are those in which we are trying to bring happiness to some one else. I have experienced this a number of times recently. Not long ago I learned that unconsciously I brought happiness to a soul whose spirit was sorrowful. Being cast down by gloom and depression, I was singing a song of praise to Jehovah in my room which adjoins the room of this soul. She heard my singing, and it brought joy and gladness to her soul. She has requested me to continue my singing. "Oh, the good we all may do, while the days are going by!"

There is a dear old Mother in Israel here in the Old People's Home, where I am. She is a shut-in, and is deprived of the blessed privilege of worshipping with us, in our public devotions. But she is fondly cherishing the hope of eternal life. "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail." She requested me to come into her room and pray with her—which I did. "And the God of all comfort brought great comfort to her soul by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God." The love of Christ was rekindled in her heart, filling her soul with joy and gladness. If we manifest a cheerful, happy spirit some one else will imbibe it and will be constrained to glorify God with us.

The More Excellent Way

There is a great passage in Paul's first Corinthian letter in which he sets forth the various gifts that have been conferred upon individuals by the head of the Church for the perfecting of believers and the upbuilding of the whole body. But after unrolling the long list of lesser gifts and greater gifts and their interrelation, he suddenly sees, with his heavenly vision, the supreme thing which makes a man a son of God, and which makes a church the bride of Christ, and without which best gifts are unavailing, and he bursts forth with the words, "but I will show you a more excellent way." We all know, or should know, his more excellent way. It is better than tongues of men and of angels, it is greater than gifts of prophecy and all knowledge of mysteries, it surpasses even faith that could move mountains, it outreaches the philanthropy that gives and sacrifices. It is the perfect which comes when the things that are "in part" are done away. It is the face to face life with God when the dark mirror, which gives only distorted reflections, has been given up. It is the completed thing which comes after the childish things have been put away. It is the last, best, highest, divinest, heavenliest fruit the soul ever wins and that toward which the whole Divine purpose moves—love. "Follow after love," he says, and the other apostle of love says that this is the test of sonship—"he that loveth is born of God."

There can be no perfecting of saints without it, there can be no bride of Christ without it. It is easy to baptize, it is easy to eat the bread and drink the wine, it is easy to sing the psalm and chant the hymn, it is easy to wear the garb and say the phrase, it is easy to pray with the lips and to speak words; but the finished Christian is known by the love which suffereth long and is kind, hopeth all things, endureth all things—and this is hard to attain. It comes not by an easy method. It comes not from the laying on of hands, it is not given as a prize for strict orthodoxy, nor for eagerness in pursuing what is new, it is no gift of priest or church.

It is the fruit of being born of God, it is the perfume which comes from a transformed life, it is the glorious sign that a human life has been changed until it has received the mark of the divine nature—love; for God is Love. It is not puffed up, it is not provoked, it vaunteth not itself, it seeketh not its own; it constructeth, it cements, it unifies, it vitalizes. Christians are told to love even as Christ loved! If they once fulfilled this command they would become an irresistible spiritual power, and the realm of the King would widen beyond all conception. This is "the more excellent way," and yet we try the other way instead!—Rufus M. Jones, in Christian Work.

CHRISTIANITY A FIRE

Prof. James Moffat, who has given us that excellent translation of the New Testament, has recently been among the Methodists in Belfast, Ireland, and in an address given at the Garrett Biblical Institute said, among other things, the following: "Men and women, the Christianity of the Lord Jesus Christ is a fire which he came to kindle. 'I came,' he said, 'to kindle a fire.' You and I are not like a group of men upon a lonely moor kneeling down to prevent a little spot of fire being blown out by the great winds of the world, although to listen to some people you would think we were. The Christian Church is not nervously engaged in trying to prevent the extinction of Christianity from the universe; Christianity is in far wiser hands than ours, as it has always been. What you and I have to do is to keep in touch with the fire. The fire will always burn in our lives, whether in our devotion and thought and perseverance it has material for its use that will enable God to do the work of lighting and warming our age. That is the problem for our service, and that is where we are to learn again the great truth that the Christian religion, the Christian service implies first-hand acquaintance with God."—The Methodist, Australia.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

A Radio Message of Hope

(Broadcast over K. T. O. N. from Long Beach, Calif., by Louis S. Bauman, D.D., April 14, 1927)

Into the short space of seven days,—one week,—the saddest and the gladdest events of all human history were crowded. The events of that week began with the triumphal entry of the Lord of glory into the royal city of David! Palm Sunday! What a day it was! What tragedies the world has known as the result of the decision men made on that day! The most heart-breaking scene this world has ever known came at the moment Jesus, the Christ, journeying from Bethany, reached the summit of the old Mount of Olives, and beheld the city lying there in all its glory before his eyes. Almost instantly, he burst into grief uncontrollable. At the tomb of Lazarus, Jesus wept softly and silently. But as he stood there looking out over the beloved city, and then looking far into the future as he only could, and beholding the awful scenes ahead, his heart broke. He knew that the palms laid in his pathway for his feet today would be turned into nails for his hands tomorrow. Yet, not for that reason did he weep. He wept because he knew that the peace of the world for twenty centuries to come would depend upon the acceptance or rejection of himself by the officialdom within the walls of Jerusalem that day. "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, if thou hadst known, at least in this thy day, the things that pertain unto thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes!" And with that cry, his heart broke!

On, on, to the city rode the Prince of Peace! By every possible sign, he offered himself to Israel as their King and for their peace! And in the peace of Israel is bound up the peace of the world! But, they, not the mass of the people, but officialdom, took up the cry: "We will not have this man reign over us! We have no king but Caesar!" And, the Lord of glory was doomed to die! He wept not for himself, but for others—for men, women, and children, whose blood would mingle and flow through the streets of the nations as rivers of blood,—all, ALL because they would not have this Man to reign over them!

And, the Lord of glory stands today, as he stood then, looking down upon the city, and offering himself as the Prince of Peace! He weeps now as he wept then, because they will not have this Man to reign over them! He stands on the Palisades of the Hudson and looks down upon the mighty metropolis of our nation, New York, and weeps! He stands over and above the mighty skyscrapers of all our cities from New York to San Francisco, and weeps because they will not have the peace he has to give! He stands, as it were, on the brow of our own Mt. Wilson, from which men peer up to study the heavens he created—he stands there, looking down upon the marvelous glory of Southern California, and weeps because "we will not have this Man to reign over us!" O World, World, World! Could you but know, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace!

A sorely troubled world today needs peace, prays for peace, longs intensely for peace, works for peace, legislates for peace, and even fights ostensibly for peace,—but, strangest of all the strange things that be,—the world rejects the Prince of Peace! The wisdom of that Prince is not accepted in their counsels. His declared purposes are rejected as fables. His way to peace is a way of foolishness. Nor is it the great common people that are rejecting him,—it is the "high lights," the intellectuals, the men of boasted position. Christ is being rejected in the legislative halls, and in the scholastic halls, and, we are sorry to say, from many a high pulpit. The people in the streets would proclaim him! but, as of old, "My shepherds lead my people astray!" As it was in A. D. 30, so it is in A. D. 1927.

It does not take an unusually far-sighted person to see today, as he looks upon the ways of the world, that man is at his wit's end,—that he seems to be coming to an end of himself. He has tried to save himself by his own invention for centuries. His eugenics have availed him little or nothing. Sin, crime, greed, poverty, lawlessness, slavery, misery, distress, and discontent, still run rampant over the world. Democracy, that doctrine of human government in which we have hoped for so much, is fast falling into disrepute, and right here in America, the stronghold of democracy, the name of Mus-

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

SERVING IN THE CHURCH—Acts 2:42-47. The church is different from every other institution on earth and nothing else can take its place as a saving agency in the world. No one can properly profess to be serving the interests of the Kingdom of God and ignore the claims of the church.

TUESDAY

SPIRIT-PROMPTED SERVICE—Acts 13:1-12. Here was a group of Christians who took their religion seriously enough to engage in fasting and prayer over the task of missions, and in this story of the sending of Paul and Barnabas we have the very essence of the missionary spirit.

WEDNESDAY

EXALTED WORK OF THE CHURCH—Isa. 52:1-12. Life is one continued series of separations. Over against sin and worldliness are set God and holiness. The church is called to be a separate people unto God and holiness.

THURSDAY

HOLY SPIRIT AND WITNESSING—Acts 1:1-11. The coming of the Holy Spirit into the life of a Christian drives him to witnessing for the Master and he immediately begins at home, where often the greatest courage is required. He who avoids his Jerusalem does not heed the Spirit.

FRIDAY

PROMPTING HARMONY IN THE CHURCH—Matt. 18:15-20. "Go tell his fault between thee and him alone." But we usually tell it to every one else but him. How much trouble might be avoided if we followed these very plain directions of our Lord!

SATURDAY

CHRIST THE HEAD OF THE CHURCH—Col. 1:9-23. If we were ever conscious of the headship of Christ our dominant desires and strivings would be more spiritual. This consciousness led Paul to desire for the Colossians that they might be "filled with the knowledge of his will."

SUNDAY

PAUL'S PRAYER FOR THE CHURCH—Eph. 3:14-21. What we are grounded in makes a difference as to what appears above the surface. If we are grounded in love, as Paul urges, it will influence every expression and activity of our lives. "If we contend for the faith" we will do it in the light of 1 Corinthians 13.—G. S. B.

solini is becoming more and more to be praised! If democracy should fail, it will be a confession that men and women are unable to govern themselves, and that may be! When the sovereign rights represented by the ballot box are not esteemed, and the people are too busy here and there with the smaller things of life, to go forth and speak their sentiments at the ballot box, when the good stay at home and let the gangsters gather the crowds that do vote,—then democracy must fail as a system of government.

As a matter of fact, all forms of government have been tried, and all have failed, not because some of those forms have not been good, but because of the failure of the individual. Governments can control men in part, but they have learned that, as governments, they are unable to subdue the passions of men. When they damn back the corruption of the human heart at one point, it bursts forth at another point.

As for education, it is good. And yet, an educated head over a bad heart is a dangerous combination, as we are learning only too well. Men are learning that their boasted arts and sciences are but reflections of their own natures, and partake of their own corruptions.

The outlook may be dark. All may seem futile. And many men in the world are in despair. But man must learn that he was made to be God's fellow,—to work with God,—and that so long as he leaves the Godman,—the Savior of the world,—weeping outside his cities' walls, he will continue to fail!

Man's great trouble has been that he has been unable to remove from his own individual heart the root of all the worlds' sorrow and woe—SIN! Fools may mock at sin, but the whole world is face to face with its awful realities today. We must open the gates, and receive Jesus Christ into our political, educational, social,—and must I say,—religious life today, or there is no hope,—the world ripens fast for judgment! And, in order that he may find his way into our political, educational, social, and religious life, he must find his way into the individual life. Let us see to it at this time—during the holy week,—that Jesus Christ does not stand weeping outside the walls of our own individual hearts!

The gladdest event that ever took place on this earth, took place when the seal of imperial Caesar broke, and the stone rolled back from that grave just outside the walls of the royal city of David, and the Son of God arose in triumph, a victor over death. In that resurrection, lies the hope of the world. He is not dead—he is a living Christ. He not only arose from the grave, but he arose into heaven, giving assurance to all men that they shall not only arise from the dead, but they shall arise into heaven, into a new life and a new world, wherein the glory of eternal youth shall rest on every brow. Man may fail; but God shall not fail! His eternal purposes do not rest upon the arms of flesh. Though all the world take counsel against him and against his anointed, yet he will set his King upon his holy hill of Zion. And they who have trusted in his salvation, shall not trust in vain. May his salvation, the gift of God, speedily come to earth; and may Jesus reign soon where'er the sun, doth his successive journeys run! Amen!

Did you ever see an ungodly man who was happy? He may ride around in fine cars and have a beautiful home and plenty of money, and he may deal in cotton futures and slip and slide about—and he is happy while the sun is shining; but when darkness and sorrow comes he has no anchor.—Rev. D. G. Phillips.

OUR DEVOTIONAL

The Responsibility of Training Children

By Mrs. Harry L. Berkshire

OUR SCRIPTURE

Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. (Prov. 22:6.) For I know him that he will command and his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord to do justice and judgment, that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him. (Gen. 18:19.) For I have told him that I will judge his house for the iniquity which he knoweth, because his sons made themselves vile and he restrained them not. (1 Sam. 3:13.) He maketh the barren woman to keep house, and to be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the Lord. (Psalm 113:9.) Verily I say unto you, whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God, as a little child, he shall not enter therein. (Mark 10:15.)

OUR MEDITATION

The proper training of children is a supreme duty of all Christian parents. The greatest mission, we as parents, can perform in this world, is to train our children for a life of usefulness. I fear few parents are conscious of the great responsibility resting upon them in this most important matter. The future of our state and church depends largely upon the principles instilled into the minds of the rising generation. The great work must be done by Christian parents in Christian homes. What may be the moral and religious condition of the world in the next generation, if parents of the present age fail to give their children proper training?

Those who truly love their children will train them up, not in the way they would go, but in the way they would have them go.

We are aware that early training is more effective than later in fixing the child's character. When the ground is moist and mellow, the good seed should be sown. Can we begin by teaching our children love, kindness, respect for the aged and above all reverence for God and his house of worship, at too tender an age?

Children are close observers, and are ever ready to imitate our words and actions if they be good or bad. Boys are most eager to do as their father does, while girls watch their mother and try to imitate her. This being the case, parents should be very careful of their example. To teach by example is more effective than by precept.

Observation teaches the sad fact, that many who have chosen the way of life, have had a hard struggle against certain passions and evils, which have come to them by inheritance. Had the parents been conscious of what the effect of their indulgences would be upon their offspring, they undoubtedly would have used restraint and thus counteracted the evil effects to a greater or less degree. From the Christian homes come faith, love, virtue and duty.

While the mother has the greatest influence over the child, yet both parents are responsible to God for the moral and religious training of their children. With but few exceptions the men who have been the greatest blessings to humanity, were men who had good mothers. At the starting point of nearly every minister's life there stands a Christian mother. A wicked mother is one of Satan's worst agents to lead souls to ruin. Personally, to my mind, there is nothing more wonderful than a righteous, loving mother, and nothing worse than an immoral, unrighteous mother.

OUR PRAYER

Dear Father in Heaven: We do thank thee for the many Christian parents, who are by thy strength, endeavoring to found Christian homes in which to rear and train children for a life of usefulness in this world.

Grant, dear Lord, that children shall be considered always as blessings, and may they be the foremost of concern in every home. We thank thee that so many have been intrusted this blessed privilege and make us worthy to be called mothers and fathers. These blessings and favors we ask for Jesus' sake. Amen.

Saul Chosen King

Introductory Note:—This quarter we cover a long stretch of time—a hundred and twenty years of great activity. The reigns of the three great kings of the United Kingdom, who organized the nation, gave it laws, an organized worship, a marvelous temple, vast power among the nations, and a large sweep of territory. The change from the Theocracy was great, but God still controlled the destinies of the nation, and it won or lost, flourished or suffered, as the rulers and the people followed or wandered away from the commands of Jehovah. There are four great lessons for modern rulers and people; for though "the mills of God grind slowly, yet they grind exceeding small." No one can defy God safely now any more than in the early days of Israel.

SCRIPTURE LESSON—1 Sammel chapters 9-11.

PRINTED TEXT—1 Samuel 10:17-25; 11:12-15.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Psalm 119:1-8.

GOLDEN TEXT—What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God. Micah 6:8.

I. SAUL WAS CHOSEN KING

"See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen." 17:24. God sometimes disappoints us by exceeding our expectations, as well as by falling short of them. Saul went to seek his father's asses, but found a kingdom and a crown. Well for him would it have been, had he shown the same solicitude in fulfilling his duties as king all the remainder of his life, as he did in seeking his father's asses; but alas! this station required a higher grade of qualifications than he appears to have possessed or sought for. Strength and stature might help him in the former; but the latter required wisdom and prudence, and the fear of God, so as to make him yield in obedience to his Sovereign no less implicit than what he required of his own subjects. The following incident was told and published by Rev. Samuel Scoville, Jr., and illustrates this point, apropos. One needs to read carefully chapter 9 in the study of this lesson! Let us take 9:25 and 27 as key texts.

"Stand thou a while, that I may show thee the word of God." Vs. 27 Samuel communed with Saul. V. 25. During the year 1862 the hopes of the North were at their lowest ebb. It was in that year that the second battle of Bull Run had been fought and lost. McClellan was entrenched before Richmond, and the strength and resources of the nation seemed to have been fruitlessly wasted. Henry Ward Beecher was then in Brooklyn and was perhaps more prominently associated with the cause of the North at that time than any other minister of the Gospel. He had preached and lectured and fought its battles in pulpit and press all over the country, had ransomed slaves from his pulpit, and his convictions and feelings were everywhere known. Late one evening a stranger called at his home and asked to see him. Mr. Beecher was working alone in his study, as was his usual custom, and this stranger refused to send up his name, and came muffled in a military cloak which completely hid his face. Mrs. Beecher's suspicions were aroused, and she was very unwilling that he should have the interview which he requested, especially as Mr. Beecher's life had been frequently threatened by sympathizers with the South. The latter, however, insisted that his visitor be shown up. Accordingly the stranger entered, the doors were shut, and for hours the wife below could hear their voices and their footsteps as they paced back and forth. Finally, toward midnight, the mysterious visitor went out, still muffled in his cloak, so that it was impossible to gain any idea of his features. The years went by, the war was finished, the president had suffered martyrdom at his post, and it was not until shortly before Mr. Beecher's death, twenty years later, that it was known that the mysterious stranger who had called on the stormy winter night was Abraham Lincoln. The stress and strain of those days and nights of struggle, with all the responsibilities and sorrows of a nation fighting for its life thrust upon him, had broken down his strength, and for a time undermined even his courage. He had traveled alone in disguise and at night from Washington to Brooklyn to gain the sympathy and help of one whom he knew to be a man of God, engaged in the same great battle in which he was the leader. Alone for hours that night the two had wrestled together in prayer with the God of battles and the Watcher over the right, until they had received the help which he had promised to those who seek his aid. Whatever were the convictions and religious belief of Abraham Lincoln, there is no doubt that he believed in prayer, and made that the source of his strength.

II. SAUL WAS ANOINTED FOR THE POSITION.

"Samuel took a vial of oil and poured it upon his head." 10:1. Priests, prophets and kings were thus designated to office. The oil was significant of the gifts of the Holy Spirit necessary to qualify them for their work. "And kissed him." The cordiality of Samuel towards Saul was wonderful! Just as Saul had no birthright claims, nor any inherent fitness for the position, so are we, as sinners, "strangers and foreigners," Eph. 1:19, "chosen" in Christ, Eph. 1:4, to be "kings and priests unto our God." Re. 5:10. There is no supreme King save our God. Have we become his sub-

Church School News

By J. A. Garber

Our church schools are busily engaged with summer activities. These are too engaging to permit a summer slump.

VACATION SCHOOLS

Judging reports an increased number of vacation schools will be conducted this year by our people. In some instances the local church will have a school of its own. In other cases the church will cooperate with other churches in promoting a community school. All such schools should be fully reported to the undersigned that he might report this work of the Brethren to the International Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools. Don't you want others to know what we are doing in this regard?

STATISTICS AGAIN

One dislikes to be so pointed in his remarks, but such references seem necessary when superintendents permit requested reports to go by default. Months ago we sent out the statistical blanks, and asked for a prompt reply. Not more than half of our schools have sent their reports up to this writing. How can a secretary report for an organization when the workers do not supply the necessary data? Once more we humbly beg superintendents to check on their statistical report. Let us know also your standing on the Standard of Excellence..

SHIPSHEWANA CAMP

In cooperation with the Indiana Conference the National Sunday School Association is promoting a summer camp for Brethren young people and their leaders at Shipshewana Lake. The date is July 17-24. Pre-services in the evening will form a part of the program for Brethren Day on Sunday the 17th. Registration will follow on Monday, the 18th, by which time all delegates should be present. Camp will break at noon, Sunday, the 24th. Young people of 15 years and over are invited to attend; also their teachers.

Death of Dr. Clark

Manuscript supplied by Union Christian Endeavor Society.

Rev. Francis E. Clark, D.D., LL.D., founder of Christian Endeavor, died May 26 at his home in Newton, Mass., at the age of seventy-five years and eight months. He has been failing for some time and in the past year has had one or two slight hemorrhages of the brain, which, however, did not disable him. He suffered from arterio sclerosis, but the immediate cause of death was kidney trouble, and came after only a few days' illness.

Francis E. Clark was born at Aylmer, Quebec, on September 12, 1851. He was the child of American parents. His father was Charles Carey Symmes, of Winchester, Mass., and his mother Lydia Fletcher Clark. He was orphaned at the age of eight and went to live in Auburndale, Mass., with his maternal uncle, Rev. Edward Warren Clark and adopted his foster father's name. On his father's side he was descended from Rev. Zechariah Symmes who was driven out of England under the persecution of Archbishop Lund. His mother came of old Puritan stock.

He was educated at a small academy at Claremont, N. H., then in famous old Kimball Union Academy, and at Dartmouth College. He received his theological education at Andover Theological Seminary.

On February, 1881, Dr. Clark, then pastor of Williston Congregational Church, Portland, Me., organized the first Christian Endeavor Society with about fifty members. News of this society and its aims spread abroad, and other pastors tried the same methods. Thus the Christian Endeavor movement was born. In a few years hundreds of societies were formed, not only in America, but in China, Great Britain, India, and other lands. Today Christian Endeavor societies are found in about eighty different denominations and in every country on the globe. There are about 80,000 societies with approximately 4,000,000 members.

At the Christian Endeavor Convention at Portland, Oregon, in July, 1925, Dr. Clark resigned the presidency of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, and was elected

How to Be Good Americans Isaiah 26: 2-7

Once upon a time there was a little boy and his name was Elan. When he was a tiny baby his mother and father took him on a long trip across the ocean. Elan was not even old enough at that time to become excited over the trip from his homeland to a new country. The new country to which he was taken was our own United States.

Now Elan's father and mother could not talk English and so it happened that Elan was old enough to go to school he found it pretty hard to learn to talk like other people. So it took much more study for him to get his lessons than it did the other boys and girls. The teacher tried to help him for she knew that he was trying hard. She sometimes kept him in after school and he often stayed in at recess. Soon the children began to tease Elan. More than once when he came out of the school room they called out, "Here comes Elan. He had to stay in."

So it happened that Elan's school days were not very happy ones. But he soon learned to like to study and so he avoided the other children as much as he could and studied more and more. In a year or two he had learned to speak English well enough that he did not really have to study any longer than the rest of the children to get his work. Nevertheless he kept right on working hard. As the children became older they learned to understand that Elan was a foreigner and so they continued being unkind to him. They would not let him play their games so he was always an outsider.

One day the teacher announced, "We are going to have a contest. I want to find out which of you pupils can sing our National Anthem best. First, what is our National Anthem?"

One little girl said, "Our National Anthem is 'The Star Spangled Banner.'"

"That is right," said the teacher, "and I am going to give you a week to study the song and the music. Then we will see which of you can sing it best."

Every little boy and girl became interested at once. They liked contests. Soon someone asked, "What is the prize that is to be given to the winner?"

"The winner will be called upon to sing at the big town celebration on the Fourth of July. That will be quite an honor."

Now Elan was very much interested in the contest too, but he thought to himself, "It is so hard for me to memorize. How can I possibly learn that as quickly as the others. If it was in my own language I could do it easier." When he got home from school he told his mother and father about the contest and they promised to help him. He started working at once. He liked to sing so he decided that he would learn the tune first and then put the words to it. So Elan worked hard each evening but the other children were working too and Elan became quite discouraged sometimes.

Finally the week was up. The first thing in the contest all the class sang the song together and those who forgot the words when singing with the others lost out. That was hard for Elan for he was not used to singing with others. He succeeded in remembering all the way through though.

Then they began singing alone. Some forgot parts of their words. Others missed the tune at places. In fact nearly everyone missed the tune at one place or another and a good many of them missed the words. Finally Elan's turn came. Now, Elan liked to sing so that the tune was very easy for him so he only thought about the words and about telling the story that the words give. When Elan started singing all of the children looked up in surprise for they realized that Elan's voice was very pretty and that he was singing our own National Hymn even if he was a foreigner. Elan sang so well that even the children realized that he deserved the prize.

When the teacher announced that Elan had won, she said, "I hope that you children will give Elan a prize too. I want you to make Elan happy by no longer calling the little boy a foreigner who can sing 'The Star Spangled Banner' better than our own American boys and girls." So Elan received two prizes for his hard work and soon he learned to love his new country as every American boy and girl does.

Dr. Gribble Writes Again

42 Rue Pierre Nicole,
 Paris, Vme, France.
 June 2, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Once more I have the privilege of compiling for you recently received letters from the field.

Under date of March 16th, Brother Jobson writes from Bassai: "You will be glad to know that the school permission for Bassai is well under way. The application was filed at Bossangoa in December and was forwarded by the Lieutenant-Governor with his approval to the Governor General at Brazzaville on February 2nd. This is in principle, permission."

"The church is growing in numbers and grace. Yakanenzi and seven others are proving themselves as sincere workers and giving their time more and more to the preaching of the gospel."

Mrs. Sheldon writes from Bossangoa under date of March 23: "Mr. Sheldon has now been back at work after his recent illness for more than a week. During his illness it was necessary for me to be nurse, doctor, housekeeper, preacher and superintendent 130 workmen!"

We hope to have the house finished by May first. Foundation of red stone, roof of sawed or hewed lumber. The walls will be of clay, such as the natives use for pottery. It will be plastered with lime made of mussle shells from the river, and will be screened.

"Mr. Hathaway and Miss Myers came to help us during Mr. Sheldon's illness, Brother Hathaway to superintend the workmen and Miss Myers to help in the nursing. But by the time they arrived Mr. Sheldon was well! They went on to Yaloki the next morning. Miss Tyson and Miss Myers will then itinerate in the direction of Carnot."

We praise God for his goodness to those on the field and for his delivering power in illness and other forms of opposition. Marguerite and I continue to be blessed and to appreciate more and more the faithfulness of our God.

We thank you for your letters received from time to time, and for your prayers continually ascending for the work.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

An Itinerating Trip

By Estella Myers

Yanbenou, February 22.

The dry season is drawing to a close and the natives are burning grass and hunting every day. Big fires are seen most every night. Some days we can hardly see the sun for the smoke that fills the sky. It is a time of the year when the people have a rest from the work of the government and we are taking this opportunity to visit the far villages with the gospel.

Miss Bickel and I started yesterday with our porters and loads. Our first stop is Yanbenou. We left Bassai after prayers in the afternoon and arrived here about sunset. The people were just returning from their work. We sat around the camp fire with them and told them of Jesus. We then returned to the rest house for the night.

In the night we heard a great noise and upon asking the natives this morning what it was they said that the chief had returned from Lia. He had been in prison for two weeks. Years ago this chief had killed a white man and had given his guns and trunk to the big chief Nocawin at Bozoum. Nocawin hid the guns underground and refuses to tell where they are. He blames all the affair on Yanbenou and they both were put in prison by the administrator who heard about the guns. Yanbenou says that his trial is not over and that Nocawin affair is larger than his. He says that the administrator can not get Nocawin to tell the truth and he is in a dark place.

Today we visited a cave where they told us they used to hide when the country was ruled by military government. Many people were killed those days and each village had its hiding place.

We preached to the chief and his people and visited the villages of the captains this evening. One village was some distance from here and when we arrived we saw the shumaili boys engaged in one of their sinful dances. Shumaili is a school of the devil taught by the old men. The boys are taught sin and are privileged characters. They are permitted to do anything they like while in this school. The women are afraid of them as well as those who have not been to shumaili. For months they live out in the bush and dress and act like demons. When they saw me coming they ran as hard as they could to the bush. The rest of the crowd went with me to the village where we had a meeting in spite of the opposition of the evil one. Jesus was with us and four accepted Christ at that village. We stopped at another village last night and by the light of the camp fire told the story of Jesus' love again.

Miss Bickel had gone to another village. She arrived in the village just as they returned from the hunt and brought with them a leopard tied on a pole. They had smothered it in a hole with smoke and were getting ready to skin it. They promised to sell her the skin after it was fixed and that the chief and father of the hunter had seen it. It is a custom in the tribe that whenever a man kills an animal he must give it to his father and he divides or controls the selling of it. All they get must go to their father who in return gives back to them what he wishes. All bargains must go through the father.

Danta, February 23.

We are quite a ways from home. The run today was long and hard. We had a late start for we preached to the people before leaving. It was hard to keep the crowd for they were thinking of the leopard and that they had killed the day before. We hardly had finished singing the last song when the drums began to beat and all the people ran to the dancing ring. The drummers beat the drums to the tune that they had killed a leopard, a man eating animal and the women and children and the rest of the men formed four rings and danced single file around the drummers. Such a sight! I was sorry I did not have a kodak with me. This dance was to continue all day they said. I left them. We were so tired when we arrived here today we could hardly talk to the small crowd that gathered around to hear. Our last service with them today was held with the lantern at 9:30 P. M. The big buffalo that they killed here recently scented the whole village, and every breath revealed to us what they had for supper. They painted the head of the buffalo red that they might kill another, they said.

Danta, Thursday.

Preached many times today.
 Treated the sick.
 Several accepted the gospel.
 Both of us very tired.

February 25.

We preached to the people this morning before breakfast that we might have the crowd before they went to work or hunt. The sick were cared for and personal work was done all day long. In the evening while we were preaching after dark we heard mourning and were told after the services that a baby had died. We went to the hut where the people were wailing to comfort them. Just back of the hut two men were digging the grave while another kept a light by burning grass. We talked to the women a while and they stopped their wailing. We did not go into the hut to see the child but took their word that it was dead. The wailing stopped in the night and after we left the village our toipoi boys said the child came to life again. We are sorry that we did not see the child that they thought was dead or did not know before we left the village that it was yet alive. We were so interested in the morning services and teaching the new converts that we had no thought of the child that was reported dead to us.

We had a short run this morning and will have time for rest and writing. This evening we will preach here and a nearby village.

The two evangelists that we have with us do good work. Last night we asked them to tell the people why they had accepted the gospel. They said, "We find the Bible tells the truth. We believe it. We give thanks to Jesus for leaving heaven and coming to earth to save us. We know he only has made the way to heaven and we want to obey his word. Our idols never gave us anything. The affair of the old men can not give us a good place after we die. Jesus only and we want his good news. Our earthly parents can not care for us when we go far from home. They have no strength. God can and goes with us no matter where we go. He is big, strong and exceeds all. He cares for us when we are sick. Our idols can not hear or eat or talk. God never fails us. Some day we will read the Bible then we will know better the things of God. We do not want sin, we want to work for our Savior. We have come here to tell you that Jesus died for you and want you to go to heaven, etc."

Yambia, February 26.

Last night two villages were visited and many listened with interest, but alas the devil was on his job for the drummers of shumaili began their noise. All night long they danced and yelled and were too tired to come to the service this morning. Nevertheless a small crowd came and we rejoiced when five little boys and the captain of one of the villages said they wanted to accept the gospel. We talked to the captain a long time for he had one wife to give up. He said he would obey the scriptures in all things and we rejoice to know he is willing to give all to the Lord and follow him. He is the second captain to accept the gospel. So far we have no chiefs that are Christians. This captain will have a great influence in his village and the boys say he is already warning his people and preaching to them to travel the good way. The captain's name is Yiripi from Yambia village. May God keep him although far from the teaching at Bassai.

At noon we walked to the edge of the village to see the shumaili boys. They came home from their school and had a sort of dance that is called the coming home of the shumaili boys. They all looked thin, dressed in loin cloths and bodies painted in red. They danced until the drummers gave orders for them to go and off they went to their village or home. For five months they have been out in the bush. The school is over for this year. Oh, to save the children from this teaching!

Today the boys brought us a little animal that is covered with pricks. When touched it rolls up in a ball and nothing can harm it for the pricks save it. The boys say it eats ants. When not molested it runs with its little feet and looks so funny.

Sunday.

We had well attended meetings last night and this morning here. What joy there is in working for the Lord. How often our hearts are sad when we see the work of the devil here and see people place themselves in his hands. Truly the way upward is narrow and the way downward broad. Pray that the devil's power in the lives of these people may be defeated. Out of all the darkness around comes some one who wants to be Christ's child and how we long that more will step out from the bonds of Satan and follow the Lord.

The service for the crowd was held about six o'clock. We then had breakfast and had Sunday school for our porters and boys. Tonight will be our last service here and we will leave early in the morning for the next place.

May 17, 1927.

During the past month several more have made public confession of Christ and several new families have begun to attend. One family of eight have returned to Rio Cuarto after living some years in Tucuman. Brother Alloca, the father, conducted meetings there in his own home during these years and will be a faithful helper here. He owns his own little home here and is planning to build a room to it for a branch Sunday school, as it is seventeen squares from our central school.

On the other hand some of our people are absent, working in the corn harvest and others have been sent to other places by the railway for which they work.

I am to go to Laboulaye next week to dedicate a new hall there built for the Sunday school in his home by Brother Perez. It is likely that I will go on to Buenos Aires and I will write of the trip later.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

SIDNEY, INDIANA

The Sidney church is located about 12 miles from North Manchester in a small village of about 500 people. They have a very neat building and the work has a future.

The membership is small, but loyal to all the interests of the church and cooperated in the endowment with a fine interest and made my work pleasant and easy.

Brother George Swihart is their pastor. It was my first opportunity to get acquainted with Brother Swihart, who until about two years ago was a minister in The Church of the Brethren. I found him a man of God, consecrated to the cause, a Bible teacher and preacher. He is doing good work at Sidney and the other churches which he is serving. For many years he was one of the prominent leaders in the old church as evangelist, pastor and serving on Mission Boards. He has a fine family and a man of excellent judgment; his home is at Roann. I consider his coming into our church an asset to our ministry and believe as our churches get to know him better, his name will become more familiar to the readers of the Evangelist. Brother Swihart gave me splendid aid in working through his churches of which he is pastor.

The gift of the Sidney church to the College was $725. W. S. BELL.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

COMMENCEMENT WEEK

Beginning with the Junior-Senior Banquet, May 26th, the events of the commencement season went forward in order. This banquet was especially attractive, known as the Rainbow Banquet, due to the very beautiful decorations.

Then followed the graduate recitals in the various special departments. On June 2d were held, the pageant, the baseball game with Kenyon in the afternoon and the Senior Class Play in the evening. All three events were all that could be wished for. Miss Eulala Tombaugh was crowned queen before the largest crowd ever assembled on the campus for that purpose.

Ashland defeated Kenyon 14 to 4, thus ending a very successful season. In the evening the Senior class put on their play in the Opera House before a large audience. It was perfectly executed. On Sunday, June 5th, Prof. Alva J. McClain preached the baccalaureate sermon to an unusually large audience. His theme was, "Some Current Tendencies Which Obscure the Christian Appeal." It was of unusual merit.

Tuesday at the chapel hour we observed Recognition Day, when the athletic, glee clubs and debating awards were made. At that time the following scholarships were announced: The Ira C. Wilcox Seminary Award was given to Frank Gehman, of Indiana; John C. Myers Senior Scholarship was divided between Helen Garber and Pauline Culberson, both of Ashland; the John Lichty Scholarship was awarded to Maurice Stahl of Savannah.

Tuesday evening at our new church, the annual Alumni Banquet was held, Professor Landis Bradfield being the chief speaker. It was well attended, but not so well probably as last year. The following nominations were made to be voted on by mail: for president, Russell Barnhard, Charles LeRoy Anspach; for vice-president, Clayton Starn, John Lehman; secretary-treasurer, Leslie Lindower, Georgie Hartman. About one hundred were present.

Wednesday at 8 A. M. Mrs. Jacobs and I were hosts to the Senior Class for breakfast in the Tea Room of the College. There were 51 present.

At 8 P. M. President George Zook of Akron University gave the annual Class Address in our new church on Park Street. He spoke upon the topic: "Colleges and the People." It was a splendid address and well received.

Thursday morning at 9:30 the following Class Day program was rendered in the Chapel:

Thus ends what I regard as our most successful year. The enrollment was about as large as usual and was as large as it ought to be considering our facilities. The total for the year was 729, distributed as follows: College, 316; Saturday, 76; Summer, 273; Music not counted elsewhere enough to make 729.

We sustained both the loss of our gymnasium by fire and our athletic director by death. However, we were enabled to make a good showing in our athletics notwithstanding.

During the year we have increased the assets more than $175,000 by Dr. Bell's campaign and the local one. Whether next year will make as good a showing, I can not now forecast but if we even approach the coveted goal, viz., entrance into the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, I shall be completely satisfied.

It is generally known that Mr. and Mrs. McClain are leaving the school and will reside in California. Their removal is due wholly to the matter of Professor McClain's health. We regret exceedingly to have them leave, but it seems for the best. However, we are casting about now for a man to take his place and he will be here and ready for the opening of the school, September 13th.

May God continue to use the school and may you continue to pray for and be interested in your college.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

BEING HAPPY

A little boy busy at play gave a glad little laugh. "Why, what happened, John?" his father asked. "Nothing, father; only I'm happy because it's your holiday and you're home with mother and me, and it sort of bubbles over."

Once some of God's people were so happy that they said: "Then was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue was singing." The heavenly Father, like a good earthly father, gives joy to his children just by being near them, and by the loving things he does for them. He does not let yesterday's loving-kindness do for today; his mercies are new every morning.—Sel-

MARTINSBURG AND McKEE, PA.

If we are to judge at all by things visible, it certainly would appear that God has far from withdrawn his mantle of power from the Brethren here. Neither of the churches are large, nor are they wealthy by any means, but they do have a mind to work, and are to be commended on the splendid way they come to the front with their pledges and the meeting of their apportionment to the church at large.

When Doctor Bell was here last fall in the interest of the college, Martinsburg gave something over fourteen hundred dollars and McKee seven hundred, making a total of twenty-one hundred dollars.

A year ago last fall Martinsburg spent five hundred dollars in repairing the parsonage and now they are planning on spending six or seven thousand dollars remodeling the church. The excavating is about completed and the work is moving along in a fine way.

The McKee church is planning a week's meeting to begin Sunday, June 12th, closing the 19th with a Communion service. They are also planning a Children's Day program for June 29th.

We believe the Lord will greatly reward the brethren here for their faithfulness.

president Emeritus. His successor as president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor is Rev. Daniel A. Poling, D.D., L.L.D., minister of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York City. For the past two years Dr. Poling and the executive officers of the society have carried the burden of the ever-expanding work of Christian Endeavor, releasing Dr. Clark from the strain. Dr. Clark's interest in and contacts with Christian Endeavor in foreign lands induced him to retain the presidency of the World's Union of Christian Endeavor.

With the passing of Dr. Clark, the world loses one of her greatest religious leaders, a man of rare spirit and piety, of kindly courtesy and tact. His friends are found in all ranks of life and in all lands. He had no enemies. Everywhere he is recognized as one of the vital figures in the religious life of the world.

Dr. Clark proved a wise and tactful leader of the movement that was started in Portland, Me. By 1885 societies were so numerous that a national organization was formed, the United Society of Christian Endeavor. With characteristic modesty Doctor Clark urged the election of W. J. Van Patten of Vermont, as president. Mr. Van Patten resigned in 1887 and Dr. Clark was then elected president. In this year he resigned the pastorate of the Congregational Church, South Boston, to which he had come in 1883, that he might give his whole time to Christian Endeavor work. In 1886 he was one of three or four men who purchased The Golden Rule and made it the organ of the Christian Endeavor movement. Later the name was changed to The Christian Endeavor World.

Dr. Clark was a great traveller. His first journey in the interest of Christian Endeavor was to England. In later years he made five journeys around the globe and found that if the sun never sets on the British Empire neither does it set on Christian Endeavor.

He was oftentimes in peril by land and by sea, in storm and near shipwreck. He was the last American to leave Peking before the outbreak of the Boxer rebellion in 1900, and he was the first American to make the long journey from China to London across Siberia, using the trans-Siberian railroad.

Dr. Clark was the author of many books on young people's work, on travel and on religious subjects, and his magazine articles are innumerable. Among his books we may mention his latest, an autobiography, "Memories of Many Men in Many Lands," and among other works, "Looking Out of Life," "World-Wide Endeavor," "Christian Endeavor Manual," "The Church and Young People," "A New Way Around an Old World," "The Continent of Opportunity," "The Charm of Scandinavia" (with Sydney Clark, his son), "In the Footsteps of St. Paul," "Our Italian Fellow-Citizens," "Gospel of the Out-of-Doors" and many others.

His interests were as broad as humanity. He was a director of many peace organizations, The Church Peace Union, and others. He saw in Christian Endeavor a mighty force to promote world friendship. He pointed out that after the Boer War the first time Boers and Britons met in friendship was in a great Christian Endeavor convention in South Africa, and after the World War Christian Endeavor was the first international organization to bring together Germans, Frenchmen, and Englishmen in a great convention in Hamburg. Even now Christian Endeavors of England invite German Endeavorers to spend vacations in England as guests of the British Christian Endeavor holiday homes, and similar invitations come from German Endeavorers to Britishers.

No one can measure the extent of the influence of Francis E. Clark on the religious life of the world. The Christian Endeavor pledge has entered into the life of at least 20,000,000 present and former members of the society, and this pledge formed the background of Dr. Charles M. Sheldon's book, "In His Steps," millions of copies of which have been sold. Christian Endeavor liberated for the service of the church the energies of young people. It challenged them to do something for Christ and the church. It showed them practical methods of work. It is inter-racial, international, and interdenominational, and therefore has brought into vital fellowship young people of all lands and of all faiths. Christian Endeavor has never entered the field of doctrine. Its aim has been to unite young people in practical work for Christ.

On October 3, 1876, Wm. Clark married Harriet E. Abbott, of Andover, Mass. His wife survives him, as do also four children: Mrs. Maude Williston Chase of Newton; Eugene Francis, professor and secretary of Dartmouth College; Harold Symmes, head master of a school in New Jersey, and Sydney, who is engaged in the real estate business in Boston.

For several years the active leadership of the Christian Endeavor movement has been under the direction of Rev. Daniel A. Poling, of New York City. Dr. Poling was elected President of the International Society, in July, 1925.

jects? Are we serving him faithfully? He says, "Them that honor me I will honor." 1 Sam. 2:30. Are we seeking the anointing of the Spirit which is promised so freely to all "them that obey him"? Acts 5:32.—The Illustrated practical Points.

1. A people can be free in their government only as far as they are religious and moral.

2. A people reject God when they refuse to worship him and to obey his laws; when they expect the blessings of obedience upon lives of irreligion and immorality.

3. We often earnestly desire things which are not best for us. We are too ignorant of the issues to insist on any worldly good.

4. We often refuse God's best gifts, and then he can only give us the second best.

5. God sometimes yields to our requests because he sees that we are not fitted for the higher blessings he wishes to bestow upon us.

6. God will bring good out of our evil and do the best possible for those who will not accept the very best.

7. The smallest things rightly used may lead to the largest issues. Saul sought stray asses and found a kingdom.

8. Outward advantages of beauty, family connections, wealth, personal attractions are the pedestal on which a man stands; but the pedestal is not a part of the man.

9. When God has a great work for us to do, he prepares us in various ways for that work.

10. God has made us to be kings and priests. He has brought every one of us to a kingdom. Power, usefulness, goodness, influence, helpfulness, victory over sin, are all before us.

11. Napoleon said that his nobility dated from Arcole and Marengo. May ours date from victories of love over the evil within us and in the world.—Illustrated Quarterly.

THE LITTLE GIRL WHO HELPED

Little Helen's mother was having company. It was an afternoon party in honor of an old schoolmate of hers whom Mrs. Blount was very happy to have visit her. To little Helen this guest was Aunt Jean, and Helen loved to have Aunt Jean there.

Before the time came for the ladies who were invited to come, Helen's mother dressed the little girl very daintily in a fine white frock, trimmed with small pink rosebuds. Helen wore little shiny black slippers and pink and white socks.

"Doesn't she look darling?" Aunt Jean cried, giving the little girl a squeeze.

"Yes, I think she looks very nice," smiled Mrs. Blount, "and I am quite sure she will do all she can to help me."

Helen looked thoughtful, for she didn't know that there was anything she could do.

"You can keep brother Bobbie quiet and contented," her mother went on, "until grandma comes for him at four o'clock. She is to take him over to her house for the rest of the afternoon. Then if you see any of the ladies sitting alone and perhaps with no one near, you can go and talk to them and perhaps show them some of the beautiful views which Uncle Frank has just brought back from his trip around the world. You know, they are in the little brown basket on the window sill. Or perhaps if some one does not look quite comfortable you can offer a cushion to put at her back. And I am sure you can answer the telephone for me, if it rings. Unless it is very necessary, do not call me, just say that mother is busy and begs to be excused until evening. Then I expect a delivery man will bring the ice cream at 4:30, and I'd like you to be on the watch out and tell him to leave it in the hall just outside the kitchen door. And when the mail man arrives you can take the mail and put it on daddy's desk."

"My! my!" laughed Aunt Jean, "what a busy little girl Helen is going to be! I wonder if she will remember."

Helen looked very thoughtful, but she made up her mind to do her best; and so all the afternoon she was watching for days and places to be of service. She was very busy up to the last minute when lame Mrs. Elder forgot her handbag, and Helen ran back into the house, got it, and took it out to the car to her.

"Thank you, dear," smiled Mrs. Elder, "You are a little helper, aren't you?"

The praise made Helen very happy; and when Aunt Jean told her daddy that night how much she had done to make the party a success, her father patted her head in approval. And somehow that made Helen's heart very light indeed.

One week later Aunt Jean was back home, and Helen had a birthday. That morning the postman stopped with a long, narrow box. The little girl could scarcely restrain her curiosity until the box was opened, and then she hopped up and down and clapped her hands for joy, for there was the loveliest doll she had ever seen. It had blue eyes and real hair. Beside it was a little envelope, and in the envelope a note which said: "To Helen, the helper who is always watching for an opportunity to do something to make some one else happy or comfortable."

Helen listened while her mother read the note. "But, mother," she protested, "I had a good time helping others."

"Of course you did," laughed her mother. "We always do have."—Emma Gary Wallace, in Baptist Standard.

Besides her husband and two children, she leaves in this life, a mother, two brothers and two sisters. She has lived in Long Beach for eight years past, with the exception of one year spent in Michigan. She united with the First Brethren Church of Long Beach in December, 1922, and has lived a most consistent Christian life at all times. Suffering greatly for many months with a tumor of the brain, undergoing two major operations, she at all times was patient, and was not afraid to go to meet her God and Savior when the call came. The funeral was conducted by the undersigned on June 3, 1927. LOUIS S. BAUMAN.

CROTZER—J. Wilber Crotzer, a councilman of the city of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, and a member of the Second Brethren Church of that city, passed from the scenes of this mortal sphere on Tuesday, May 31, 1927, at the age of 55. He had been in poor health for several years and confined to his bed more or less continually for the past nine months. Death came as a release from long weeks of patient suffering, and was not unexpected, though none the less bringing sorrow to the wife and children who loved him and by whom he will be sincerely missed.

J. W. Crotzer was born in Lock Haven, Pennsylvania, and came to Johnstown Pennsylvania in 1897. He was employed for various periods by the Lorain Steel Company the Union Radiator Company and the Johnstown Passenger Railway Company. Since 1912 Brother Crotzer has been in the employ of the city of Johnstown as policeman, Food and Milk Inspector, and scaler of Weights and Measures. In 1923 he was elected to the city council from his home ward and at the time of his demise was superintendent of accounts and finance.

Wilber Crotzer was a man of decided convictions, and was sincerely respected by those who even differed with him in his opinions. During his last illness it was the pastor's privilege to have frequent talks about the things of the soul as well as current questions of the hour, and his convictions were always based on principles of right and justice.

Funeral services were held in the First Brethren Church, of Johnstown, because of Brother Crotzer's prominence and that the large assembly which paid homage to his memory might be comfortably cared for. The obsequies were attended by the city officials in a body, and by a large assembly of friends and neighbors who thus bore mute testimony of their sympathy for the bereft family. The services were in charge of the First Church, and Elder M. J. Weaver, pastor of the Moxham Church of the Brethren. The discourse at the services was based on Hebrews 2:15. Interment was made in Grandview Cemetery.

He leaves two sisters, one brother, the wife, one son and four daughters, one grandson and one granddaughter, beside an exceptionally wide circle of acquaintances to sorrow at his leave-taking. But he was prepared for the coming of the messenger of death, and we can but bow to submission to the inevitable, and pray that God may enable us to be also ready when our summons shall come. Peace to the ashes and God rest the soul. DYOLL BELOTE.

CARTWRIGHT—Sister Etta Cartwright died May 2, at her home at Biddesburg, Pa., at the age of fifty-five years. Her life had been a useful and upright one, though not without its tribulations. She suffered a stroke and lay for thirteen weeks unable to speak until her Master said, "It is enough!" She had been a teacher in the church school and persisted serene in her faith until the end. She is survived by her husband and one son. W. S. CRICK.

CUMMINGS—Mrs. Jennie Cummings was born in Cambridge, Vermont, February 18, 1849, and was called home by a peaceful death at her home five miles south of Fort Scott, Kansas, June 9, 1927 at the age of 87 years, 3 months and 25 days. She was married to the late M. Cummings in Cambridge, Vermont in 1863 and a short time later came west with her husband and settled on the farm where she died.

Mrs. Cummings was a pioneer resident of Bourbon County, and was very prominent in all community affairs for many years, but during the late years of her widowhood, she had lived a quiet retired life on the farm place with her two sons.

She had been a member of the Methodist church since she was 18 years of age.

Mrs. Cummings is survived by her two sons, Carl and Paul of the farm home, and two step-children, Mrs. Willis Burge of Mound City, Kansas, and Nate Cummings of Chautauqua County, Kansas. She is also survived by a number of grandchildren and four great-grandchildren, Opal, Kenneth, Donald and Charles Briggs. The writer's acquaintance with Mrs. Cummings dates back 38 years, and I have known her as a woman of Christian character, intelligence and high ideals, always interested in her community's welfare and especially the work of the Kingdom of Christ, through the church.

Many years ago, when the writer was pastor of the Brethren congregation at Godfrey, near her home, she was a regular attendant and supporter of the work and always had words of encouragement for the Lord's servant.

We can now truly feel that she has gone to be with her Lord in that more perfect life.

Funeral was conducted by the writer, from the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. E. O. Briggs of Fort Scott, Kansas. Burial was made in the family lot in the Evergreen Cemetery. L. G. WOOD.

NOTE—The following obituary is reprinted for correction.

O'NEILL—Jennie E. O'Neill was born in the borough of Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, the daughter of Patrick F. and Elizabeth Shafer O'Neill, both of whom, together with the daughter were members of the Brethren church of that place, the parents being among the founders of the church there. Miss O'Neill passed to be with her Lord on Saturday afternoon, April 9, after a brief illness from pneumonia, her demise coming as a great shock to the family and friends. Miss O'Neill was for twenty-five years a trusted employee of the Penn Traffic Store, one of the largest of its kind in the city of Johnstown.

Two sisters, Mrs. J. L. Weller of Oil City, Louisiana, and Mrs. Nettie O'Neill Reebford, of Van Etten New York, and one brother, H. F. E. O'Neill, secretary of the Y. M. C. A. at New Brighton, Pa. (and well known to the Brethren fraternity) comprise the immediate survivors of the deceased's family. Three nieces and two nephews, together with other distant relatives mourn her departure.

Funeral services were conducted from the Fieck Mortuary on Tuesday afternoon, April 12, in charge of the undersigned, assisted by brethren Chas. H. Ashman of the First church and A. R. Staley, pastor of the Conemaugh Brethren church. A vast concourse of people paid respectful homage to a dear relative and friend. Interment was at the Hedrick Cemetery, near Conemaugh, beside the bodies of the parents. Peace to the ashes and God rest the soul.

Imposing on the Minister's Wife

After writing this topic we had half a notion to change it and call it "The Church That Won't Do Anything," for that is why we have been burdened with this message—because we have been brought afresh in touch with a church (and churches) that is so determined that it won't divide amongst the members any of the local leadership or responsibility that a disgraceful imposition has been worked upon the minister's wife. It is not a new situation, nor is it peculiar to any one denomination. We would not say the name of such churches is legion, but they are not uncommon, and they are not dependent upon any particular type of creed or organization. They exist wherever the spirit of "do-nothing" prevails in a group of Christian people and where there is a disposition to sit by and watch the pastor and his wife do all that must be done in the way of departmental leadership and organization and special tasks. And where such a situation prevails, it is the minister's wife who suffers most from a multiplicity of duties and from over-wrought "nerves".

Now we would not be misunderstood to be making a plea in behalf of the minister's wife who finds no pleasure in, and seeks to avoid, her fair share of the responsibility of leadership in the congregation and in the work that must be done by the women of the church, and there are few who are not perfectly willing to get under their load. Most ministers' wives share with their husbands a feeling of consecration to the holy task of ministering to the needy souls of men, and to all the details of the organization that serves as an agency to that end. They feel themselves set apart as assistants and cooperators with their husbands to the high calling of the Christian ministry, which is their right and duty. The sacrifices and trials which go with the calling are not feared and shunned, rather they are looked upon as coveted privileges and as means of intensifying the blessings to be realized from the service. The common, the trivial, the temporal things that would hinder their usefulness are passed by readily that they may share more largely in the glorious achievements and victories that are spiritual. They are not only willing, but eager to stand by the side of, and be help-meets to, those who are messengers of the cross. Whatever hardships and sacrifices, whatever leadership and responsibility their position devolves upon them, they accept as blessed privileges which give joy to the heart and not the spirit of complaint. There may be exceptions here and there, but their existence only proves the rule.

But there is a limit to the endurance even of a minister's wife, and though they seldom offer complaint, they are human enough to give way physically when overworked, and this is the sad result that we are occasionally compelled to witness when there are no members in the congregation willing to share the burdens. Most ministers' wives are not driven quite to that point, but some are, and when we learn of such instances, as we do now and then, we are made to wish we could lead a movement against the tolerance of situations that cause such results. But possibly public sentiment would not reach those who are thus living at ease in Zion; it may be that we should better unite far and wide in prayer that the Spirit of God might convert them to a sense of their responsibility. At any rate that is how we are made to feel when pastors write that they are greatly handicapped due to the illness of a companion, who, it may be, has suffered a nervous collapse because of her overload of responsibilities. They say, "This is just one of those places where the pastor's wife must do anything that is done." She is president of the Woman's Missionary Society, patroness of the Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, teaches a woman's Bible class, superintends a Junior Endeavor—all for the very simple reason that no one else will do any of these things. In addition to all the work connected with these organizations, she must spend one or two days a week sewing for the church, preparing for bake sales, markets, church suppers and what not, besides trying to visit with the pastor a good bit (because people insist on it) and trying to do her own sewing and housework on the side. Then when visiting preachers or representatives of the general interests of the church are in the congregation, the preacher's wife must care for the visitors because no one else will have them in their homes, or are too thoughtless to invite them. The preacher's wife is ill and in need of some one to care for her, but the stranger must be housed and fed and she will undertake it even at the risk of going beyond the limit. She does and she pays the price. And her husband, in addition to his heavy load—made heavy because in a do-nothing church men are usually as doless as the women—he must do the housework and care for a sick wife.

Now, are you displeased with these plain words? And do you think they are an exaggeration, or that the case is extreme? We will admit that it is unusual, but it is true. It was not necessary to draw upon the imagination to paint this picture, but simply to use the material that was supplied by correspondents. And while we are willing to say, and happy to know, that such a situation is the exception, and though it is unpleasant to read about, yet there are not a few localities where conditions are tending in this direction and there is need that something shall be said to jar them out of their easy-going and lethargic attitude and awaken them to the fact that the Christian life is real and earnest and purposeful, and that to every man and woman is a task. We doubt whether even the strongest laborers in the Lord's vineyard are called upon to do the work of an entire group, and much less do we believe the minister's wife justified in attempting it. And the Christian church that will countenance such an imposition is living under an assumed name.

That Sunday School Picnic

The time is at hand when Sunday schools are planning for their annual picnics. We say annual, for the picnic is almost universally a part of the yearly program of every school large or small, city or country. They may lack many other points that are considered important to the highest efficiency of a Bible school, but it would be hard to find one that neglects to get at least one such outing in its summer's program. And it is well that it is so, for it is the one day in the year when children and adults, old and young, "cast dull care away" and meet together for a jolly time. Parents should not neglect the picnic, but should be present for their own sakes and for the sake of the children, and also give the officers their assistance in making for the greatest success possible.

Dr. A. C. Crews in the Otterbein Teacher suggests that the best time for the picnic is in mid-summer, when the ground is warm and dry making it suitable for the youngsters to roll and tumble on the ground. The first three weeks in June are too unreliable for outing purposes, he says, and he considers it a mistake to advance the date to those weeks for the accommodation of those who may be going on their vacation during the later summer months. "Those who go away for an extended holiday do not need the picnic, as the ones who remain at home, and the latter should have the first consideration. He considers it advisable to select an attractive spot, vary the location from year to year when possible, and to go not too far away so that the trip wearies the people. His suggestion that dinner arrangements be made so as to avoid little family and congenial cliques, and so that all, both rich and poor, shall mingle together as one large family, as was the universal character of the old-time picnic, is worthy of our thoughtful consideration. Much of the benefit of the picnic is to be had in the mixing of the various elements of the school so that those who may belong to different social groups may be brought together and made to feel a spirit of fellowship one with the other. Games should be planned so that all, down to the smallest, may have some part in the program, and so that all will be kept together and enjoy the entire program. A stiff speaking program should be avoided, and the day given over entirely to fun and recreation, except that at meal time and just before the close of the day's program the entire school can be called together for a prayer, a few hymns and a brief but pleasant greeting from the pastor and superintendent. Above all build your program and execute it in a manner to promote the spirit of good fellowship among the various members of the school, and also to inspire the spirit of loyalty to the school and church.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. Florence N. Gribble's latest address is 42 Rue Pierre Nocile, Paris, 5th, France.

Prof. J. A. Garber again calls the attention of our young people to the International Christian Endeavor Convention at Cleveland, July 2 to 7, and also speaks of the Brethren Young People's Camp at Shippshewana Lake, Indiana, July 17 to 24.

Brother W. A. Gearhart tells of a destructive flood which swept the Lost Creek river basin and did much damage to our mission, the water rising several feet in the buildings. The appeal is made for extra funds with which to repair the damage.

Brother Freeman Ankrum informs us that the evangelistic campaign now in progress at Oak Hill, W. Va., with Brother R. Paul Miller as the preacher, is progressing in a fine way, the enthusiasm running high and a number of souls already having made the good confession.

Dr. Bell, in a personal communication, informs us that Dr. W. H. Beachler is coming through his operation in a fine way and that Brother Orion E. Bowman is up and able to ride about in his machine. Thus we have good reason to rejoice in the fact that prayer is being answered.

Brother N. W. Jennings continues to be blessed of the Lord in his evangelistic meetings on the Pacific Coast. He recently assisted in the Northern California District Conference, speaking on evangelism and making an appeal each evening resulting in twelve confessions of Christ. He is making his way east by auto.

Brother L. G. Wood, who reports for Fort Scott, Kansas, this week, is working on indefatigably and undiscouraged, notwithstanding the unfavorable labor conditions. He was pleasantly surprised by a generous gift from a friend toward the liquidation of the debt on the church, and Brother Wood invites other such tokens of confidence and support.

Brother E. B. Shaver, the veteran preacher of the Virginia valley and father of a number of the churches of that district, recently held a meeting at the St. Luke's congregation with the result that twenty-four were added to the membership. In addition to acting as supply pastor of this congregation during the illness of Brother P. W. Wisman, he is also serving the Bethlehem church near Harrisonburg.

Brother Kenneth M. Monroe favors us with his first report as pastor of the church at Spokane, Washington, where an evangelistic campaign resulted in sixty-five confessions and reconsecrations, and of the nine baptized, seven were received into the church. It is encouraging to note that the present active membership of this mission church is eighty-seven. Brother Monroe is one of our young men in the ministry, is well equipped for his task and is making a splendid beginning.

Brother L. G. Wood informs us by personal communication that their Daily Vacation Bible School, which closed with a special program and an exhibit of their work on June 10th, was considered a success and very enjoyable by both teachers and pupils, and was climaxed on Monday evening after the close by a trip of the entire school to a city park for an outing and picnic supper.

Dr. C. F. Yoder gives us another very encouraging report of the work in Argentina. A new hall was dedicated in an outlying station, and plans laid for a parsonage, the cost of the two being met by Brother Perez, a zealous convert. At Buenos Aires, Brother Yoder was kept busy with speaking engagements. The developments about the mission station make the outlook for the work very bright.

The thriving country church near Berne, Indiana, cheered the heart of Campaign Secretary, Dr. W. S. Bell, by a generous gift amounting to $1,485, which brings the total up to $112,220.94. This group of people have certainly learned the art of giving to a remarkable degree. We would that all our churches had made equal progress. Brother John Parr is the much-loved pastor of this church.

We are glad for the privilege of passing on to our readers a likeness of the Smithville, Ohio, church and its pastor, Brother M. L. Sands. This church has made splendid progress under Brother Sand's wise leadership and in the five years since dedication the entire debt has been liquidated. Brother A. L. Lynn was the pastor while the church was being built. With this splendid equipment and the fine field, the Smithville group has a fine future before it.

President Jacobs announces the proposed trip of himself and family to the Pacific Coast where they will spend most of the summer and where Doctor Jacobs is to be one of the principal speakers of the Southern California Bible Conference to be held at Long Beach about the middle of July. It should prove a most pleasant and profitable vacation trip and we wish them a maximum of joy and a minimum of tire trouble on the way.

Brother C. C. Grisso urges attendance at the Bible Conference program on July 17th, which is called "Indiana Day". It would be a splendid thing, and doubtless rejoice the hearts of the promoters as well as the speakers if every day of the week preceding were made "Indiana Day" by a large attendance. Dr. J. Allen Miller is to give a series of Bible lectures during the week of July 10 to 17 and those who fail to hear him will miss a rare treat.

Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, director of the Winona Bible Conference, announces the date as being August 5 to 14 and claims that the program will be the best ever. This is the thirty-third consecutive year for the Winona Bible Conference and many of our people have come to appreciate it by frequent attendance. In this connection we would remind our readers again of the Congress of the World League Against Alcoholism at Winona Lake, August 17 to 23, which many of our delegates to General Conference will find it convenient to attend.

The New York Bible Society, in accordance with its custom of presenting Bibles to distinguished persons, gave a handsomely bound volume to Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh in connection with the recent welcome tendered him in New York. We are happy to believe he is the type of person to appreciate such a gift, and it would seem that the society chose well the words it had engrossed in gold on the outside cover: "In recognition of Faith, Courage, Heroism." Such clean, reverent, courageous, modest manhood is a worthy example to the youth of our land.

The work of the Long Beach, California, church is still pressing forward, growing in numbers and power, having at present a membership of 691, and a Sunday school enrollment of 640, with an average attendance of 492. Dr. L. S. Bauman, the able pastor, recently burned the mortgage on this church. Their Easter offering for foreign missions is said to be more than $7,000. During a recent evangelistic campaign with Rev. Harry Rimmer as preacher, thirty-six confessions were received and seven added to the church roll. At the North Long Beach church, a mission of the First church, 109 children and young people recently made confession.

God's Emphasis on Detail

By Martin Shively, D.D.

(Published in Three Parts. Part I)

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." I Samuel 15:22.

We are in the midst of days when most revolutionary changes are taking place on every hand. This is true not only in the mechanical world, in which it is so conspicuous that none can have overlooked it, but it is equally true in the world of thought. Mental anchorages of yesterday are swept aside to give place to ideas and theories which at first, shock, but which are soon accepted as a matter of course. It seems but yesterday since we older folk saw our first automobile, and the fact is, it has not been long. The man then who predicted that that method of travel would become popular, was thought of by most of us to be visionary in the extreme. In eighteen years the number of such vehicles in Ohio alone, has grown from ten thousand to almost a million and a half, and "Old Dobbin" has been all but crowded off the road. Text-books on many subjects, which a few years ago were accepted as the final word, have been pushed aside, as having no real value in the fields which they treated. It is hardly too much to say, that the text-books now accepted as authority, will suffer the fate of their predecessors, being pushed aside to make room for the newer and better.

In the face of this, we are forced to ask the question, "Is my thinking stable, and permanent?" We still believe that two and two make four, but even this is doubted by a few, or at least they are not willing to accept it as an ultimate fact. In such a situation I am still ready to avow my belief in the Bible, as being the Word of God, and I do not mean by that, that it contains the Word. To me, it is still the revelation of God, and God's will to man, concerning man. Such statements too, are called in question, but so long as real faith in it as such, continues to ennoble life, and to triumph in the face of death, I shall cling to it. Until he who disputes its claims offers to me and to the rest of the world, a better book—one which satisfies the longing of my heart, and satisfactorily answers my questions as to my origin, my duty and my destiny—I will continue to accept it as the very Word of the Infinite. I know that unholy hands have been laid upon the Book, that questions have been raised as to its inspiration and authority, but nothing worthy has been offered in its place, and believing it as I do, I know the Old Book will stand, and that both the present and the future will vindicate it. And it is finding vindication every day.

I am not alone in thus avowing my faith in the Word, as being the final and complete revelation of God, for millions join in such expression of adherence to its claims. But somehow, I cannot shake off the conviction that we do not all mean the same things when we sing, "I'll do what you want me to do, dear Lord; I'll be what you want me to be." To me to say this, means not only that I will accept the statements of the Word as being both true and Truth,—that I will accept the salvation which is offered to me, but that I will deliberately comply with the conditions upon which the offers are made. I do not want to forget that we are "Saved by Grace", because since it is impossible for any man to earn so great a prize, there is no other way than by the way of grace, than any man can have hope. Neither do I forget that "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Nor do I fail to rejoice in the declaration, because I know it cannot be taken by force.

But, while I rejoice with exceeding great joy in such apparently unqualified declarations, to me it seems that neither the grace of God, nor his unspeakable gift, can avail until man as a matter of deliberate choice, puts himself in an attitude in which he can receive what his heavenly father is so willing to bestow. If this were not true, then would all men be saved, and that in spite of themselves. There are, perhaps, many who try to make themselves believe that this is true any way, but none can find support for such a view either in the Word, nor in the great book of Nature. In both fields there is emblazoned across the horizon of life, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption, and he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap everlasting life." No man can fully appreciate the goodness of God, because there is no detail of life, either great or small, in which we are not dependent upon it. "In him we live, and move and have our being," says the inspired writer, and while, in a general way we may understand what that means, no man understands in full, because the details are too varied and infinite. In this field all alike are partakers of the Divine grace, but for the purposes of this message, I am not concerned with any field other than that which has to do with things which contribute to eternal life, and after all, that is the only field which is really worth considering, in the last analysis.

I rejoice in the fact that so large a variety of liberties are permitted to men, for both in number and character, they seem almost without limit. One may read what he will, though he may not be able to escape from the results of his choice. We may choose the style of house in which to live, provided, of course, that one has the price. So also with most of the affairs which enter into and compose our social life. But there are fields in which God speaks, even in detail, and then only one course remains open to men, and that is to obey, and to obey fully. Thus when the race had forfeited its right to live, and to continue flaunting its sin in the face of the Maker, and it was determined to wipe out mankind by the flood, and begin anew with a single family, the mere mention of the ark which was to be prepared for its protection and salvation, is enough to remind us of the plans and specifications which God gave into the hands of the builder. Length, breadth, height, windows, doors, material, and in fact almost every detail was given, and it is not too much to say that its Architect expected and even demanded that his orders should be obeyed to the letter. You will remember that the great apostle says that "Noah moved with godly fear", to prepare the ark, in which he and his were being offered protection from the all engulfing deluge. Is it too much to conclude that safety lay in absolute obedience to the Divine command?

Years later, when another single family was chosen to become the head of a new generation,—a generation of people which was to be known all the world round, as God's own—when Abraham was honored with the bestowal of this great dignity, he was tested to the limit as to his readiness to give unqualified response to the commands of him who called him. He was asked, an old man of seventy-five years, to leave the land of his nativity, a land in which he had become rooted, socially and otherwise, and go into another, about which he knew absolutely nothing, and more trying still, a land which was many miles away, with but one possible way to reach it, and that to travel overland, at the rate of not more than a mile or two per day. If there is anything common in human flesh, and I think there is, then I can have at least a faint idea of what the prospect of such a trip would mean to him. His flesh must have cried out in protest, and trustful of God as he was, I am sure he must have asked if there were not some other way. But receiving no reply to such a question, reluctant flesh was led by an absolutely obedient spirit, and the journey was finally completed. By his obedience here, and in his response to other demands, even to the offering of a dearly beloved son as a sacrifice to the God who had given him, this man has rightfully won the place in our hearts which he holds there.

And still other years later, when the descendants of this man of God had grown to become millions, and were on their way back to the land which had been promised as an inheritance to their ancestor, in the very midst of that trying journey, Moses, their leader, was called aside to receive instruction as to their government, spiritually and socially. Again the Great Architect of the universe outlined the plan of a holy place, in and about which their first interests should center. Instruction in great detail was given as to the observance of the holy feasts, and such emphasis was laid upon detail, that if it were not possible for one to participate in the Passover at the time definitely specified, he was not permitted to use his pleasure in the matter, but a new date was allowed to him, definitely fixed, and the penalty for disobedience was, "That soul shall be cut off from Israel." Elaborate directions were given for the building of a Tabernacle, which was to be the center of their worship. In the specifications for this structure, one is amazed at the minuteness of detail. Not only the structure itself, but its equipment, to the last kettle, pan, bason, and all other essentials, described and numbered. When the builder was about to proceed to the task, the Architect said to him, "See that ye build it according to the plan which I showed thee in the mount." When all was done according to the plan, and the day of its dedication had come, the God who had designed it was unmistakably present, filling the hearts of the worshippers with awe and reverential fear. Is it too much to say that if the builder had substituted his own plan for the one which was given to him by the All-Wise Architect, no such evidence of Divine approval would have been present? "See that ye build it according to the plan which I showed thee in the mount"—this positive instruction must have ever been before the eyes, and ringing in the ears of this man, concerning whom it is said, "He chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season."

The Legitimacy of Evangelical Missions in Latin-America

By Rev. Webster E. Browning, Ph.D., Montevideo, Uruguay

(Selected by Dr. C. F. Yoder)

Some earnest evangelical Christians question the legitimacy of Evangelical Missions in Latin America. It is a natural question, and particularly so when asked by those who contribute to the financial support of this work. It comes also from the young people of our colleges and seminaries who are looking about the world in search of the best place in which to invest their lives, and who have little exact knowledge of the religious conditions that prevail in the Latin republics.

A satisfactory reply to the question would require a generous-sized volume. Yet the following suggestions may be of help to some who are interested in this particular field and who are willing to study further.

Two results of Evangelical work in Latin America might be classed by some as by-products of the missionary programme, yet either of them fully repays for all the missionary money and life already invested in these lands.

1. The first is to be found in the English-speaking congregations that are scattered from the Rio Grande to the Straits of Magellan, and which minister to the spiritual needs of the thousands of men and women of our own language and religion who are compelled, because of business interests, to live within the bounds of Latin-America. In every case, save a few British Consular Chaplaincies, founded nearly a century ago, the work of these congregations—some of which are now self-supporting union churches—work was organized and has been carried on by members of this or that evangelical mission, who have thus added to already heavy duties that of ministering to the spiritual needs of their fellow-countrymen. Sunday schools have been organized, and provided for the religious education of the young; church buildings or halls have been provided, until such time as the congregation could secure its own; the Word has been faithfully preached; the minister has been at the call of the members of the community, when wedding bells have rung and when death has knocked at the door; and these little struggling congregations have stood out boldly as a marked proof of the religious convictions of our fellow citizens who are self-exiled from the home land.

2. The great advance in the conquest of civil liberty in the twenty republics of Latin-America is very largely due to the liberalizing influence of Evangelical missions. Cemeteries which were formerly closed to all who had not been shriven by a priest of the Roman Church—even to little children who had not been baptized by a clergyman of that faith—are now open to receive the dead of all faiths or of none; marriage is no longer a sacrament that can be administered only by a priest of Rome, in order that children may be considered as of legitimate birth, but is a civil contract which may afterward be consecrated by a minister of any faith, if the contracting parties so desire; and liberty of worship has been fought for and secured by liberal statesmen who have been very largely inspired by the teaching of the Evangelical missionary. Persecution, by the hierarchy of Rome, which has filled many a martyr's grave in Latin-America, has been largely checked and there is not a government today which does not willingly exercise its influence or its might to insure to the Evangelical missionary complete liberty of speech and action. Other reasons, perhaps more strictly within the programme of Christian missions, may be briefly summed up:

(1) If we should grant that the Roman Catholic Church is all that it ought to be, and that it has done all that it could have done to give the whole Gospel to the people of Latin-America, yet the indisputable fact still remains that this great field has not been fully occupied. Moreover, the Roman Church, with its declining power, is impotent to extend its sphere of influence.

In general the cities and towns that rim the coast have been cared for, but there are some which have not been provided with a sufficient number of places of worship, and the great interior contains a numerous population for which that church has done little or nothing, even as Protestantism has been even more remiss in the fulfilment of its duties toward this great area.

In Bolivia there are but 328 parish churches, 83 of them without priests, in an area equal to the combined area of Washington, Oregon, Idaho, California and Nevada. Paraguay has but 84 priests to a population of a million. More than half are in the capital, the remainder expected to care for a region as large as all New England and almost completely without roads of any kind. In Colombia, in the region drained by the Sinu river, with a population of 100,000, there are but three priests, and the archbishop of Cartagena is reported to have declared that, in spite of his efforts, he could not find candidates for the priesthood. Chile, which extends for three thousand miles along the Pacific and reaches up to the ridge of the mighty Cordillera de los Andes, reports one priest for every 8,000 of its population, most of these in the large centers with the country districts cared for only by occasional missions. Even Buenos Aires, the second Latin city of the world and the metropolis of Latin-America, with a population of 2,000,000, has but thirty-five Roman Catholic parish churches and eighty-one chapels, according to published statistics. Philadelphia, with about the same population, in addition to its large number of Protestant churches, has 285, and Brooklyn, also of about equal size, has 120.

The great interior of the continent, which, in South America, alone constitutes an area of 6,000,000 square miles, is pitifully lacking in all that constitutes a proper provision for the spiritual necessities of its people. In all that area, there are but 84 centers of Protestant work, and in all South America, in a population of 60,000,000, there are but 125,000 Protestant church members.

(2) The various governments, in spite of strenuous efforts, have not been able to provide for the education of the entire population. In every country there is a small group of well-educated men and women, but the educational spire, though high, is exceedingly slender. The president of an Argentine university is quoted as having declared that "ten thousand persons do all the thinking for the eight or nine million Argentines." In Brazil, in a recent survey of one of the interior States, out of 3,000 persons only thirteen could sign their names. The average analphabetism must reach 75 per cent of the population, the lowest in any country is 38.8, and the highest can not be less than 92 per cent.

Moreover, while schools may instruct, they do not educate. Professors teach that God is a myth, religion man-made, and soul-mold is not a function of the school. In but few, if any, universities, could more than ten per cent of the students be found interested in any degree in religious matters. The majority, while not antagonistic, would declare themselves completely indifferent.

(3) There is a deep distrust of the dominant church coupled with a lack of religious conviction on the part of the men, which can be overcome only with help from without. A South American writer has recently declared,

"Speaking broadly, men are non-religious. I will go further and say that a sort of suspicion lingers about a church man, for people know that loyalty to the Catholic Church does not always spell loyalty to what is just and right." Another writes, "The man does not believe in the Church, feels no need for it, and is accustomed to ignore its existence. The women, especially of the upper class, are generally practicing Catholics, but it is a grave misfortune for Latin-America that its men are divorced from theology and Christian worship."

(4) Roman Catholics point to the divisions of Protestantism as a proof that it is fundamentally wrong. Yet four hundred years of untrammelled spiritual hegemony in Latin-America have not given to Roman Catholicism that hold on life and that spiritual authority that it should have secured, and each decade marks a decline in its spiritual power. There is a greater unity of spirit among the too numerous Protestant sects, than in Roman Catholicism itself, and much of the vitality and dynamic power of Protestantism is due to that friendly emulation, which characterizes religious life in the United States. Roman Catholicism has been of great use to Protestantism in the Nordic countries, in spurring it to purer and more active life, and needs, in return, that same help in its own work in the countries of Latin-America. Because of the presence and work of the Evangelical missionaries, better sermons are being preached by the Roman clergy, purer life is demanded of the priesthood, more and better hospitals and schools are being founded and are maintained at a higher level, and new life is already stirring.

(5) The millions of pagan Indians scattered from the Rio Grande to Magellan's Straits constitute a commanding challenge to the Evangelical churches of North America that cannot longer be ignored. Many of these Indians, it is true, have been baptized, but it is most often but a baptized paganism. The Indian may go to mass and he may profess reverence for the saints, but at heart he remains true to his tribal divinities and turns to them in times of stress and doubt. The great mass of the Indian population is as thoroughly pagan as were their ancestors when Columbus first looked out on the shores of the Western world. The remnants of tribes once ruled by the haughty Inca or proud Montezuma, many of them head-hunters and cannibals, as well as quiet tillers of the soil in the mountain valleys and the high plains, can expect no help in the alleviation of their ills, except as it comes to them from the Evangelical churches of Great Britain or of the United States. Bishop Oldham has characterized the Indian of South America as the "most pathetic figure in history," and has declared that "if ever from the depressed heart of a submerged people there went up a cry for help into the ears of the Lord God of Sabaoth, that cry goes up this day from the nearly twenty millions of Indians scattered from Mexico to Chile."

The Evangelical churches are today willingly pouring out money and life in the uplift of the black folk of Africa and the belated nations of the Far East, and conditions merit and demand even greater sacrifice of both. Yet, when these millions of fellow-Americans, as pagan and as needy as the most submerged races of the world, beg for the crumbs that fall from our loaded tables, we turn a deaf ear to their cry. Surely God will require at our hands the lives and souls of these our dark-skinned brethren of the South who have long cried out in their agony and heard no reply save the echo of their own wailing!

(6) The love of fair-play which characterizes the Anglo-Saxon race demands that we give something to Latin-America instead of limiting our efforts to getting all possible out of it. The commercial interests of the United States in the twenty Latin republics would today total around $4,000,000,000, and Great Britain has even larger interests. Our business and professional men have gone into these countries and in fair and open competition won their just share of business. But can we, as a nation, rest satisfied with this successful penetration of commercial relations? Shall we make no attempt to make known to the Latin-Americans our educational, social and religious ideals? Are we to discourage the interchange of moral and spiritual resources, and be satisfied with mere material gains?

What Latin-America, in common with all the world, needs today, is a new vision of the Christ. And with this vision will come a new ideal of service, a greater readiness to take up the cross that must be borne and to establish the Kingdom that must be established. If to help other peoples attain to this vision is legitimate, surely it can not be less so in Latin-America.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Forward Step

By W. R. Deeter

TEXT: "...But one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Philippians 3:13-15.

This season of the year invites a forward look, and a forward step. In looking back we see mercies, opportunities and successes. We also see failures, but these may not be irretrievable, or, if lost opportunities do not occur again, new "open doors" will invite us to enter; opportunities for doing good; for 'adding to our faith' every virtue which we can hold. It is said that a salesman must be able to entertain as well as be able to sell goods, if he is to attain the goal of a real knight of the grip. Conwell gives us a beautiful word picture of a man who sought long and far for the diamonds embedded in the soil of mother earth. After selling his old farm and going out in search of treasure, the new owner discovered sparkling jewels of diamonds in the back yard of the old hut. Here is the thought that comes to me: Beneath the dirt and the dust we can find diamonds, and if we "scratch" we will never be beggars. The riches that abide are right within our humble reach and grasp. I am thinking of the vast number of youth in our land today who have "riches untold", and it is of them I want you to think with me for a little while today. YOUTH whose possibilities for the Kingdom of God are unlimited. YOUTH in the forward step for our church and our Christ. Aims, motives, purposes, goals to beckon them ON.

I. YOU ARE RICH IN HEALTH

A man said to me a number of years ago, "You are full of vim, vigor and health." In youth we are active in muscle and brain. We want to be doing something. The world is calling us to some line of worthy endeavor by making use of the years that are ours, for some day when we begin to struggle up stairs we will no longer be able to meet the demands of youth. Young people, today you are rich and robust in health.

II. YOU ARE RICH IN TIME

There are the years before you—days, months, years, reaching into decades. You are rich in many things. The Good Book says: Remember now thy creator in the days of thy youth. Some spend their time carelessly and heedlessly, and in old age they are in poverty for want of a "little more time." Here is a man eighty years of age, who is not very acceptable as regards good citizenship or morals, but some one thoughtful enough about his welfare as a brother man asked him to take Jesus as his Savior, and spend the rest of his days in the church. He says to him, "Why not change?" His reply was, "I have not time." Youth has time. The old man's time is gone. All the hours he has to spend will do little to help the world. Young folks, you are rich in TIME. What is your forward step to be?

III. YOU ARE RICH IN COURAGE

Youth is unafraid. He wants to hurl his life out in usefulness to the world. That was a wonderful feat of Lindberg's when he leaped across the Atlantic in one single hop. His undaunted courage through those long hours behind his whirring motor, with mighty waters below him and the heavens above, has won for him undying fame and brought the world to his feet. He, a man of youthful years, with clean habits of speech, good morals, and a good name, is an outstanding example of courage—courage to do and to dare. This youthful aviator the time of whose fame is still measured by one leaf of a monthly calendar is acclaimed the nation's hero.

Recently I sat by the side of a fellow minister in a County Young People's Conference, and, naturally, or habitually, I asked him: "How long have you been in the ministry?" "O, about fourteen years, but I began before I had any sense." The answer was somewhat crude, but I grasped immediately what must have been the motive and power that prompted his initiative step in the great work of the ministry—COURAGE, to do and dare for God.

Some years ago a young man and his wife graduated from our church college at Ashland. He asked the Mission Board to send him to the hardest field in America, as he felt that God wanted him in such a place. Bloody Brethett County, Kentucky was chosen, and down there he and his companion have labored for almost a quarter of a century, and their work there stands as a monument today of their faith and courage, not only through all the years, but when they made the adventure as well.

In a certain church conference a young couple were dedicated to the mission field. They asked their board to send them to the hardest foreign field they knew of. They were sent to China and now for two years they have labored and loved in that land. COURAGE in the name of the Master is a motive power that makes YOUTH venture.

IV. YOU ARE RICH IN PASSION

We hear a voice from amid the teeming masses calling: "If you must give us religion—give us one that is cool and gentle." But that is not the voice of Youth. He is ready to give himself to some great movement. John Knox said: "Give me Scotland, or I die." John Wesley while quite young began to preach the "Unsearchable Riches" of Christ to the world, and when he died he left a good library, a well worn clergyman's suit, an abused reputation and the Methodist Church. But his passion for souls helped to set the fires of the Reformation aflame for God. He took a forward step. He was a man whose passion prized every fragment of human worth, claiming it for God. Need we also mention Martin Luther's passion of youth when he helped to kindle the smouldering fires of righteousness over the continent of Europe during those eventful years? He was not afraid to make known that deep inburning passion he had in his soul when he nailed his eighty-six theses on his parish door. We have many thousands of young folks today who stand ready for the responsibilities of the Kingdom to fall on their shoulders that they might carry on. They are ready to take that STEP.

V. YOU ARE RICH IN PROBLEMS

"Oh," you say, "problems are liabilities, and not assets." So many think of problems as mountains of difficulty, rather than opportunities for good. Take for instance the black man—he has a real problem in getting to live in a certain locality or district. It was Booker T. Washington who said, "I thank God I am black." Some one has added, "The race of the future is the race that has the greatest problems." Through and by the sacrifices of the pilgrims of the past, "their yesterdays have made our today's possible," and they are become a blessing to us. It is a noble heritage that has come down to us, and we should CARRY ON.

The last generation has brought the world a little closer together. We must learn to live as neighbors, for the world has moved to our door yard. It is one thing to live together, and another to learn to work together. We MUST DO BOTH. That is a FORWARD STEP.

SUMMARY

What are you going to DO with your riches? There are riches and there are riches. Of riches it has very truly been said, "There is too often a burden of care in getting them, a burden of anxiety in keeping them, a burden of temptation in using them, a burden of guilt in abusing them, a burden of sorrow in losing them, a burden of account at last to be given for possessing and either improving them or failing to improve them." This conveys the thought that material possessions are a tremendous responsibility, and whether we are pleased with it or not, what means we do possess are witnessing for us or against us now, and certainly will do so in eternity. But more especially are we thinking of the riches of health, of time, of passion, and of courage. To the rich young ruler Jesus said: "Sell that thou hast and give to the poor." In other words, "Take these riches and pour them out to the world's needs." Your riches will help to bless mankind; to bring them to a knowledge of a Savior, and to enhance the Kingdom of our Lord: There are great possibilities and opportunities in the field of Christian service for our talents. Shall they be used for self, or for others and his Kingdom? What will you do with your riches? Are you ready to say to the Master, "I want to dedicate my ALL—my LIFE—in service for him." Are you ready to pour out the riches of your life in service for the Kingdom? Why not a FORWARD STEP? Jesus is ready to trust you, ready to help you. Jesus trusted in men. He chose the most common of people to help him. He trusted in Judas even till the last night.

General Grant made more honorable soldiers than any other man, because he TRUSTED them. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is BIG enough to overcome all the evils of the world. Shall we not take that STEP with him?

it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods.

Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place?

He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord, and righteousness from the God of his salvation. This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, O Jacob.

Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord strong and mighty, the Lord mighty in battle. Lift up your heads, O ye gates; even lift them up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory shall come in. Who is this King of glory? The Lord of Hosts, he is the King of glory. (24th Psalm.)

He that walketh righteously and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; HE SHALL DWELL ON HIGH. (Isaiah 33:15-17.)

What concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

Wherefore, come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. (2 Cor. 6:15-18.)

Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. (1 John 2:15.)

OUR MEDITATION

By faith every true Christian hopes to attain the prepared place which the Savior promises to those who love him and seek to do his will. The attainment of this home, together with the eternal joys of the redeemed, is the incentive that calls us to a consecrated service wrought with self-denial. The Apostle with his gaze directed heavenward could joyfully pass through trial, persecution, and affliction, thinking of the time when he should sheathe the sword and receive the crown. "This one thing I do," he says, "forgetting the things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." Paul sought to dwell on high and the way was paved with sacrifice, humility, and love.

The psalmist and the prophet point out definitely as to who should dwell on high. The apostle admonishes Christians to walk consistently before the world. John would tell us that he that loveth the world hath not the love of the Father in him. As in the days past, to follow and obey God called for a clear-cut distinction between the works of those who were slaves to this world and those who were servants of the Most High God; even so, today, to be a true disciple of Christ one must separate himself from the sinful pleasures of the world, not allowing the ambitions of this life to stultify Christian zeal. Demas was a co-laborer with Paul for a time, but he went back. To me some of the saddest words of all scripture are those that Paul addresses to Timothy when he writes, "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world." He did not simply forsake the apostle, but he forsook God. To many in the church today might these words be truthfully applied. May it not be true of any who may read this, but rather, on the other hand, may they overcome the world through the wonderful riches of grace.

Surely, Isaiah's words are significant of the present age. Who shall dwell on high? "He that WALKETH righteously and SPEAKETH uprightly." To guard one's walk so as not to lead into temptation and to watch one's speech so as not to deny the Truth demands a devoted and holy life. For, "without holiness no man shall see the Lord." (Heb. 12:14.)

Who shall dwell on high? "He that SHAKETH HIS HANDS from holding of bribes." In this day when graft is so common and it speaks in terms of millions, it is not surprising that many should succumb to its influence, especially those not of the household of faith. "He that STOPPETH HIS EARS from hearing of blood." A well known Washington magazine says that the reading of murder trials is fast becoming our national sport. There is a world of truth in this statement, for the people through the newspapers of our land are being fed daily on this stuff (and "stuff" it is) which is very detrimental to spiritual growth. Just recently a noted newspaper would NOT give place on the first page to a sensational murder trial. Such stopping of the ears is worthy of commendation. "He that SHUTTETH HIS EYES to seeing of evil." Jesus says that it is better to go through life with one eye rather than have both eyes cast into hell fire. He would have us pluck out the offending member and cast it aside. In other words, shutting the eye to evil.

The psalmist would impress upon our minds that he that hath a PURE HEART shall ascend into the hill of the Lord. Jesus and the apostles continuously teach concerning the regenerated heart and life through the Cross. To dwell on high is the aspiration of us all. To do so we must put on the whole armor of God fighting the good fight of faith to the finish. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."—Jesus.

"In the name of God advancing,
Plow, sow, and labor now;
Let there be when evening cometh,
Honest sweat upon thy brow.

"Then will come the Master,
When work stops at set of sun;
Saying, as he pays the wages,
Good and faithful one, 'Well done.' "

OUR PRAYER

We thank thee, our kind heavenly Father, for the hopes and aspirations of thy followers, not only in this life but in the Life Eternal when we shall stand before thy throne glorified with thy Son, our Redeemer. Help us to render unto thee an appreciative service of love for thy kindness to us. May we have that enduring faith that will enable us to be faithful unto death. Then take us to dwell with thee on high. In the name of Jesus. Amen.

Clay City, Indiana.

Premature utterance is a great mistake. Much harm is often done, and reputations suffer. It is better to think twice before you speak. The men whose words carry conviction, weigh their words, and think out their theme.

The great reason possibly why so few have thought of taking God into their career is that so few have really taken God into their life. It requires a well kept life to know the will of God, and none but the Christ-like in character can know the Christ-like in career."—Drummond.

Lesson Poem

My life flows on in endless song,
Above earth's lamentation.
I catch the sweet though far-off hymn
That hails a new creation;
Through all the tumult and the strife,
It finds an echo in my soul,
How can I keep from singing?—Inskip.

Verse Comments

Picture the scene of this lesson. Midsummer in Palestine. The people, representatives of the entire nation, assembled at Gilgal, just east of Jericho, the first stopping place of the tribes after crossing the Jordan to enter Canaan, the place where were laid the opening scenes of the nation's residence in their Promised Land. Saul, "every inch a king", a splendid looking man, just returned from a victory over the nation's enemies, and installed into sovereign power amid enthusiastic rejoicings, as a solemn ratification of what had been done at the previous assembly at Mizpah. Samuel still a prophet and religious teacher, retiring from his secular position as Judge, laying it down in a farewell address which takes rank with Washington's farewell to his army, and with other great farewell addresses in history.

1. I have hearkened... have made a king. As the representative of Jehovah and only as Jehovah commanded. But it was to Samuel the people had appealed, and he was the visible authority in the matter.

2. Walketh before you... walked before you. The figure is that of a shepherd walking before his flock. He had been the leader; now the king had taken his place.

3. This is an appeal to the people to acknowledge that Samuel's rejection is not for misgovernment, while verse 4 is the people's acknowledgment and verse 5 is the oath taken to confirm it.

His anointed. Saul. Or... Ass. As an agricultural people Israel considered these the most valuable of their possessions. Samuel names what corrupt judges would have done in his place. Ransom. Here the technical term for blood money paid to the relatives of a murdered man. This was common in all races and ages, but forbidden by Hebrew law (Num. 35:31ff.). Samuel got a "clean bill of health." No one brought even the smallest charge against him.

Samuel then warns the people against any wandering from the paths of Jehovah and recalls to them the many failures in obedience in their history. Further sin will bring its punishment.

Thunder in wheat harvest, May or June, is practically unknown in Palestine, for those are practically the driest months of the dry season.

19. Pray... unto Jehovah thy God. As if they realized that in their rejection of Jehovah as king they had endangered their possession of him as God.

20. Fear not. This thunder storm had made the people afraid, the more that it had come at Samuel's announcement. Ye had done all this evil of which he had been speaking to them. But if now they would serve and follow God truly then God would forgive the evil and be their protector.

21. Turn not aside from God to idolatry, vain things, "nothings," a more vivid and equally true rendering of the word.

22. For Jehovah will not forsake his people for his great name's sake. God's own name would be involved in the downfall of the people that had borne God's name and had been called God's people. Because it hath pleased Jehovah to make you a people unto himself. The Jews were the chosen nation not because of their goodness, but because of God's grace, God was pleased to select them for his own, unworthy as they were. Does he not thus call us to himself?

23. But I will instruct you in the good and the right way. Samuel was old, and was no longer to be the civil ruler of the people, but he would be their spiritual leader as long as he could speak and pray.

24. Only fear Jehovah. This is the religious side of "the good and the right way." And serve him in truth with all your heart. This is the ethical, the practical side of "the good and the right way."

25. But if ye still do wickedly, ye shall be consumed. The verb means "to be destroyed," and is used elsewhere of being killed in battle.—Alice D. Adams.

Speaking the Mind of God

When Samuel was deposed from the judgeship, he was "calmed by the feeling of identification with God's cause. 'They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me,' said Jehovah. Had it been mere wounded pride, or pique, or family aggrandisement arrested, or ambition disappointed it would have been a cureless sorrow. But Samuel had God's cause at heart, and this gave a loftier character to his sadness. There was no envenomed feeling, no resentment, no smarting scornfulness. To be a part of a great Divine Cause which has failed is an elevating as well as a saddening sensation. A conviction mingles with it that the cause of God will one day be the conquering side."—F. W. Robertson.

A Citizen's Creed

I believe in my country.

I honor her for the great deeds, the high purposes, the splendid dreams, and the unstinted devotion that have made her great despite the vice, the selfishness, and the violence of past and present.

I recognize in my country a moral character which cannot escape the laws of moral growth and decay.

I know that true greatness in individual character can come only along the lines of love and service and unselfishness. And so I believe my country can be great only as it lives and labors among the nations with true good-will in real service and by actual unselfishness.

I realize the profound debt my country owes to all who have died untimely in her service. Yet I believe my country is even more indebted to those who in quiet ways and unchronicled deeds have lived for their country and kept her heart clean and her character true.

In God's providence my country needs to fear no outward enemy, but this very security makes our inward peril more grave.

I believe the great crises of my country's past have been inward, when vice sapped our moral fiber, when selfishness intrenched itself, when violence and hatred stalked unreprieved.

I know today is shadowed by the same dangers. Vice still rots the heart. Selfishness is still suicide. To take the sword of violence is to perish by the sword.

We can be saved today, as we have been in the past, only by the unnoticed and unnumbered heroes who quietly live down vice and selfishness and violence.

And we can make our country great by causing her to live among the nations a people not to be ministered unto but to minister.—David N. Beach, Jr.

AMONG THE ZULUS

Up in Zululand on the northern border of the Natal Province, South Africa, is located the Inanda Seminary for girls. Like many missionary enterprises, this one, established some seventy years ago among the fiercest and most barbarous of native tribes which savagely resented the white invasion, has a record of marvelous achievement.

Inanda Seminary, of the American Board Mission, has the capacity for the care of 200 girls. Since its organization, thousands of native teachers and native nurses have passed through the institution. More than half the native women workers and the female students at the Normal Training School are Inanda graduates.

The girls at Inanda are taught to be home makers. Every graduate has had instruction in sewing, cooking, laundry work, knitting, basketry and home economics. The students are also taught to raise pigs, cows, mules, chickens, ducks, turkeys, corn, beans and potatoes, thus helping not only to feed the students and to pay the expenses of the school, but also to teach them concerning matters of making a living. Coupled with this very practical course of instruction, the students, under the direction of Miss M. E. Walbridge, the principal of the Seminary, are trained to go out every Sunday to teach in village Sunday schools and outlying mission stations, all of which has played a large part in revolutionizing the home life of many a Zulu warrior.

This mission station is one of thousands of similar stations located in every mission-area that receive Sunday school material through the Surplus Material Department of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City.

OUTWITTED

He drew a circle that shut me out—
Heretic, alien, a thing to flout;
But Love and I had the wit to win;
We drew a circle and took him in!

Brethren in Cleveland

Last week Brother Riddle issued his final "Call to Cleveland." Others have joined in the effort to secure a representative attendance from Brethren societies at the International Christian Endeavor Convention. It looks as if there will be a nice delegation of Brethren folks. The exact number will be discovered when we meet for our denominational rally. This along with similar rallies is announced in the official program for Tuesday afternoon. But, believing that we will have the largest representation present on Monday, we have arranged to have Brethren Endeavorers meet for a luncheon and program at the Y. M. C. A. on Monday at 1:00 P. M. So plan to be present with your smiles, songs and yells and consequent good fellowship.

BRETHREN YOUNG PEOPLE'S CAMP

Most of our people have learned of the Summer Camp for Brethren young people which is to be held at Shipshewana Lake during July 17-24. This week follows immediately the Bible Conference. Sunday, July 17th is to be Brethren Day.

Many of the young people will probably want to come with their elders at that time. For the benefit of such and the older people remaining there will be an inspirational service on Sunday evening. Enrollment follows on Monday, the 18th. All "campers" should do their utmost to be present and located by that evening.

The camp will be open to all young people of 15 years and over. Provision is made also for their adult leaders, superintendents, teachers and the like. We would like to have at least one such (more may come) with each group of young people. There should be an automobile load of young people from every Brethren church within two hundred miles of Shipshewana; more should come from the nearer churches.

Pastors and superintendents are regarded as the key leaders to promote this worthy and important undertaking. Will not these influential persons help to discover and enroll delegates from their church? Registrations should be forwarded immediately to Harold D. Fry, Oakville, Indiana. This necessary information will help us to provide for your representatives. We also request you very earnestly to pray fervently for the success of this summer training camp.

INDIANA DAY AT SHIPSEWANA

At the State Conference at Warsaw last fall it was unanimously decided that Lord's Day, July 17, should be designated as Indiana Day at Shipshewana. The plan and purpose was to have every church in the district, as far as possible, to have a large delegation present for the entire day.

To date a number of churches have taken the matter before the congregation and have decided to dispense with all services and everyone is being urged to go to Shipshewana. Now these are days when folks are wanting some place to go. Why not urge them to spend the Lord's Day where there is wholesome, uplifting, spiritual atmosphere and where Brethren and friends can come together and enjoy a day of real Christian fellowship?

The program has been carefully arranged and every minute of the day will be crowded with good things. There will be good music, good sermons, and plenty of good things to eat, and good old-fashioned Brethren fellowship. And say, this just reminds me, please don't forget to bring those large baskets well filled. Pastors should remind their people that this day has been planned by conference and that the plan cannot be carried out without folks. We will need you. So come along Michigan brethren, you southern Indiana Brethren, preachers, laymen, young people, boys and girls, in fact, let's take the whole family this time. We shall be disappointed if you are not there.

What is Our Reading?

*She read the Journal and the News,
The Green Book and the Red,
She kept the serials of the month
Securely in her head.
She read the sporting page, she knew
Each athlete by his name,
She read of baseball, football, golf,
Familiar with each game;
She looked the funny pages through;
She watched the mails to seize
The magazine she liked the best,
Whose columns most did please;
But—in her house there was a Book
With pages never turned,
Whose messages of hope and truth,
Were still by her unlearned.
And still she reads, and laughs and cries
O'er stories of the hour,
And lets the Book dust-covered lie,
Unopened in its power.*

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Avoiding Dangerous Habits
Ps. 1:1, 2; I Thess. 5:22

"I don't want to go to the store, Mother. I want to say here and read. Why can't James go instead of me. He isn't doing anything." Thus Mary was whining and being sassy with her mother. She had talked back to her mother so often that it had become natural and easy to talk back every time she was told to do anything.

After her mother had explained why she wanted her to go to the store Mary went but she had a very unkind feeling in her heart which she had shown by her talk. Things went on like that for quite a while. In fact Mary became more unkind and sassy as the days passed. Finally mother said, "Mary, you are developing a very bad habit of talking back to your mother. Some day you will be sorry and wish that you had not said unkind things to me."

But Mary did not even pay any attention to her mother's warning. She answered back, "You are always calling me down instead of James. I suppose that he's perfect."

Not many days after that Mary went away on a visit. It was the very first time that Mary had ever been away from home by herself. When she went to bed that first night, she kept thinking, "I wish mother was here so that I could kiss her good-night. I wonder if she is cross at me for being so naughty lately. I'll write her a letter tomorrow and tell her that I'll try to get over the habit of being sassy and saying naughty things." However, when the next day came, Mary was so busy having a good time that she forgot all about her letter. That night when it was time to go to sleep, she felt worried and so she decided that she would stay up and write her letter. She wrote it and somehow she slept better that second night than she had the first. She was so glad she had written that letter.

But something very terrible happened. The very next day before Mary even had time to mail her letter she received a long distance call from her daddy. He said, "Mary, you must come home as quickly as you can. Mother is very sick."

Poor little Mary. She felt like crying all the way home. In fact she did cry for a while. She kept thinking, "What if I should never get to see mother again. She would never know how sorry I am that I said unkind things to her. I never can make up for the way I have acted if mother goes away. Oh, she just must live. I never can be happy again if I have to remember all my life that I was so unkind to mother."

It seemed to Mary that she would never get home. When she finally arrived, she found that her mother had been taken to the hospital. Her aunt met her at the door. James was at home and he had been crying too. Mary thought of herself, "He can't be as unhappy as I am for he has not been saying unkind things like I have."

Soon James and Mary were on their way to the hospital. As soon as they got there Mary ran to her father and said, "Do they think that mother will get well?"

Daddy said that they didn't know yet and that they would have to wait until the doctor came and ask him. While they were waiting Mary told her daddy all about her troubles and how sorry she was about having been naughty.

Her father tried to comfort her and they prayed together that mother might get well, and Mary added to her prayer for her mother a prayer to God to help her to control her tongue.

Finally the waiting was over and when Mary looked at the big, kind doctor she knew that he had good news for them. When he told them that he was pretty sure mother would get well Mary almost cried again, this time for joy, for now she would have a chance to make up to her mother for all the unkind words.

MISSIONS

WILLIAM A. GEARHART, Home Missionary Secretary,

Under the Southern Cross

Since writing last I have had the privilege of visiting several of our branch missions and will tell you something of my trip. On May 23, in company with Brother Cayetano Spring, I went to Laboulaye to preach the dedicatory sermon for the hall in the home of Brother Perez which he has constructed for the use of the mission, and plan with Brother Spring for a parsonage on the lot which we have in the center of this growing town of about eleven thousand inhabitants.

The hall dedicated is nicely furnished and will seat about a hundred people. It was filled to overflowing by people who are already fairly well indoctrinated and expressed their desire to follow the Gospel. Unless Satan succeeds in sowing seeds of dissension there will be an abundant harvest in due time in Laboulaye. Brother Isteueta still visits the neighboring towns and is building up groups of believers in them.

I arrived in Buenos Aires on the 25th, the national holiday, and remained during the week with Brother Ferguson, of the Church of the Nazarene, who was with us in Rio Cuarto several months in 1910. He has a number of branch missions and I preached three sermons on prophecy for his people.

On Thursday evening I took part in the Congress of Women's Societies of Argentine and Uruguay and on Friday evening met with the Committee on Cooperation, which with Dr. Barclay of New York, is planning for the publication of union literature for Bible study.

On Friday afternoon I spoke to the students of the Baptist Seminary, and on Sunday afternoon at the dedication of the monument to Francisco Ponzotti erected by gifts of the evangelical churches of the country. Ponzotti was one of the most celebrated colporters and agents of the American Bible Society. I was invited to speak also at the Instituto Modelo or Union Seminary for Women Workers, and other places, but time did not permit of more visits. In our own mission the hall was well filled, and it is manifest that Brother Zeche is winning the hearts of the people. He is highly praised by the teachers in the seminary also. Brother Anton held a successful meeting in Bragado and is now going to the "Chaco" far to the north where he has a sister and will hold a meeting there.

Since we bought our lot in Buenos Aires a German company has built 20,000 houses (departments) in the district immediately adjacent and these are being purchased on long time payments by workers who wish to own their own homes. I am told that a large percentage of these are German immigrants. As there is no other mission within twenty squares we have a tremendous field and should by all means have an adequate building. I consulted with several constructors on the site and learn that we can have a satisfactory building for about $8,000. The parsonage needed in Laboulaye will cost about $3,000. We trust that the Easter offering will justify these advances.

On my way home I saw Brother Reina and other workers in Alejandro and arranged to go there next week to celebrate a number of baptisms.

The one thing that hurts just now is that the Bible coach must be in the garage dur-

Troublesome Creek, which runs gracefully around our institute at Lost Creek, Kentucky, did not run so gracefully several weeks ago. All the buildings were visited with water on the first floor, save the girls' dormitory, which escaped with cellar only being filled. Water was waist deep in the boys' dormitory and Brother Drushal's home had several feet of it on the first floor. Garden and farm crops were covered with a heavy coat of mud, which doubtless will serve as a fertilizing agency for the production of crops in the future, but was very destructive to this year's crop. Large bridges, fences, etc., were washed away, and in many cases homes were taken away. Much live stock and many people lost their lives. Last winter they had quite a flood ing this beautiful autumn weather because we are short of American workers. We pray that Brother Sickel and family may soon be restored to us again.

Riverside Flood

but it was nothing compared to this one.

The damage was not as heavy at Riverside as one would imagine, but it did destroy quite a bit and it will take much hard labor to get things in a sanitary condition for the oncoming school term which begins about the middle of July. Brother Early wrote for money to help in this emergency. We sent him a hundred dollars and would have sent more if funds were available. Our mission at Kryton was also flooded, but not much damage done. Will not some of our loyal supporters of the Kentucky mission field help us with a special contribution? It surely will be greatly appreciated and the good Lord will abundantly bless those who give liberally and cheerfully.

An Itinerating Trip

By Estella Myers

Monday, Boi Kane.

We had a very short run today. We are in a rest house between two large villages. We have preached many times today. Several accepted the gospel and we have spent much time in teaching them. A good deal of time has been spent in buying iron for the boys as this is the place where they ore it. We are very tired.

March 1.

We preached to large crowds last night and this morning. This is the edge of the tribe and we used several languages that all the people might understand. Next to us live the Shuma and Baya. We are just two days' run from the Sheldons near Bos-sangoa.

We visited the place where they smelt iron and also the blacksmith shop to see them make spears and hoes. How clever the natives are in this line of work their fathers have taught them.

Two soldiers came to the village to take to prison those who did not pay their tax. They also are bringing in the natives who ran away and making them build houses in the village. The tribe is not yet under submission.

Wednesday.

We moved to Bundia today. All the villages are out burning grass today and we must wait until evening to tell the good news. The chief gave us a chicken and some food for the boys. This village is not very large.

Heard the porters quarreling and went out on the veranda to have a little meeting with them. One of our boys is sick, but think he will be better tomorrow.

We have a beautiful view from the rest house here. The forest with its many colored leaves is odd, for some trees are as green as can be while others are brown, golden and red. Some trees, like the rubber tree, have lost their leaves altogether. Some trees never lose their leaves, or in other words, lose their leaves all the time yet are green all the time. In another month the rains will start and one would think that spring was here. Everybody will start to make garden.

Bought a skin of a puff adder this morning. It is a very poisonous snake. Want to get a skin of a boa constructor, also.

Thursday.

We preached to many last night and also this morning. The village is vacant just now for every one has gone to burn grass and hunt. It is a big day. Several villages are in the hunt. We climbed a large stone to see the hunting ground on fire. We gave our porters leave to go and hunt with them but not in the name of the devil as the others went. Everything the natives want, who are not Christians, they appeal to the evil one for, as if he gave them good. Their worship is of the devil and we are here to tell them of their Heavenly Father who does give them all good.

Yambia.

We left Sundia after preaching to them this morning. We find this village very small for they are hid in the bush. Four years ago when I visited them I found many more people. It surely seems like the wilderness. Our boys did not have a place to sleep but in the open air. The chief is building a rest house but it is not finished.

Yagemi.

Preaching at Yambia before leaving the village made our start late for a long run. Two boys accepted the gospel and we tarried to talk to them. We hope to see them again before we go farther that we might strengthen their faith.

We passed a good sized river, but it was rather low just now. How the boys did enjoy playing in it.

We also passed the "galengoi" (men who control the hunting and beat the drums for the dance). They look like demons and speak a foreign language. They pretend not to understand their own language. They work for the devil.)

Just now several ravens are sitting on a limb nearby making a great noise. I don't know whether they are saying "Nevermore" or not. At least some of our porters said it after traveling over the dreadful road we did this morning. We told them Jesus traveled over an awful road to save us and we should be willing to suffer for him that these people, almost outlaws, might hear the good news.

Sunday, March 6.

Last night we had quite a crowd to listen to the gospel story. This morning our party parted, some going to the captain's village, all the rest stayed here. It has been a hot day. Many funny things have happened today. We asked a good many of our boys to testify this morning. Little Maidi had his little speech and in telling of Jesus' return, said: "Jesus is coming back with a big boat and will take us all to heaven." I guess he was thinking of the days of Noah. He prayed that we would not fight with the people of the village; He knew they were fighters.

Haou.

We stopped twice this morning to preach along the way. Have been preaching and doing personal work most of the day. We hoped to stay here two days but the boys are unable to get food so will leave in the morning.

Lia.

Soon after we arrived here we received news from Bassai that the baby is sick, so will leave in the morning for the station. We had a visit from the administrator. We asked permission to preach to the soldiers and their wives. We also asked that he come to the services. Four o'clock in the afternoon we visited the prison and the grounds of the poste and had services. The two evangelists preached too and we had a real nice service. He understood sango and the boys gave him the gospel story briefly. We left at six o'clock for a village toward Bassai and came home today. We found that Brother Kennedy had lanced the baby's gums, the high fever had left and the little fellow was happy. He was glad to see us. All are well and we are ready for a rest that we might again go out to tell the precious story.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

A Country Church that Loves to Give

Berne, Indiana—Report for Endowment

This is known as the Bethel church and located eight miles from Berne, Indiana, and is a strictly rural church; every member is interested in agriculture.

I have found it very difficult for the past few months to raise money for the College in the farming sections for as a class they seemed very much depressed and discouraged. It has been one continued hard luck story of high taxes, low prices, crop failures, etc. Yet in the face of it all, I see no let up in new automobiles, pleasure and expenditures on self.

At Berne I found it different. These people had just as good a reason to complain as others. The wet weather, taxes and prices hit them just as hard, but they did not complain and excuse themselves for these reasons, but they were interested and were anxious to do all they could. Do not get the idea that there are rich people in this church; they represent the average farmer, some own their farms, others are renters.

The reason I am writing at this length is to show that what Berne, Indiana, did, other country churches can do, if they have the same mind and spirit. This is not a large congregation, but they gave nearly $1,000 to Foreign Missions on Easter Sunday. They have a pastor for his full time and give liberally to all the interests of the church.

It is wrong—absolutely wrong to make the church suffer first in our contributions when our income becomes smaller, the church should come last in curtailment instead of first.

I am wondering if we are taking the work of the church seriously. We need fire and zeal for God and his work. The resources of the Brethren Church in life and money is only being touched lightly. Our membership, equipment, missions and extension work could be multiplied if we were doing what we are able. We lack in vision, faith and consecration.

A church that seeks to hold all for its own local church is the loser. A sure sign of spiritual decline in a church is to have it complain about giving beyond its own boundaries. I am in position to see the effect of this policy, "We have enough to do to look after our own church." This kind of a church is always in the dumps financially and spiritually, usually in a squabble with themselves and others and are losers at every turn of the road—spiritually bereft and dying. The Spirit of God does not dwell in selfishness and God does not bless a program contrary to his own. On the other hand, I find that the churches that have power, growth and prosperity, who have money to pay their bills, are the churches that are giving to missions, the college and the general interests of the church. Do not expect God to bless that which he has not ordained, but has condemned.

Do not look upon the church as an institution that needs our charity and to give as though we were extending aid to some suffering and pitiful creature. It is the ordained agency of God on earth to carry on the redemptive mission of our Lord. The biggest, the most important and greatest thing in the world. Let your dealings be, as with the mighty God and not the tossing of small coins, as into the hat of a blind man.

Brother John Parr is the pastor of the Berne church. A man whose entire life has been spent in this locality. One whom the people know, love and trust. I have held four revival meetings for this church in the past and am glad to say I never saw a church in better condition than at the present. This is one of the country churches that is not dying and the reason is to be found in things stated in this article.

Brother Parr gave me every aid in my work and nearly every family in the church gave. No large gifts, but all gave. The total gift of this country church was $1,488.
W. S. BELL.

SPOKANE, WASHINGTON

The Spokane church has been busy in the Lord's work even though no record of same has found its way into the columns of this paper. Last September, when we arrived in the city, we found the faithful ones, who had carried on the work during the year when there was no pastor on the field, planning evangelistic services. The new pastor, with the aid of a local song director, conducted a two weeks' campaign. The exact results were rather hard to ascertain. Many adults and children came forward for reconsecration. Also many young people, children, and a few adults came forward to confess Christ for the first time. Five children were baptized and received into the church.

The first of November Communion service was observed with 69 communicants. We were glad to have several from other churches commune with us.

During the winter months the attendance at evening services was augmented by the showing of some three hundred stereopticon slides of pictures taken by the pastor while in Palestine and Europe last summer. A few stereopticon lectures have been given in other churches of the city.

In March, Dr. Britton Ross, of the Los Angeles Bible Institute, held two weeks' special services. Sixty-five, mostly children and young people, came forward for confession or reconsecration. Also one young lady, a member attending one of our colleges, for Life Service. Of this number nine have been baptized and seven received into the church.

Last month we again observed Communion with 41 taking part.

Our active membership is now 87; of which number 45 are adults (10 men and 36 women), and the remainder young people and children.

At present we are busy planning for our Northwest Annual Conference which is composed of the Sunnyside and Spokane churches. This year we are to have the conference. It will begin on June 22 and close the 26th. We hope to have Brother Alva J. McClain here for the closing day.

When we contemplate the future of the Spokane church the words of Paul concerning his Ephesian work flash before our mind: "A great door and effectual is opened unto me, and there are many adversaries." The tasks considered are large but we have a mind to pray and work and pay.

STERLING-SMITHVILLE CHURCH

Sunday, May 1, was a day of rejoicing for this congregation. Three services were held with a basket dinner at noon. Dr. J. Allen Miller was the speaker at morning and evening services and Elders R. F. Porte and F. C. Vanator spoke at the afternoon service. A special choir rendered fine music at all these services and large crowds were present throughout the day. One of the special features was the burning of the canceled notes. The pastor held the notes, Dr. Miller applied the match, while the congregation sang "Praise God from Whom all Blessings Flow." One lady expressed the feelings of the entire audience when she said, "It was the sweetest smoke I ever smelled."

This group of people are to be congratulated on their achievements. They started their work at Zion Hill church which is four miles north of Smithville with a partial organization of eleven members, two brethren and nine sisters, December 31, 1892. On May 19, 1894, they were fully organized into a church with sixteen charter members, four brethren and twelve sisters. D. L. King and J. W. Funk were elected deacons and Sister Emma King, now Mrs. Ed. Steiner, secretary, and E. L. Steiner, treasurer. Elder William Kieffer of Pleasant Home was the first pastor, serving them faithfully and acceptably for several years. The church prospered and grew during these years and much credit is due "Uncle" Wm. Kieffer for his faithfulness in driving over the hills in all kinds of weather to break the Bread of Life to this congregation.

It was under the leadership of Elder A. L. Lynn that the church building at Sterling was purchased and the new church built in Smithville. The Sterling church was purchased in 1919 or 20 and the congregation moved to that place. At the same time services were held in the old Bethel church at Smithville. Later a lot was purchased on Main street and work on the new building was started. The cornerstone was laid in the fall of 1921 and the building dedicated to the Lord in August, 1922. This gave the congregation two splendid buildings in which to worship God and take care of the spiritual needs of their people. They adopted the name Sterling-Smithville Brethren Church.

The new church at Smithville is a fine building. It is built of buff brick, oblong in shape, rather plain, but very substantial. It is 44x70 with imposing entrance at front and side entrance on east with concrete walks leading to both entrances. The main auditorium is commodious with bowled floor and circular pews. The platform is semi-circular with choir loft rising immediately back of pulpit. There is a gallery at front of building with stairways on either side of entrance hall. Under the gallery are two Sunday school rooms and two more are to be found on either side of pulpit with another Sunday school room across the hall from side entrance. The interior work and pews are hardwood finish. The windows of very beautiful stained glass. Two of these are large, depicting Christ in the Garden of Gethsemane, the other depicting him as the Good Shepherd. The aisles are carpeted and the entire building lighted by electricity. There is a basement under the entire building. This has a concrete floor and is divided into dining hall, kitchen, furnace rooms and rest rooms. The kitchen and dining hall are equipped with enough kitchen utensils, dishes, chairs and tables to feed one hundred people at one sitting. Larger numbers have been taken care of on special occasions. This gives them a building well equipped to care for the spiritual and social needs of the people for some time to come. Surely this people can truthfully say, "Hitherto the Lord hath led us" and blessed us all along the way.

Elder M. L. Sands
Pastor of Sterling-Smithville Church

Our yearly business meeting was held recently at Smithville. It was more largely attended than any during the present pastorate. The financial reports showed all bills paid and money in the treasury. A fine feeling pervades the group and business of importance was transacted. Among this business was a decision to change the services from alternating them every other Sunday to alternating them each Sunday. The services will be held in morning at Smithville and in evening at Sterling one Sunday and on the next Sunday in morning at Sterling and in evening at Smithville. Thus giving each church one service each Sunday. The second item of importance was the calling of the present pastor for the fifth year of our service.

The interest and attendance is growing at all our services. New people are being interested in the church. Strangers are worshipping with us and prospects look good for successful work in the future. Pray for us, Brethren, that this church may be led as in the past to do his will and bring honor and glory to his name.

MORTON L. SANDS, Pastor.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The Summer School opened with a better enrollment than usual, the total number being now 272. This is about all the students we can care for. We have several public school men on the teaching staff this summer,—Superintendent Hetler, of Mansfield, Superintendent Lewis, of Shelby and Superintendent Landis, of New London.

The second term opens July 18 and closes August 19.

Dr. Bell made a business call the other week on his way to the Maryland-Virginia Conference. He is pressing the campaign with vigor.

The new gymnasium has gotten well under way and will be a very fine building. The further it progresses, the more I am impressed with it.

Before this letter reaches its readers, I shall be on my way to the Coast by auto. My family is going with me and we expect to spend the greater part of the summer there and enroute. I am to speak at the Annual Conference of the Southern California churches. I expect to be back again by the time of our National Conference. Mail will reach me at 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, California.

No other letters from the college will appear from my pen until my return.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along, but of course not as rapidly as we desire it to move. We have some reverses and some achievements, as is true in most places. Personally, we have plenty of workouts without going to the "gym".

We have appreciative audiences, but not as large as they should be. All departments of the work are intact and going, but not as strong as we hope to see. We are planning for a D. V. B. S. about June 5.

Our spring Communion service was held on April 24 and was an excellent service with 24 at the tables and several interested visitors. Industrial conditions are still unfavorable and we have lost two more families since our last report, by moving away to get work and some others are out of work and it is very hard to secure employment. We are hoping for a change for the better before long. The Woman's Missionary Society meets each Thursday afternoon for work and every second Tuesday of the month for their devotional meeting. Our people greatly appreciated the twelfth of May as a day of prayer for Fort Scott mission, as set apart by the National W. M. S. and mentioned in the Outlook. This was announced beforehand and on the afternoon of the twelfth a prayer service was conducted by the pastor at the Woman's work meeting, stressing the fact that many persons from all over the brotherhood were especially remembering our work on that day. We certainly experienced the power of that day of united prayer, and feel inspired to greater efforts.

In May I received a letter from an old friend of ours who was in Fort Scott; this letter was encouraging in more ways than one. But in that letter was a check for $200 as a gift to our property debt. The check is so deposited and we are wondering how many more such friends we have. Eight more like this one will clear our debt and inspire our few workers here as they have never been inspired. A hint to the wise is sufficient and we hope to be inspired to the limit, and we will give our friends credit with thanksgiving, and we will give God all the praise of which we are capable. We ask nothing for ourselves, but for him whose "bond-servants" we are glad to be. We can see several omens of good, and doing our best to bring them to full realization. There is some talk of a union campaign in the city this fall, but whether it comes off or not, we are planning for our own campaign, if we can secure an evangelist. We are enjoying an increasing respect from the citizens of the city. We crave a vital interest in all your prayers.

MOVING ON

When we reported to the readers of The Brethren Evangelist last we were in Sacramento in an evangelistic campaign with Doctor Overton and people in the First United Brethren church. God blessed us in the campaign which lasted two weeks. Forty souls made the good confession of the Son of God and Savior from sin. Brother and Sister Pepper members of the First Brethren Church at Manteca, recommended us to the pastor and people and they were a great help in the meeting. During the meeting, Dr. Barber, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Tracy, with whom we worked in a campaign, came over with a number of his people and testified as to how the grace of God worked on hearts in Tracy.

Brother Platt's faithful flock of Manteca came a distance of eighty miles, about 30 of them in a body. Never have I known a body of people to get more joy in worshipping God than the Manteca people. God bless them as they grow in the faith of the Christ.

From Sacramento we came back to Los Angeles and held a ten days' meeting in Bell, about three miles from Los Angeles. This meeting was held in the First Presbyterian Church, Ralph Isabell, pastor. He was no stranger to me, as we had worked together in Christian Endeavor for eight years. God gave us twenty-six souls; to him we give the praise. A number of our faithful people in the First Brethren church attended this meeting, giving their service.

From Los Angeles we went to Turlock to help in the District Conference which was well attended and blessed in a glorious fashion by the power of the Holy Spirit. Brother Platt said that I should speak on the work of evangelism each evening. We did our best and a number came out to rededicate life to God and the work of the church and a number, about twelve among the Bible school boys and girls, made public confession of Christ.

Brother Ronk, who had worked so faithfully as pastor, rejoiced to see the souls with whom he has labored take the great stand for the Savior. While at Turlock we had our home with Sister Bell Osborn in whose home we stayed eleven years ago when in a campaign in Turlock when Brother Darling was pastor—the home is ideal. Brother Darling and Dr. Yongburg both contributed to the conference in teaching the Word of God. It was a real treat to be with the people of Turlock once more. Our next move will be for the East, visiting our loved ones and preaching along the way. We start June 12 in auto. God bless all his dear children in all places.

GREETINGS FROM LONG BEACH

The Lord's work in this section of his vineyard is going victoriously forward. all the auxiliaries of the church being in good condition, all glory to our Lord and Master, the Head of the Church. The entire church family working together with him to bring glory and honor to him brings sure success.

Just recently our pastor, Brother L. S. Bauman, burned the mortgage of our church.

The membership of the church at New Year's was 675 and at present is 691, which may not seem to be much of a gain, but this being a tourist city the Brethren come and go.

Our Sunday school is in a healthy condition under the efficient leadership of Brother H. V. Wall and his assistant, Brother A. H. Kent.

The average attendance for this year was 492 with an enrollment of 640.

On Easter Sunday we took the regular offering for Foreign Missions and are glad to report that it will be more than $7,000, for which we praise the Lord.

On May 4, Rev. Harry Rimmer, the Scientist evangelist of Los Angeles, came to us with his wonderful messages of Bible truths. During his 18 days in our midst 4 adults and 32 children confessed Christ as Savior; there were 6 reaffirmations of faith and 7 new members were added to the church.

Last Wednesday, June 1, we had our quarterly Communion service, having 246 present.

We are now looking forward to the Bible vacation school to be held in this church soon following the close of school, and the Southern California Bible Conference which begins on July 15. A fine array of Bible teaching talent including Brother Jacobs of Ashland College, promises us one of the best conferences we have yet had. It will continue for ten days, until Sunday evening, July 23.

Our mission known as the Second Brethren Church of North Long Beach is under the able leadership of Brother and Sister Leinhardt and is in a thriving and growing condition. The evangelistic services for the young people and children came to a close Sunday, June 5. We are happy to report that 109 children and young people made decisions for the Lord. Some of them renewed their stand and many made their first confession of faith in Christ. About 40 of these are members of other churches and Sunday schools.

Oh, praise Jehovah, all ye nations; laud him all ye peoples! For his loving kindness is great toward us;

And the truth of Jehovah endureth forever.

Praise ye Jehovah.

THE OLD DOMINION

Owing to the protracted illness of Elder P. W. Wisman the St. Luke congregation has been without preaching and pastoral work for some time. The writer has agreed to look after the work there until Brother Wisman's health has improved. The spiritual condition of this congregation suggested to us an effort to revive the work. A ten days' meeting followed and we praise the Lord for the results. About 24 were added to the church, 22 by baptism and two by relation. We now believe the membership is back to normal condition spiritually. We appreciated the two sermons by Brother Hall and the help by Brother Rohart of the Winchester mission, whose singing work with the children was enjoyed by all. The writer did the baptizing both in running water and pool. We now regret that the meeting was not continued a week more. The additions it is now plain would have reached 30. The usual criticisms and comment on the weakness and shortcomings of the writer are still in order. I am now serving two congregations, Bethlehem and St. Luke.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

LITTLE BEAR HELPS A STRANGER IN TROUBLE

One morning when Little Bear went out to play in the sun-bright clearing that was his playground he had an astonishing adventure. He was skipping happily along, singing a little song of his own that began:

"Hi, hi haw!

Jimmy Crow and his pa
Were flying along flying along,
Caw, caw, caw!"

He made so much noise singing his foolish song that he didn't hear anything else except the wind in the trees until he danced into the playground. Then he heard a wildcat child crying at the top of his voice like this:

"Mer ow, yow, yow,
Mer-ow, yow, yow;
Yowler, Yowler, Yowler."

Little bear was so happy that morning and the crying sounded so funny that he began to laugh and sing.

"Where, O where is that wildcat baby, wildcat baby, wildcat baby?

Where, O where is that wildcat baby, w-i-l-d-c-a-t baby?"

Little Bear knew that it was Yowler crying; but though he searched and searched, he could not find him in the playground.

"Look up, look up!" wailed Yowler. "O mer-ow, mer-ow!"

"Are you up in the sky?" inquired Little Bear in teasing tones. "Have you bought a pair of wings to fly away with?"

Where, O where is that wildcat baby, wildcat baby, wildcat baby?

Where, O where is that wildcat baby, w-i-l-d-c-a-t baby?"

"Don't be so silly," answered Yowler. "The circus animals are loose. My mother told me so; she told me to stay at home. I thought she was just trying to scare us; but, Omer-ow, mer-ow, mer-ow, it's true, it's true!"

"Well, where are you?" demanded Little Bear, who tried to stop laughing.

"I am up here," answered Yowler. "I am on the end of the slimmest branch of the slimmest tree. O, hear that noise? There it goes again. O, mer-ow, mer-ow!"

Little Bear heard the noise and felt like running away. Some one was thrashing about in the bushes near the spring, and there was Yowler high in the air hanging for dear life to the tippety end of the slimmest branch of the slimmest tree.

"Why didn't you jump?" Little Bear called to Yowler. "Let's go and jump, and then we'll run. I don't see why you are so scared."

"Don't dare jump," answered poor Yowler. "I can't move or I shall fall. O, why didn't I mind my mother? Hear that?"

"What is making that noise?" Little Bear inquired. He was beginning to feel badly frightened.

"It's an animal," Yowler answered in scared tones, "with a neck as long as from our house to your house. Its front legs grow faster than its hind legs, and it's a stranger here."

If Yowler hadn't said that the creature was a stranger, and if the stranger hadn't called for help, something different might have happened. The stranger called again for help.

Without another word to Yowler Wildcat, Little Bear walked softly over to the spring and peeped through the bushes. There he saw a queer-looking animal in trouble. The animal had slipped into the spring when trying to get a drink of water, and his long neck was held fast by wild grapevines. He couldn't lift his head from the ground.

The stranger spied Little Bear and begged for help. The creature had beautiful eyes.

"Of course I'll help you, sir," Little Bear answered, trying to appear unafraid. "Now please hold still." Little Bear loosened the tangle of wild grape vines and then forgot to be afraid; but when the stranger got up, Little Bear stood back in amazement. He straightened his long front legs up, up and his neck up, up, up until Little Bear wondered whether he would stretch to the clouds before he was ready to travel on.

When the stranger looked down and saw Little Bear with his mouth wide open and his head went back until it seemed as if he might break his neck, he smiled. "My name is Giraffe," said he. "Is there anything I can do for you to repay you for your kindness?"

By this time Little Bear was not in the least afraid of the giraffe; so, remembering Yowler, he thought he would have some fun.

"I thank you, Mr. Giraffe," said Little Bear politely, "but a friend of mine is swinging at the end of the slimmest branch of the slimmest tree. He is afraid to move for fear he will fall. Will you please lift him down?"

The giraffe said that he would gladly, but he didn't have the chance. Just as that tall giraffe was about to take Yowler gently in his teeth Yowler dropped. He thought he was scared to death, but he wasn't. The minute he landed on his four feet away he ran home. Little Bear and the giraffe were both startled.

"Now you had better run along home," said the giraffe to Little Bear, "because the lions are loose; they will be here in a few minutes."

Little Bear was beginning to feel somewhat lonely with that queer giraffe, and so home he went. Father Bear and Mother Bear were sitting on the doorstep when Little Bear arrived. As soon as he got his breath he told them all about the giraffe.

When he had finished there was silence. Father Bear looked at Mother Bear and shook his head; Mother Bear looked at Father Bear and shook her head. At last Mother Bear remarked slowly: "He must have gone to sleep and had a dream."

"Or else he is out of his head," added Father Bear.

Just then the long, long neck and the long, long front legs of the giraffe appeared down the road, and as he saw the three bears sitting on their doorstep he bowed to them. Little Bear returned the bow, but Father Bear and Mother Bear were too much astonished even to nod their heads.

The next minute the three bears heard loud roars. The sounds came from Little Bear's playgrounds.

"That is just lions," Little Bear remarked in an official fashion. "My giraffe friend told me to run home because the lions are loose. I think Yowler and I will play around home today."

"Let us go into the house," begged Mother Bear.

She was so frightened for a few minutes that Father Bear had to help her over the doorsill, but as soon as she felt better she made some honey jumbles for Little Bear because she was so glad that he was brave enough to help a stranger who was in trouble. When the lions had returned to the circus, she sent catnip honey balls to Yowler.

"I don't wonder he cried," said Mother Bear, "that poor baby up a tree!"

Father Bear looked at Little Bear and winked; then they both laughed.—Youth's Companion.

The BRETAREN EVANGELIST

- ONE - IS - YOUR - MASTER - AND - ALL - YE - ARE - BRETAREN -

WE need nothing half so much as the revitalizing of our faith in the everlasting significance of the soul. The best contributions of the Church arise from this root. He is blind who does not see that the world will take much from the church and still reject her essential message. The church was the pioneer in education, the founder of hospitals, the authoress of drama, the guardian of the weekly day of rest, the forcing-house of social reform, the exponents of the rights of women, the sanctifier of the marriage covenant, the protector of children, the first crusader for temperance, the founder of the Red Cross movement, as she is now the vital center of the battle for world-peace. All these things the world takes from her and forgets from whence they were derived. And all these things tend to be devoted to material uses, to the comfort of man rather than to his supreme end which, according to that inspired flash of insight embodied in the Catechism, is "to glorify God and enjoy him for ever." The Church must press on, leaving to the world her successive victories, because she has new ones in view. They all spring from the same root, having this distinguishing mark. that they arise from her deep sense of the value of the human soul.

The Detached Church Member

One of the chief sources of the numerical loss to the Christian church is the detached church member. There are various types of detached church members—those who have drifted out of touch with the church, those still in the same community, those who are compelled to leave their church and go into new communities where there are no church privileges, and those who go into communities where there are church privileges but refuse to avail themselves of them. The second type do not give church leaders their chief concern, for the places where church privileges are wholly lacking are comparatively few and those who go to such places very often carry with them their interest in the church, and maintain some sort of contact with it. The first class, drifters and back-sliders, are out of touch with the church because they are out of touch with Christ; they have grown cold and indifferent; interest has waned because spirituality has receded. They are undoubtedly a source of grief to the pastor and Christian workers, but they are yet on the field where they can be gotten in touch with, where ties of friendship and old associations may still appeal, and where the chances of bringing about at least a partial return of interest and devotion are favorable. But it is the one who moves into a new community and leaves his religion and church interest and activity behind who is the church's unsolved problem and the source of its unchecked loss. There are not a few professedly Christian people in every community who are like a man without a country. They have been dismissed from the church from which they moved, or possibly have stolen away without so much as asking a letter or notifying the pastor of their departure, and in their new community they have never identified themselves with any church nor even sought a congenial place in which to worship. If we could resurrect all the unplaced church letters and attach all the unrelated church members, the total membership of the church would be greatly increased and the chances of many souls as beneficiaries of divine grace would be greatly improved.

There is a false notion abroad that it is a matter of little consequence whether one is attached to any church or not, just as he has gone through the forms at some time in the past; that it matters not whether one's church membership is kept up-to-date just so he can point to a time when he did have a church relationship. There are those who imagine they can drift on indifferently and yet finally enjoy the blessings of heaven just the same. We are not so self-deceived and foolish with regard to other matters. With regard to our life or accident insurance policies, we know that if we allow them to lapse, no benefits can be expected, and we put forth all possible effort to keep them up-to-date. But our church membership and Christian profession,—that is different! so we seem to think. We act as if we expected to be "carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease, while others fought to win the prize and sailed through bloody seas." We forget the words of the Lord Jesus to the church at Laodicea, or else imagine that he does not mean us when he says, "Because they are lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth" (Rev. 3:16). We are careful to keep the taxes paid on our homes, lest by allowing them to become delinquent they should be sold for the taxes and we should be left homeless. Yet somehow we imagine that our church membership will run on forever whether we do anything to keep it alive or not. We buy a railroad ticket which will take us on a long journey, and we read on it, "Not good if detached," and we heed the words, guarding the ticket carefully that it may not become soiled or torn. But when we read in the Acts that "The Lord added unto the church daily such as should be (or, were being) saved", and remember that the Lord himself is the Master Builder of the church and that faith in him has been made the rock foundation of that mighty institution, we are little moved and forthwith forget the matter with a lightness of concern that is outrageous. We presume upon the grace of God to keep us saved outside of, or detached from, the one institution on earth which he has made the agency of his saving grace! How absurd! There is not a promise in the Word of God of future bliss or present rejoicing and enrichment to him who is detached from the church which the Lord bought with his own blood.

We need to read again the abiding decree, "Not good if detached," and remember that it applies to church members as well as to railroad tickets.

It may be that the detached church member is as clean and upright, as kind and neighborly as he ever was, he may indeed be as good in many respects as the average church member who is in vital touch with the church, but that does not take away the effect of his detachment. The degree is "Not good if detached" and he who thinks that the fact that he may not now be a member of the church, or that he can suit his own convenience or preference regarding the matter, and that it will make no difference as to his present spiritual state and his future happiness, may possibly suffer as rude a disillusionment as did the man who thought to partake of the marriage feast without the wedding garment. You might argue with regard to your detached railroad ticket. This coupon is just as good as before, and it is made of the same kind of paper and printed with the same ink as the portion from which it is detached; the fact that it is detached should not make any difference. But it does, and nothing you might say to the conductor of the train could change it. And it makes a difference from the church, who seeks no fellowship with the church of God with regard to your church membership. He who is detached and shares no responsibility for its progress, is out of touch with the Spirit, has lost interest in spiritual things and has broken with his allegiance to his Lord. A person cannot be detached without it making a vital difference in all his life and relations. The detached man is a disinterested man, a non-supporting man, an unspiritual man. He is detached from the spirit of obedience, from a vital love for God and from a real concern for being in the will of God. He is detached from that which makes for life and godliness here and glory in the heavenly world. The church of Jesus Christ is the divine agency to that end, and no one can ignore it without suffering irreparably thereby. It is a serious thing to be a detached church member, and we need to be made to realize it.

The Pot and the Kettle

"The Witness," a Canadian Presbyterian weekly, relates the following incident:

"There were eight young men talking about matrimony. They unanimously agreed that 'flappers' were all right to flirt with, but when it came to marrying, they wanted wives who knew about practical housekeeping—that could tell the difference between a beefsteak and a mutton-chop, and were more practiced in the effective use of brooms than in the technique of jazz dancing. Having come to this profound decision, they told some of the 'flappers' what they thought. Whereupon the girls replied in this fashion: 'The girl of today is willing to run a broom and cook beans to make a real home for a 'real' man. But she doesn't intend to do it for the accommodation of a cigaret-puffer and 'cake-eater.' God give us men, and we'll do our part!'

The retort is as deserved as the challenge. Girls have a right to expect clean, strong, temperate, unnicotined young men of those who would seek their hand in marriage, and young men also have the right to expect that young women shall be real, honest-to-goodness girls and not shams, girls who know the art of home-making and who possess the queenly qualities of modesty, virtue and loyalty. Both must know how to confine their attentions to one person and to be faithful to their marriage vow, but that is a lesson that neither the "flapper" nor the "shiek" seem strong on learning. Let them both reform. "For the pot to call the kettle black will never whiten either one of them."

Following the second of two great patriotic holidays we might well pause a moment to consider the type of patriotism that certain forces are seeking to promote, and whether or not we are to lend our influence in that direction. It is a type of nationalism that is selfish and bigoted and offensive in its glorification of American pomp and power and its depreciation of all that is not American, and that would exclude other nations from the realm of our sympathy and helpfulness. The patriotic instinct is worthy, and Christians should be the noblest patriots of all, but their patriotism should be Christian and not bigoted and narrow, not such as causes us to feel like apologizing when we speak of ours as a Christian nation. On this point Professor George A. Coe of Columbia University speaks some very plain, wholesome words:

"The trend of modern nationalism does not coincide with religion. The feeling is growing that the state is the supreme and ultimate object of loyalty. History is too often being taught in a manner that attaches the child to his country by a kind of loyalty that precludes asking too many questions. The emphasis on flag etiquette, the overdrawn eulogies of those who hold office, the practice of selected sciences, all these tend to make the student an instrument rather than a judge of policies. Many thousands of high school boys, by military drill, may not be prepared for combat service, but their minds are impregnated with those ideas. Classes in military science are so nationalistic that the dissenter is condemned as lacking patriotism or sense. These facts all add to the evidence of the advancing control of education by a certain type of nationalistic orthodoxy which looks to the schools in order to control the populace."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The Lord God is building his church of living stones fitly framed together; it is necessary therefore that those stones should be wholly yielded to the will of the Master workman.

Brother Henry Rinehart, treasurer of the Brethren Home, reports the recent financial receipts to that institution, and it is evident that the brotherhood's interest is sustained in a commendable way.

Dr. Martin Shively, Bursar of Ashland College, gives us his first report of the recent Educational Day offering. Doubtless this is only the beginning, and it is hoped that reports will come in rapidly until every church has registered "I'm interested."

Brother Elmer M. Keck, a graduate of Ashland College at the recent commencement season, writes his first letter as pastor of the church at Jones Mills, Pennsylvania. Brother Keck is optimistic about his field and we bespeak for him the hearty cooperation of his parishioners.

Brother R. I. Humberd, pastor of the Campbell church, near Lake Odessa, Michigan, writes of the splendid work he had conducted both during and before his present pastorate. As is his custom he has made excellent use of the tract. He has been well received in his new field and eleven souls have been added to the church since he took up the work.

The efficient secretary of the Maryland-Virginia district conference, Brother Clark Copp, supplies us with the minutes of their recent sessions at Linwood, Maryland. Representatives of the conference have expressed themselves as well pleased with the attendance, program and spirit. And all these features ought to have made a good conference. The St. James congregation at Lydia, Maryland, is to entertain the conference next year.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his canvass for college endowment among three small Indiana churches, receiving $151 from Tiosa, $210 from Center Chapel and $91 from New Highland church, making a total of $452 to be added this week to the total fund, bringing it up to $112,672.94. Brother J. W. Clark is serving the Tiosa people and Brother George Swihart is the pastor of the Center Chapel and New Highland churches.

Brother W. S. Crick, the faithful pastor of the Bedford County circuit, Pennsylvania, writes of some splendid accomplishments at the three churches under his care. At Raystown the debt on the new church was paid off in April and the W. M. S. did a big thing towards it. Brother I. D. Bowman was the special speaker on the occasion of the celebration of the fifth anniversary of the dedication. The visit of the district mission board was the source of much encouragement and help.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, reports the receipts for Home Missions for the second quarter, amounting to $285.53 for the various funds. Don't forget his appeal of last week for special funds for the relief of the flood condition at Lost Creek. We had the privilege of seeing a picture of the water at high tide and Brother Drushal was standing on the campus of Riverside Institute waist deep in water, and all the buildings save one were flooded. The crops were inundated and doubtless destroyed. A little gift from the churches will help to repair the damage.

Dr. L. S. Bauman, who sometime ago dedicated the basement to a new church building in Washington, D. C., writes a strong appeal in behalf of the work in the Capital City, urging that steps be taken to make possible the completion of that building in the near future. The appeal is based upon sound judgment, for it is true not only of the Washington church, but of any church that to remain too long in a temporary or incomplete structure, cripples the future of the church. And in addition to this point of appeal, there are other considerations which obligate the brotherhood to see to it that the Washington church has a house worthy of the place.

June proved to be the "month of brides and roses" this year at Ashland College and the close of school saw three couples venturing out upon the sea of life together—Frank Gehman and Irene Pfeiffer on June 9, William Schaffer and Maurine Hostetler on June 10 and Donald Bame and Ruby Oliver on June 11. Donald Bame is engaged in educational work in the Cleveland Y. M. C. A. William Schaffer has accepted the pastorate of the church at Hamlin, Kansas, and Frank Gehman is student pastor of Gretna, Ohio, church. Then on June 23 Lawrence Fritz, popular baritone singer of Ashland College was married to Mildred Pete. The Evangelist congratulates all these happy couples and wishes them Godspeed on life's journey.

Mrs. Hattie Cope Sheldon writes an interesting letter from the Bossangoa station in French Equatorial Africa, where she and Brother Sheldon are doing a good work. At a recent communion service sixty-five members participated, the total membership being about one hundred. Her description of the wildness of the locality is interesting and we may be fascinated by the novelty of it, and yet if we were compelled to put up with such a situation longer than an ordinary vacation period, it is likely we should be wishing ourselves back in civilization, unless perchance, we were constrained to stay there by our love for the Lord Jesus and our sympathy for the ignorant, superstitious natives. Let us therefore pray for those who have been willing to deny themselves of the good things of a civilized land for an entire lifetime for the sake of the Gospel.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Patriotism That Saves Nations

(Editorial Note—We take pleasure in passing on this excellent and timely article from "The Christian Statesman", which is doing much to check the growth of that selfish nationalism and chauvanistic patriotism that lead nations away from God and provoke war.)

Patriotism has come to be regarded as one of the chief virtues. Concurrently, the saying also has become popular, that "Patriotism is the last resort of the scoundrel," which will simply suggest to us that there are at least two types of patriotism.

A glance into history reveals the fact that as many nations have been destroyed by the ultimate results of their vigorous patriotism as have been built up by it, and that super-ardency in patriotism always acts on other nations just as excessive egoism does on the individual—it raises an abundant crop of enemies.

There is then a patriotism which destroys nations and tears down states. We should know that type simply to abhor it. It has ever displayed four distinct characteristics.

First, it assumes that the State is absolutely sovereign, that it can do no wrong; that it owes no allegiance and can never acknowledge a higher power.

The second characteristic, is that blind allegiance to the State expressed in Decatur's words, "My country; may she ever be right, but my country, right or wrong." This is the spirit that follows the leader or ruler in whatever he undertakes, as the British Parliament followed George III, and Lord North in the eighteenth century; as the French followed Napoleon in the nineteenth century, and as the Germans followed the Hohenzollerns and the war clique in the twentieth, and as we have been exhorted to do in supporting the Government in its foreign policies, recently.

The third characteristic, is the assumption that the State ought to rule over whatever territory the majority of her citizens or leaders desire to exploit or occupy for their political or financial advantage. It is illustrated by that centuries old attitude of Imperialistic Russia, toward Constantinople: by the "partition of Poland," and the "spheres of European influence" in China; and by the attitude of many Americans toward lower California, which is, "We could make a garden spot of it, therefore we ought to get it."

It is the present attitude of Italy toward Africa: "We need it for our surplus population, therefore we ought to be allowed to take it." Chauvanism, is the present day designation of this kind of patriotism; the "flag following the dollar" policy; the moral responsibility for putting the other nation's house in order for the sake of what can be gotten out of it; universal propaganda to destroy capitalist nations through semi-government agencies, are some of the current manifestations.

The fourth characteristic, is the tendency of the individual patriot to become parasitic in his attitude toward the States; to measure his service and his devotion by the perquisites and the emoluments. Every great nation has bred some unselfish souls, but this type has always tended to become vermin or mistletoe on the body politic.

These four characteristics have the same affinity for one another as do certain chemical elements which can only with difficulty be kept apart and their union is always a nation destroying patriotism. This kind of patriotism may do a lot of flag waving, hot air blowing, parade strutting and radical baiting, but the more a nation has of it, the shorter are the days of its life.

Over against this, there is a type which builds nations and perpetuates their life and rejuvenates them with izen to follow a righteous course when rulers choose such a course; and only unquestioning obedience when invasion threatens their destruction, but never merely to save face.

This is the type of patriotism that declares emphatically:

"Before men made us citizens Great Nature made us men."

The third characteristic is that in which citizens insist on measuring the conduct of the State, by the same standard of right as it is applied every century. This type has ever displayed five easily discernable characteristics. The first is, the recognition that this super-personality which the citizens have created, is still under the Almighty and under obligation to humbly acknowledge that fact, obey his law and work as his minister.

The second is the conviction that righteousness only, exalteth a nation, and that citizenship only obligates the cit-to themselves, under God's law.

This type avows emphatically that Jesus Christ is as much the "Prince of the Kings of the Earth", as he is Head of the Church or Savior of the soul; that "take my yoke upon you," applies as well to nations as to individuals, and that God's law must run in every sphere.

The fourth is that which counts only that life worthy, which contributes somewhat to the nation's good and asks in return only what is fair and just; that hates parasitism in all its forms and manifestations and despises mere opportunism either in national or international affairs.

The fifth characteristic is, that the citizen is as ambitious for the State to win distinction by service, as he is for the individual so to do. It craves for the State, the possession of the same altruistic ideals as he chooses for himself; ideals which include all men even though he may add, "especially our own people."

These mental and spiritual characteristics have as much affinity for one another as do those of the destructive type. They inevitably coalesce when taught as essential ideas of the Gospel of the Kingdom. When thus united

"LEST WE FORGET"

From Moses' Farewell Address

When thou hast eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God for the good land which he hath given thee. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day: Lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied. Then thy heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God, who brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage; Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought, where there was no water; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint; Who fed thee in the wilderness with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end; And thou say in thine heart, My power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day. And it be if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God and walk after other Gods and serve them or worship them, I testify against you this day that ye shall surely perish. As the nations whom the Lord destroyed before your face so shall ye perish; because ye would not hearken unto the voice of the Lord Your God." (Deut. 8:10-20).

they produce the type of patriotism which saves nations. This may not be the type of patriotism which salutes the flag as the banner that rules the world, but in its presence humbly prays:

"America! America! God mend thine every flaw, Confirm thy soul in self control,
Thy liberty in law.

In our teaching of patriotism and in our encouragement of it, we must recognize that it is like money and religion; good only when it is true and genuine; a destructive curse when it is a spurious jingoism.

These two types of patriotism are struggling for supremacy in the world today more strenuously than ever before in its history. The one is earthly, pagan and destructive, the other is heavenly, Christian and constructive, and he who looks at all things through the word of God, can only pray:

"America! America! God shed his grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood,
From sea to shining sea."

God's Emphasis on Detail

By Martin Shively, D.D.

(Published in Three Parts. Part II)

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." I Samuel 15:22.

There is a thrilling, tragic story associated with the text for this sermon, which deepens my conviction in the fact, that when God gives direction, as to duty, no matter in what field that duty may lie, there is but one safe course open to men who would have his favor, and that lies in implicit obedience. Saul, Israel's first king, had been assigned a hard task,—one from which he might have shrunk, not only because of the apparent dangers which attended it, but also because it was a bloody one. But there is no evidence in the story which could lead one to believe that any of these things inclined him to draw back from its execution. The task was the complete extirpation of a people which had done all possible to obstruct the journey of Israel, which had asked for a peaceful passage through their land. It was not a spirit of humanity, but a spirit of self pride which led the king to alter the instruction to suit his own whim, though when the accusing prophet asked for a reason for his failure to render a complete obedience to his instructions, he did offer an excuse for his failure, substituting what he thought perhaps might justify his treason. You will remember that Saul said they had brought the best of the cattle and sheep back with them, to offer them as a sacrifice to God. That sounded good, but the prophet with accusing finger pointed at him and said, "Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." And further, he said, "Because you have thus rejected God, he has also rejected you." From that day forth, his sun began to wane, and Gilboa's bloody field, on which he and his sons lay still and stark, not many years later, finished a career which might have ended far differently, if he had only remembered that when God speaks, only one course is open to man, and that to obey.

It may be argued, however, that these citations of scripture are all taken from the Old Testament, which covers the reign of law, and that we do not live under the law, but under grace, all of which will be freely admitted. But we must not forget that so long ago as the day of the Prophet Isaiah, he as spokesman of the Almighty said, "I am the Lord,—I change not." Changes which have come, have come more largely in man, and as they came, and man became able to receive further revelation of the Divine will, until both his will and his plan for man, was fully revealed in the person and the message of the Lord, Jesus Christ. In his incomparable capacity, he declared that "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." It was no lesser authority than he,—the Son of God, our Redeemer and Savior who said, as he declared the constitution for the social and spiritual government of his church, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven. For many will come to me in that day, and say, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works. And then I will profess unto them, I never knew you. Depart from me, ye that work iniquity." No fault was found with their professions of faith and loyalty, but their lack of obedience brought them to a disastrous end. He must have had some such a thing in mind when he said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" St. Paul, thinking no doubt about the painful experiences through which Israel had come, down to his own day, exclaimed, "Behold the goodness and the severity of God." I have already said, you will recall, that the field in which apparently complete liberty is allowed to men, is amazingly large, but not as large as the universe. For God has spoken, and when he speaks, man's liberty ceases, and he has no choice but to obey. Yes, he may disobey if he will, but in his act of disobedience, he forfeits fellowship with God, and only Divine forgiveness, freely offered and granted, provided it is penitently sought, can restore to him the right to the Tree of Life. There can be nothing incongruous nor unjust in such a policy. Cromwell's Ironsides were the all but invincible military force which characterized them, because of their absolute loyalty to their leader. And the very first thing which is impressed upon the new recruit in any military force is an unquestioned obedience to his superior officer. In times of war, such disobedience is punishable by death. It is by such drastic requirement, that a motley group of men becomes molded into a real army,—their action determined by a single mind. Each man then becomes the expression of that single mind, perhaps not thinking the thoughts of that mind after it, but at least giving complete expression to its purposes. Do you suppose that St. Paul was thinking of this when he said, "I have the mind of Christ"? One of the favorite hymns of the church, is "Onward Christian Soldiers," and I wonder sometimes if those who join in the singing of the stirring words, fully realize what it means to be a soldier of Christ. Of course we agree that it means a loving, reverential attitude toward the Head of that army, but it means too, an unquestioned obedience to his commands. We may not know all that is involved in his demands, for we are finite, while he is infinite, but we must have that measure of confidence in him, which will enable us to follow on to the victory, which is absolutely assured. After all, that is all we need to know. But it is a blessed thing to know that he takes his followers into his confidence, for you remember that he says, "Henceforth I call you not servants, but I have called you friends, for all things that I have received of my father, I have made known unto you." So far as we are able to grasp his purposes, he reveals them unto us, but if they are beyond our ken, our only safe course lies in following unto the end.

That there is room for wide difference of opinion as to the meaning of many portions of the Word, will be conceded by every honest man. But in all things really vital, there seems to me to be no room for quibbling. When Jesus says, "He that believeth on the Son, hath life, and he that believeth not on the Son, has no life in him," that ought to settle once and for all, the necessity of knowing him, and of knowing so well, that belief in him will naturally follow. Thus there are certain things enjoined upon us as matters of faith, and just as a perfect acceptance of the fundamental principles of mathematics is essential to a mastery of the wide field in which it is employed, so are certain principles of faith essential to a right relation with God, on whom we depend, and in whom alone, we live. Thus we are told that "He that cometh to God, must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him." This is the primary step in coming to him, to believe that he is. That leads to a second step, and St. John declares that "Every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, is not of God." Here then, we are told what must be believed, if we are to become members of the body of Christ. But can one force himself to believe what it is unnatural to believe? Yes, and No. So far as faith in Christ is concerned, I am willing to risk the assertion, that lack of it in most men, at least, is due to ignorance, rather than the opposite. And especially in such an environment as that in which we live, it is an ignorance without excuse. Some men are without faith because their interests lie in other fields, and others, because, at first thought, the claims of Christ seem to lie so far outside the realm of reason, that they are refused without examination. But to the man who will patiently and prayerfully investigate the ground upon which the claims are made, there will come a place at which he kneels with the erstwhile doubting Thomas, and exclaim, "My Lord and my God." Thus he tells not only that we must believe,—for "Without faith it is impossible to please God," but we are told too what we must believe—"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved." I am quite confident that you will agree, in the light of the portions of the Word which I have just cited, that that grace which saves, does not extend to the man who does not comply with these simple conditions.

The Bible--How It Differs from Other Books, How to Study and Love It

(Prepared by Miss Myrtle Bates, Manteca, Calif., and read at Northern California Brethren Conference, October 20, 1926, and publication in the Evangelist requested by that Conference.)

The Bible differs from other books in many ways. It is unique in that it is the only book which claims to be of God. For we are told in 2 Timothy 3:16—"All scripture is given by inspiration of God and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness." By this we learn that the Bible is inspired or God-breathed; its messages come from the very mouth of God. Though he used human hands to write down the words, yet again and again, it is written, "Thus saith the Lord", thereby giving us the very words of God himself.

We are told again in 2 Peter 1:21—"For prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." So, the Holy Spirit moved upon the hearts and minds of men

The Bible gives us the only satisfactory explanation of and these messages from God were written. conditions in the world; of sin and the plan of salvation. Though it was written in three languages, by thirty-six different writers, during a period of fifteen hundred years, it is a unit—one book.

When Sir Walter Scott was dying, he said to his secretary, "Give me the Book."

The secretary asked, "What book?"

"There is only one Book."

So the Bible is sometimes called "The Book", which sets it apart from all others.

No other book has been translated in as many languages. In whole or in part, it has been translated into 7770 languages or dialects. It is the only book that is never off the press. It is a book that does not belong to any one nation or people. Its teachings may be applied to all nations, to all peoples and to every condition in life. Translated in foreign tongues, it becomes as precious to them as to us in America.

It not only was inspired when it was written, but is inspired still. It meets our every need. Here, the sinner may find pardon and peace; the tempted find strength to overcome; the sorrowing find comfort; the tired find rest. Here we may find joy, happiness, encouragement, and hope. J. Wilbur Chapman once said, "The Bible is always life-giving in every circumstance in life. There is none like it when your head is aching, when the day is without the sun, and the night without its star. There is nothing like it in sorrow, nothing like it when you reach the end of life's journey and pillow your head on its promises and God stoops and kisses you to sleep."

To the Christian, the Bible is most precious because it is from its pages that we learned the wonderful words, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." All that we know about God, about Jesus Christ, about the Holy Spirit, about heaven and the way to heaven; all that we know about good and holy living; all that we know of real heart-rest and peace we find in the Bible.

In the fly-leaf of Dwight L. Moody's Bible there was written these words: "This Book will keep you from sin, and sin will keep you from this Book." The Bible differs from other books in that it can only be understood by those who obey its precepts and apply its teachings to their hearts and lives. It is a spiritual Book and can only be understood by spiritual people, those who have been "born again". In our study of the Bible, we should recognize that it is not only God's Word, but God's Word to us. We should study it prayerfully and thoughtfully, asking him to give us the message he would have us receive.

There is sometimes a temptation to study books about the Bible instead of the Bible itself. While helps are good, and many times instructive, yet we need the Bible itself. In studying the Bible it will prove a blessing if portions of scripture are memorized. Several years ago, Dr. James M. Gray delivered a sermon on the text, "Thy words were found and I did eat them and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart." Commenting on the text Dr. Gray said: "It is necessary for our physical bodies that we partake of food. It should be thoroughly masticated and swallowed; thus it is assimilated and becomes a part of us. So, the Word of God, which is food for the soul, must be taken into our hearts and minds, masticated by meditation, turning it over and over in our minds, and then applied to our lives." We may study the Bible by books, by topics, or by subjects.

How shall we learn to love the Book? Briefly stated, it is when we recognize its authority, obey its teaching, rely on its promises, accept Jesus as our Savior, learn to know and do his will, yield our lives in loving obedience, day by day as we come in contact with him in prayer and by the study of the Word, we shall learn to love the Book as no other. The following beautiful tribute to the Word of God is written by C. C. Crouston in a poem entitled, "The Book":

The Book of books, God's holy word,
How oft it has my bosom stirred.
Its pages full of sacred lore,
Shall live and last forevermore.

All other books come forth from men,
But this from God's eternal pen;
Yea, 'tis the voice and breath of God,
It echoes forth his fame abroad.

It came to earth—it measures time;
'Tis heaven's deathless truth sublime.
It caries from another sphere
The voice of God to mortal ear.

How ignorant of his ways we'd be,
Had he not in his wise decree
Sent forth his word of truth and light,
And thus expelled man's moral night.

He's rent the veil that hangs between
This world and that which is unseen;
How he's revealed in such a way
That man need not in darkness stray.

Without his word we would not know
From whence we came nor where we go;
We could not peer beyond the grave;
All hope would end at Jordan's wave.

We would not know the One who came
And suffered on the cross of shame,
To save our souls from death and hell,
That we might loud his praises swell.

We would not know of angel throngs,
Who thrill the heavens with endless songs,
And pinioned on their wings of light,
Surround the throne both day and night.

We would not know that Christ will come
And take his saints to his bright home,
And then return to earth again,
O'er all the world in power to reign.

This Book divine, Lord, thou hast given
To guide our way from earth to heaven.
We thank thee then for thy pure Word,
And that thy truth our ears have heard.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

United Through Fellowship

By Frank Gehman, Student Pastor at Gretna, Ohio

TEXT—"And they continued steadfastly in fellowship." Acts 2:42.

Fellowship is an appealing word. Its suggestion is challenging and reassuring. Those who know the depths and riches of its meaning are thrilled by it. Perchance the merely casual observer of life's beauties and glories is charmed by it. Even the hermit is fascinated by it, and is impelled toward that which he yet denies. Fellowship expresses much of the richness of life. Though perhaps it may be striven for, it is attained in the striving for other and common goals. It is not a goal in itself. It follows as a natural result of concentrated interest and action on the part of individuals. Fellowship implies the presence of a common bond welding together the interests and experiences of individual persons or groups of persons. It is the state automatically entered into by those having certain things in common.

But this does not, in its finality, refer to material things alone. More material matters tend to create division; in fact, they always seem divisive in their tendencies. True fellowship must be found on higher levels than the materialistic alone.

REAL FELLOWSHIP IS TO BE FOUND ON SPIRITUAL LEVELS. If material interests divide, spiritual interests unite. For the spiritual there is a Unifying Powerful Center from which all spirituality takes its rise. That Center is God; God himself is Spirit. On spiritual levels man finds himself having something in common with both his fellowmen and with his Deity. On this basis of mutuality fellowship arises, exists and persists. Spiritual interests only unite. And man is a spiritual being; he was created so. In his daily life he constantly manifests that inherent and all-pervasive spirituality.

Truly, sometimes it is so woven into the grossly materialistic as to be almost unrecognizable, but close and discerning observation will reveal its presence. When the sun shines a man cannot conceal his shadow unless he flee the presence of the sunshine. When in the presence of Divinity, being fashioned after that Divinity, man cannot conceal the spiritual likeness unless, perhaps, he flee that presence. And whence shall he flee? List to the voice of the Psalmist:

"Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?
Or whither shall I flee from thy presence?
If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there:
If I make my bed in Sheol, behold, thou art there.
If I take the wings of the morning,
And dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;
Even there shall thy hand lead me,
And thy right hand hold me."

Man possesses that which distinguishes him from, and places him above the material world of which, too, he is, in a sense, apart. He possesses spirit; he is a spiritual being. God is a spiritual being and man was made in his image. Man thus on spiritual levels finds himself immutably related to and connected with Divinity.

Each man's fellows possess the same divinely bestowed heritage as himself. He thus finds himself permanently related to and connected with his fellows. Man is completely equipped to meet the challenge of his life on earth. To be thus capable man has been endowed by God with capacities and powers from those of the rest of creation. Man has personality. Each individual must recognize the other as being possessed of equal rights and privileges with himself and as being equally rightful of recognition.

In mathematics we have the corollary stating that two things bearing the same relation to a third thing are equivalent. Appropriating that principle and introducing it here we may say that the individual human spirits, bearing the same relation to the Divine Spirit, are equivalent. This ratio of equality exists throughout the breadth of the spiritual life which, itself, reaches out to and enters into every phase of human life. When once its fact is sensed it becomes an irrepressible fellowship-motive.

On the day of Pentecost large numbers of people were received into the then new and mysterious institution, the church. These were men and women from all walks of life and were, most likely, of every diversified interests. Just as truly is the Christian church of today composed of men and women of very diversified interests. These people from all parts of the Hebrew world, being gathered together in Jerusalem on that day to celebrate a great national feast. Perhaps some of them were even Gentiles, yet "they continued steadfastly in fellowship", having fellowship, one with another, in that they were "called into the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord." Shall not we, too, continue steadfastly in fellowship? Being "Made of one blood with all on earth who dwell,

Born brothers of the near and far as well,
The children of one sacred Fatherhood,
And common heirs of universal good,

Grant us, who bow, O Lord, before thy sov'reign face,
To learn with thee to love our world-encircling race."

THESE SPIRITUAL LEVELS ON WHICH REAL FELLOWSHIP IS TO BE FOUND CENTER IN JESUS CHRIST. In him we find the greatest fellowship that is to be anywhere discovered. Those men and women awakened to the fact that in Christ they really had much in common and they fellowshipped together. That which they, as the early followers of Christ, learned to be true, we, as the later followers of the same Christ, shall also learn to be true. Here "there cannot be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman: but Christ is all and in all." Here there cannot be white and yellow, red and brown, north or south and east or west, capitalist and labor, rich and poor if Christ is to be "all, and in all." In Christ we meet on a mutual and common basis. In him we meet on spiritual levels. On this level we are equals. We feel the griefs which afflict him and which hinder his Cause, though we feel them not so perfectly as he feels those which afflict us in our service in life. We feel alike the sorrows and the joys which come into the lives of his brethren, our fellowmen. In him there is a spiritual bond of love which is sensitive above the natural man, made by the quickened spirit of each man's life. That bond of love makes for fellowship nowhere else to be found so wonderful and enduring.

The greatest thing in the world is love, love as personified and exemplified by Christ, and that is the bond which binds together believers into the most wonderful of fellowships. It binds, this love of Christ, with the bonds of fellowship, lives which would otherwise be set at variance the one to the other. Where the bond of love is felt keenly there is a realization of the magnitude of this state. With the keen realization of this bond comes a keenness of appreciation of the state engendered by it, a state of pleasurable, exalting and satisfying fellowship. The mother feels keenly the suffering of her child and would gladly bear in her own body the pain that her child might go free. There is a bond of love. Christ bore in his body the burden of our sins that we might go free. Here, too, is a bond of love. That same love rich, full and deep binds together the hearts and lives of his followers. Each feels with and for the other, and Christ feels with all. Together in Christ we are bound by an indissoluble bond.

Man desires and seeks the company and companionship of others of his kind. Out of this arise social relations. Society divides itself into groups, some of which are larger, and some of which are smaller. The persons who compose each group are drawn together by the fact that they have some interest or some purpose in common. Thus various groups are thus drawn together, for each feels something of the force which makes society a unit. Small matters may draw individuals together. Large and broad matters draw groups together. Perhaps the great force holding society together arises out of man's purpose upon earth. It would appear, according to the Divine plan, that man's purpose here is to glorify God. No matter how poorly he may be doing so, no matter how weak he may be responding to the purpose for which he was destined, the fact of that purpose is not in the least altered. Divine purpose cannot be altered. This is the case.

Our Worship Program

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

GIFTS FOR THE TABERNACLE—Exod. 35:20-29. To reluctantly give is to half refuse. God accounts the stirring up of the heart and the willingness of the spirit of more value than the material offerings.

TUESDAY

ROBBING GOD OF A LIFE—Mal. 3:7-12. Not only do men rob God of their substance, but of lives as well. They who serve and please self through the years of life's activity and turn to God at the end of life should know that they are robbing God.

WEDNESDAY

GIVING TO THE EARLY CHURCH—Acts 4:32-37. Giving cannot be acceptably done in the spirit of the banker who deposits his money with the profits in view and calculated to the fraction of a per cent. Our investments for the Kingdom of God cannot be made with the eye on tangible, material returns.

THURSDAY

GENEROUS AND EAGER GIVING—Exod. 36:1-7. He whose heart is stirred up and anxious about the progress of the kingdom, will give generously for its advancement, and on the other hand, he who gives generously will be all the more stirred up about the cause. Giving begets interest.

FRIDAY

MISERLY GIVING—Acts 5:1-11. Reaching out after wealth with covetous, grasping attitude and giving what we do give with miserly, grasping hand proves a curse to man and a grief to God.

SATURDAY

OUR EXAMPLE IN GIVING—2 Cor. 8:1-12. "But first give our own selves to the Lord." The highest example of giving is that of the young person who, when a missionary offering was being taken, marked a slip "myself." Until Christian people are ready and willing to give their own selves, they will continue to give grudgingly of their substance.

SUNDAY

GIFTS FOR GOSPEL EXTENSION—Rom. 10:10-17. "How shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" The giving of a life is not enough; others must give of their substance to enable that life to go with the gospel.—G. S. B.

great fact unifying society and binding it, however loosely we may find it bound today, into one unified body. We recognize that when Christ's kingdom is set up on earth that the purpose of glorifying God shall indeed be a binding factor. And are we so far removed from that kingdom today that we do not feel its binding powers?

Water rises no higher than its source, and fellowship rises no higher than the level from whence it springs. Man can know no higher spiritual level than "in Christ", and likewise he can know no greater fellowship than that which he experiences in Christ. Some may choose to sound the mournful and pessimistic note of Kipling:

"Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet."

But those who do so should follow on with him as he presses forward to the ground whereon men do meet without regard to petty distinctions.

"But there is neither East nor West
Border nor Breed, nor Birth
When two strong men stand face to face,
Though they may come from the ends of the earth."

And the Christian knows, as others do not know, that Christ and Christianity make men truly great. Those who have seen Christ add also:

"But Christ is Christ, and rest is rest, and love true love must greet.
In East and West hearts crave for rest, and so the twain shall meet
The East still East, the West still West, at love's nail-pierced feet."

THIS FELLOWSHIP OFFERS A WORKING FORMULA FOR THE SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEMS RELATED TO SOCIETY. Christ was not unaware of the social conditions of his day, and did not seek to pass them by unnoticed. Rather, more than any other teacher in the world has ever known did he point out social ills and offer solutions. Behold that classic example, the Sermon on the Mount, wherein he set forth principles covering much of life. He did not fear to face the problems of his people. He had for them a solution. Dare the religious leaders of today come to the people with no solution for their problems? Certainly not. Witness Christ and his teachings, they are a solution. What Christ taught about man's relations to his fellows, Paul ably sums up in Galatians 5:14: "For the whole law is fulfilled in one word, even in this: Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." He pictures love, love as exemplified by Christ, as the entire fulfillment of the law and this love is the creative force and the moulding power of our Christian fellowship. The law was meant to cover all the multitudinous relationships of life, and this new Christian commandment fulfills its entirety. Christian fellowship, which is the state of living and manifesting this love, presents a hopeful solution for the problems of even a complex society.

Many of men's divisions arise out of vain imaginings of the heart. My experiences, any man's experiences, are common to all mankind. What have I thought, what emotions or feelings have flooded and engulfed my soul, what aspirations have found lodgment in my breast, brightening my eyes, strengthening my heartbeat and quickening my spirit that others have not felt before me and some even now feel with me? What new, indeed, has any man felt or experienced with the race's history and age-long experience behind us that should make him different from all others? What now has any man today that should generate strife amongst his fellows and widen breaches already made which Christ sought to repair? Perhaps he has a new interpretation, but it is of an old truth. Shall we disagree over old truths? And are we sure that his interpretation is new? Perhaps 'tis only a new emphasis, and that upon some truth known and appreciated by mankind from of old. We, too often, choose to look at the chasm rather than at the bridging of that chasm by Christ. We too often, choose to look at the barriers supposed to be separating us than to look at the broken down "wall of partition" which Christ himself broke down.

Christian fellowship recognizes the individual's inseparable relation to the group. It recognizes man's "commonness" of experience in life. It is based upon the common interests of lives lived as generated by the Great Teacher. After all, we think and feel in much the same manner in respect to the same or similar situations in life, be we white or black, great or small. Many of our barriers of separation, "walls of partition", are but imagined barriers. Christian fellowship recognizes no such hindrances. It leaps frontiers of nationality, of race, of caste, of social standing—all such it leaps and draws together its members with bands indissoluble. It gives individuals a superior allegiance to the people of God. It touches desert places and they blossom as the rose, the waste places are made fruitful, withered souls are watered and fed and coaxed into the rotundity of youth, and barren lives are made to yield, all to the glory of God.

Imbue man with the Way of life as set forth by Christ and social ills will be forced to take to wing for want of a place to lodge. Teach men spiritual values which are true values, make them dominant in every plane of life, and a sense of comradeship and of fellowship is sure to follow, irrepressible in its force and beauty. Real fellowship will follow, a white, white rose with a red, red heart, flooding all life with the radiance of its pure beauty, and crowning man, God's Master Creation on earth, with a corona of light emanating steadfastly and incessantly from the Great Throne of Light whereon sits the Creator and Father of all mankind. Enshrouded in this light man shall spend his days in peace with his God and with his fellows, the kingdom of heaven will be no longer to him a far distant land with dreamy shores and hazy climes, and Christ shall be "all, and in all."

GOD'S WORD AND GOD'S DAY

The church has a message that it must get to the world, and the Sabbath presents the one greatest opportunity for delivering this message. In fact, thoughtful persons have said that with the Sabbath destroyed and forgotten, the church would not endure; for its opportunity for evangelization would be too meager.—Herald of Holiness.

HOW TO BE UNHAPPY

Be suspicious; look for slights; feel keenly any seeming thrusts.

Be sensitive; take best care of "number one;" be sure to protect yourself; "be good to yourself;" safeguard your rights.

Be revengeful; give tit for tat; let them have just as good as they send. Be sure to return evil for evil; take care to get down with a "dog" on his own level.

Be slow to forgive; the other fellow deserves it; he will only gloat over an easy deal; he is incapable of appreciating courteous treatment; he has not asked to be forgiven; just let him severely alone.

Be still slower to forget; it's enough to forgive—if you do; it's quite too much to add forgetfulness to the injury done one; life might be too prosy without periodically prying up these old bones.—The Truth Tester.

Samuel Anoints David

Scripture Lesson—1 Sam. 16:1-13.

Printed Text—Verses 4-13.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 3:1-6.

Golden Text—Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an ensample to them that believe, in word, in manner of life, in faith, in purity. 1 Tim. 4:12.

Lesson Poem

"It is not beauty, wealth or fame,
That can endear a dying name,
And write it on the heart;
'Tis humble worth, 'tis duty done.

A course with cheerful patience run—
By these the faithful sigh is won,
The warm tear made to start."

Introductory

Saul had reigned 30 years and committed two sins fatal to his kingship over Israel, 1 Sa. 13:1-14; 15:14-29. Twice it is said that the Lord "repented that he had made Saul king." 15:11, 35. Samuel, however, mourned for Saul till God reproved him for his grief, and told him to go and anoint David. 16:1.

Lesson Comments

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

The Failure. "Notice why it was that Saul failed in this decisive test. Once he had been humble and had thought little of himself. Gradually, however, his success and power had turned his head. Think of some of the lives you have known in which success was fraught with greater danger than failure. So it was with Saul. As soon as he became proud, he wanted new honors, new riches, new power, as soon as these things were uppermost in his thoughts, he began to reach for them, regardless of all else. His conquering army must be pacified by plunder, he himself, must have the honor of leading back the conquered king. It was a shame to waste the riches of the enemy. Why not add to his own wealth somewhat? So he must have argued; and when he saw the temper of his army his courage failed him, and his fear led him to yield to his own wrong inclination. It was at that moment of yielding that he actually lost his kingdom and threw away his crown, although for some years he still continued to rule Israel."

Why Samuel Mourned for Saul. In spite of his wilfulness, which brought about his rejection by Jehovah, Saul must have had many noble and lovable qualities, or his followers would not have obeyed him as they did, nor would Samuel, David, and Jonathan have felt for him the deep affection which they showed even when he abused them. We must remember this when we feel disposed to condemn Saul utterly. "Good qualities made a bad man more likeable, but they do not make his bad qualities less bad. Men are too prone, both in regard to individuals and society, to play the good against the bad and make the former atone for the latter instead of removing the evil. One would never think of neglecting a diseased member of the body on the plea that the other members were sound."

The best of all cures for grief is some work to do. God sent the prophet to anoint a new king from among the sons of Jesse the Bethlehemite.

The Family of David. Jesse was the son of Obed, the grandson of Ruth and Boaz, belonging through Boaz to the tribe of Judah; but his personality has left no impress upon history. Regarding David's mother, "David in his psalms styles himself, on more than one occasion, 'the son of God's handmaid'; and this leads us to believe that she had a holy influence upon him, and that it was most likely from her lips that he heard the wondrous story of God's former dealings with his people, as well as the simple, pathetic pastoral of Ruth."

Man can only see the "outward appearance." He cannot know the inner life, the hidden powers yet undeveloped. Even the actions of man do not fully reveal his character to those who see only the actions or only parts of them. Most men are dazzled or influenced by rank, wealth, size, fine looks, voice, dress, and all outward appearances.

The Chosen King. God knew David's heart and character and talents and possibilities. David had already been tested in lesser things, so that he proved by being "faithful over a few things" that he could safely be made "ruler over many things."

He was quite young, and his family did not imagine that he could be selected for any responsible position. Indeed, he was not yet fitted; but God saw his possibilities, and his soul, which parents and elder brothers are often unable to recognize.

There was great value to David in the knowledge of what his future work was to be, and his free adoption of this object of life. It is good for a young man or woman to have a definite aim in life, so that all study, all reading, all social life, all travel, all experiences, may be as rays converging upon that one burning focus. Each one, to change the figure, becomes a magnet which attracts to itself those things in literature and life which will aid in accomplishing his purpose.

To believe that God thinks enough of us to plan out our lives; that we are carrying out God's will, God's plan, in what we are doing; that his will, his love, his power, are behind and underneath our lives, cannot but make us strong and triumphant. It is the joy and glory and comfort and triumph of our lives.

His way has often been to find his agents in unexpected places. Here a great king is found in the sheepfold. In Joseph's time a prime minister of Egypt was found in the prison. Our Lord found his chief apostle in the school of Gamaliel. A miner's son among German forests, a brewer in Huntingdon, are chosen to shake churches and kingdoms.

How God Selects his Leaders. "God is always preparing the world's kings. True rulers are never absent. They do not sit on thrones. They are with us in our families, or looking after our sheep, or keeping our books, despised by their elder brothers, and unrecognized by all; but when the clock of time strikes, they take their place and do their work."

Christian Endeavor Activities of the Young People in the First Brethren Church, Johnstown

By Tom Hammers

Through what channel is your local church seeking to win and retain the youth of its community? We believe this question is one of the many problems of every church and so we wish to present some of the activities of young people's work in the First Brethren church of Johnstown as a testimony to the value of Christian Endeavor in answering this problem.

Our Organization

Christian Endeavor has grown to be a graded organization in our church as follows: Juniors, age 6 to 12 years; Intermediates, 12 to 16 years, and Young People, 16 to 24 years. These three grades have an approximate enrollment of 130 Endeavorers.

Our societies are all organized with the usual officers and committees. Since Christian Endeavor is for the purpose of training the youth, we have selected our officers from their particular age group.

Junior Endeavorers

They are a live bunch of boys and girls, numbering about 35 members. Under adult supervision, this group is making rapid progress and the programs of talks, singing, prayer and many other things indicate the excellent possibilities of this organization. A social evening is enjoyed once each month, this giving the opportunity for creating a desire for the enjoyment of their social life in a Christian manner. Surely no better opportunity can be afforded the children of your church in the preparation for the responsibilities of life, than those of a JUNIOR C. E. SOCIETY.

The Intermediates

are developing to be a strong society, with an enrollment of 32 members. The programs of this society are most interesting and we find many different talents being developed. This society recently conducted a contest for the purpose of creating a more regular attendance of the members. Individual efforts resulted in the awarding of C. E. pins to the two persons with the highest averages. A monthly social event is also enjoyed by this group and it is supervised by a superintendent who has been selected by and from the Young People's Society. The work of the Intermediate Superintendent is a real job and requires much of the individual in the way of prayer, study and hard work.

Our Young People's Society carries on a more extensive program than the other societies and it is some of their activities that we wish to present. A gradual growth has resulted in an enrollment of 72 members. As we relate the activities, we begin with the most important.

Spiritual

Christian Endeavor, from its foundation by the late Dr. Francis E. Clark, has been a spiritual workshop for youth. It was founded for the purpose of putting young lives to work for the Master and to train them in spiritual things. It was necessary that youth be trained or there would not be efficient leaders for the church. The motto, "For Christ and the Church" has been taken seriously by the young people and they have found great pleasure in working in an organization with such a motto. The C. E. pledge is a challenge to young people and because of its high standards we find it developing young men and women of a high standard.

Our prayer meeting programs are a most important part of our work and it is here we develop our young people as speakers and leaders. We aim to have interesting programs as well as helpful, but they are not for entertainment. We make much of prayer and the prayer life is in a stage of remarkable development. Our prayer meetings are preceded by a pre-prayer service. The Quiet Hour is also proving most helpful to the members of the society who observe this portion of the pledge.

The spiritual nature of the talks is especially sound as regards the doctrines which are so often assailed in the present day. Another commendable fact is the presence and participation of Endeavorers at a mid-week prayer service. Our attendance at the Sunday evening church service is especially good as we compare those in other places.

Personal evangelism receives its share of emphasis and from time to time the Lord is pleased to use our young people in the winning of some precious soul.

Missionary

This phase of the work is receiving the loyal support of the society, prayerfully, financially and in many other ways. The study of missionary work is bringing us to a fuller knowledge of the needs of the many countries and especially to South America and Africa. The recent Easter offering of the society to foreign missions amounted to $75.00. The close relation to the Lord's work, as is possible through service in Christian Endeavor, has resulted in a number of decisions among endeavorers, for full time service.

Socially

We certainly enjoy ourselves. Christian fellowship as afforded us when we meet together for a social evening, binds us in closer friendships than is possible in other forms of social life. We have placed the social life of our young people in its proper place, that is, secondary to the spiritual. The pleasing result is a more sustained attendance at our regular prayer meetings and excellent attendance to the social events. A Christian Endeavor society which is making itself a social club is not worthy of the name it is using and it is badly in need of reorganization with the true purpose in mind.

How do we enjoy ourselves? Outstanding in our minds is a gathering of about thirty Endeavorers at the CHRISTIAN HOME, where forty-five children joined with us in a most enjoyable evening. It was a joy to see these children take part as we played games, sang, had short talks and last a fine luncheon. The gathering closed with a period of testimonies and prayer.

More recent was a hike in which a group of the Endeavorers managed to acquire a number of stiff joints, etc., but a real good time.

Across the Continent and Back Race

Occasionally the society gets lazy and needs something to renew the life and vigor. At this particular time we thought a little friendly competition would fill the needs. As a result we divided the society in four groups of equal number and selected one of each as captain. Next we placed a large outline map of the United States on the wall and on the map a route to the Pacific coast and back was traced. Then each group entered a car of popular choice in the race with the captain driving. Mileage was granted for BEING ON TIME; ATTENDANCE; NEW MEMBERS AND VISITORS. The result was most gratifying and worthy of the effort as the interest in the work was increased as well as the attendance which reached 160 for the final night. This contest extended over a period of three months.

The Summer Slump

We all know what that is and so we need no explanation, but can say that its challenge has been accepted by the entire society. We are all set for making the months of June, July and August the outstanding portion of the year. We will maintain our attendance by better meetings, a greater number of the enrollment participating and several special features as a "HOLD THAT LINE CONTEST," a "POSTER CONTEST," and "MORNING MEETINGS."

The "Hold that Line Contest" is based on Learning to Pray. Matt. 6:6, 7

Ps. 145:18

Mother Bradley was reading the Bible to her two children, Mary and Joe. Just as she was finishing, she came to this verse, "Therefore I say unto you, What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them."

When she stopped reading, Joe said, "Does that mean that we can have anything that we pray for?"

Mother answered, "It says that ye shall have anything that you pray for if you pray and at the same time have faith that you will receive what you have prayed for."

"Well then," said Joe, "I am going to pray tonight that when I wake up in the morning there will be a bicycle outside the door for me. I don't believe it will be there though. It doesn't seem possible."

"That would not be praying in faith," said Mary. "If you did not believe that the bicycle would be there, you would not have faith."

"That's right Mary," said mother, "and now I have some things that I want to say to you about prayer. I want you to remember always that prayer is talking to God and that God is your Heavenly Father. He loves you just like your own daddy loves you except that it is in a still greater degree. Now that's the first thing that I want you to remember. You are talking to your Heavenly Father when you pray, Now I want to ask you a question, Joe, when you asked your own daddy yesterday if he would get you a bicycle, what did he say?"

"He said that he would get me one when I was large enough to take care of myself but that he would not get me one now," said Joe.

"You see," said mother, "your daddy answered you but he answered 'no.' Now your Heavenly Father loves you even more than your own daddy, do you think that he would want you to have a bicycle before you are old enough to be safe on one?"

"Do you mean mother," asked Joe, "that God might answer my prayer by saying 'No'?"

"Yes, that is just what I mean. Now there is something else that I want to tell you about prayer. Remember that when Jesus said that we could have our prayers answered, he was talking to Christians. Now there are certain things that Christians should be more interested in than they are in other things. I am going to see if you can guess some of them. Would a Christian be more interested in getting a new automobile or in being unselfish and kind to everybody?"

Mary said, "I suppose that they should be more interested in being kind, but it seems to me that it is hard to tell if that is what all Christians are doing."

"That is right, Christians should be more interested in being kind. Now do you think that it would be better for a Christian to pray that he might be very wealthy or for him to pray that he might live to be more and more like Jesus was when he was here on earth?"

Joe answered this time. "It is better to pray that we may be like Jesus, and I see now that it would not be best for me to pray for a bicycle."

"Now there is just one more thing that I want to tell you this time about prayer. When you pray you should mean the things you say so much that you are willing to do your part towards making them come true. It would be useless for you two children to pray to God to make you good children and then go out and do everything that you know that you shouldn't do. You must do your part toward making your prayers come true."

"We will try to remember all those things when we pray tonight and always after that too," said both of the children.

News from Africa

Bossangoa, A. E. F.
 March 17, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

We of the Bossangoa station are not dead, neither are we sleeping, that you have not heard from us. The Lord has marvelously worked and today we rejoice that we have a door of entrance to another of Africa's many Christless tribes. Many, and hard were the waiting days but the Lord's hand was in it all and we believe that somehow or other he will get glory to his name through this wait.

Perhaps you would like for us to be specific in our writing. When in Dr. Garber's English class at Ashland he used to say "Be specific and concrete, don't dwell in glittering generalities." So perhaps you would like these qualities also.

First, I wish to say that the permission was granted in January, about a year after it was applied for, and after a seven-months' wait on the place. The site is a very picturesque one. One can view the River Ouham as it flows away in the distance. This river is filled with big fish as well as hippopotamuses and crocodiles. There are also other animals in abundance. The buffalo and deer think our garden a nice place to graze, and it is not uncommon to see them right on the place. There are lions just across the river and their roaring can sometimes be heard from the concession. The natives have killed several boa constrictors near here.

Enough for the wildness of the place. I think I have said enough that you will realize we are just a bit beyond civilization.

In February we had our first Love Feast. It was very new to these people but they seemed to receive a blessing as they sat in a semicircle and partook of those symbols which mean so much to us. 65 were present. About a hundred have accepted the Gospel and have been baptized, but many live in distant villages and are hindered from coming because of work for the government.

One day a woman from the Banda tribe came to us saying she wanted to accept this "Good affair" which she had been hearing about. She said the evil spirits from out in the bush had been calling her to come and bring them food but she refused and came here to hear the truth. She brought a chicken with her to present as a gift, for she thought that if she received the Gospel she ought to give something. We taught her for about a week and she seemed to understand what she was doing. It was hard at first for her to understand that we didn't want a gift for the Gospel.

Not long ago a soldier who is on duty from Bossangoa to Bozoum, stopped here, saying he had heard about this "affair of God" and that he wanted to accept it. We questioned him and found that all he knew was that "there is a good place and he wanted to go there." He didn't know but what there are many gods and knew nothing about Jesus Christ. We felt it wise that we teach him for a while so that he would really understand what he was doing. Also we wanted to be sure that he gave up his polygamist wives. In the past some have promised to give up these surplus wives but afterwards kept them and have hindered the Gospel by so doing. We hope that the next time he comes he will have given up these wives and will be ready for baptism. Pray for him for it really lowers the prestige of an African to be reduced to one wife.

In February Brother and Sister Hathaway visited us. Brother Hathaway made himself famous on the way by killing three deer and bringing them with him. Needless to say we had venison galore for several days. We enjoyed their stay so much and were strengthened by our fellowship with them.

We are not on the concession owing to the fact that as yet there is no house finished. Just now a dwelling house is being constructed. The foundation is finished and they are well on the way to finishing the woodwork on the roof. Hope to have it finished and be living in it by the time you read this. A well is also in the process of being dug, but we believe we have struck the rock of Gibraltar!

Don't forget that we need your prayers, that the evil one is strong, but that through him we are more than conquerors.

Yours in his service,
HATTIE COPE SHELTON.

JAPAN'S NEW RULER

It is a familiar tradition in Japan that the imperial line now on the throne has never been broken. Emperor Yoshihito's reign covered a period of fourteen years and he is succeeded by his son, the Prince Regent Hirohito. The late emperor will receive the honor of a new name which, according to ancient custom, must be descriptive of the achievements of his reign. It is understood that the posthumous name of Yoshihito will probably be "Taisho" which means "Great Righteousness." The present era has been named "Showa," which means "Enlightened Peace."

Ever since the memorable visit of Commodore Perry with the American fleet in Japanese waters, away back in the "fifties," the relations between the two countries have grown steadily closer. The first message of the new emperor, Hirohito, calls upon the Japanese nation to play its part in the righteous evolution of the world; to choose the good rather than the vain and shadowy; to be original rather than imitative; and to stand at all times for the world's progress and improvement. The good wishes of America are with him as he begins his reign.—Christian Herald.

AFRICA—TRIBUTE TO THE NILE MISSION PRESS

In January last, the number of different publications issued by this great agency for taking Christian truth to Moslems had passed the 600 mark. The following letter from an educated Moslem convert bears testimony to the value of its work:

For a long time Christian missionaries have worked without fruit, and many are not aware of the real cause of their past failure. Experience has taught me the reason: Their work in the past was restricted to preaching and teaching, and consequently their work was done locally among non-Christians, only to be heard and forgotten again. They recently have succeeded by means of the books of the Nile Mission Press. You can hardly meet with a preacher, teacher, or a colporteur or Bible-woman who has not some of the N. M. P. publications in their pocket. Moslems who have not yet adopted Christianity have started to realize the virtues of this religion, and the soundness of its principles.—Selected.

THE ENTHRONED CHRIST

Jesus Christ is the true answer to all fears. There he stands, in serene majesty, calm amid the strife of ages, the same yesterday and today, and forever. We do not need to prove him; somehow he proves himself. I do not know how the proof can be propositionally worded to satisfy the logician; but somehow to face him in spirit is to know him for divine. As simple matter of fact, he is the mightiest power in the world today. The Holy Spirit is still glorifying him. The "Lives of Christ," attempted explanations of him, aye, and the very ignoring of him on occasion—all testify to the impress of his personality; and witness is borne to his power even by those who would dethrone him. The world cannot get rid of him. He is himself the best answer to all fears of the victory of unbelief.—Dr. Culross.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

TIOSA, INDIANA

We have here a fine church building in good repair. Tiosa is a small village and the membership is made of people living in the country.

Brother Clark is the pastor and divides his time between this church and the North Liberty church. Brother Clark is doing good work at both places and is well liked. He was of great aid to me in the college work.

Tiosa is the home of Harley Zumbaugh who is held in high esteem by the Indiana churches and all who know him. He is an able consecrated singer and leader of chorus choirs. He is anxious to give his services to the churches and any church holding revival services will make no mistake in having Brother Zumbaugh, one who loves the Brethren church and is reasonable in his demands for his service.

The gift from this church was $151.00.

Center Chapel

This is a country church, located about six miles from Roann and is being served by Brother Swihart on one-quarter time. The people here do not have much of this world's goods, but are doing a good work in maintaining a Sunday school and having preaching service every month.

Communities like this that are too far from town, need to have a place to worship and to teach the children and youth the Bible.

Their gift to the college was $210.00.

New Highland Church

This church is only three miles to Akron and is located in the country. Some of its leading members have died and there are only six or seven families left. They are to be commended in keeping the church open. Brother Swihart is the pastor and is giving them services once a month. Their gift was $91.00. W. S. BELL.

NEW ENTERPRISE, PA., PASTORATE

In preparing the report of the work during the last six months on the Bedford County circuit in Pennsylvania, composed of New Enterprise, Yellow Creek and Raystown, I am impressed with the fact that there is nothing startling to narrate. However, there are several items that are of interest, because they denote constructive activity.

All three churches held their regular spring Communion services with the usual brief preparatory services. Each service brought the inspiration to the faithful that always attends loyal obedience to our Lord's commands. At the New Enterprise service, eighty-six per cent of the membership was in attendance.

The regular spring business meetings saw plans laid for larger and better work during the ensuing year. New Enterprise is undertaking the adoption of an improved plan of administering the church's finances, which is encouraging.

Praise is due the Woman's Missionary societies at Raystown and Yellow Creek, which have been showing their accustomed aggressiveness. Both carried out the Mothers' and Daughters' program with appropriate public services at the churches. The Sisterhood girls at Raystown assisted with the program, and served the refreshments.

A second three months of Teacher Training work was completed by the dozen members of the class at Yellow Creek. The class gave a very tangible expression of their appreciation of the efforts of their teacher in presenting us with a beautiful and serviceable wool-filled comforter. They had engaged the women of the Missionary Society to make it.

The Church school maintained by each of the congregations is doing commendable work, in our estimation. The attendance, offerings and interest are encouraging. No special evangelistic effort has been put forth in either of the churches during the last six months. But there is splendid material for future leadership being trained in each school. This seed sowing will bring a plentiful harvest in due season. The Christian Endeavor at Raystown is also affording definite training.

Possibly the outstanding achievement of the period has been achieved by the Raystown church in paying off April 15th, the remaining indebtedness on the church building. This represented a real victory in the face of discouraging working conditions in the soft coal mining region. This goal was realized largely through the consecration and hard work of the faithful members of the Woman's Missionary Society. They made a final payment of $150 toward the liquidation of the debt. This made a total of $1,178.68 contributed by this organization of some fifteen active members in a period of five years.

This victory was the occasion of the celebration on June 12th of the fifth anniversary of the dedication of the church. Brother I. D. Bowman, who preached the dedicatory sermon, consented to pay us a visit, and preach on Friday and Saturday evenings, Sunday morning and afternoon, and lead us in the Communion services on Sunday evening. His inspiring and instructive messages were greatly appreciated. A basket dinner served in the basement of the church was thoroughly enjoyed. At the afternoon service, this writer read a paper setting forth "Forty-four Years of Brethren History in Bedford County."

We were very agreeably surprised Sunday morning when the Executive Committee of the Pennsylvania Mission Board, motored the seventy-five miles from Johnstown to be with us on the anniversary occasion. This committee is composed of President Norman Statler, Secretary Albert Trent, and Treasurer A. S. Snook. Brother Arthur Furry, an official member of the Johnstown First Church accompanied the committee.

The Raystown church owes a large debt of gratitude to the Mission Board for its having so loyally "stood by" this nucleus of less than fifty members through the years of financial struggle. The task of getting out of debt would have been so great as to have discouraged the faithful membership, had it not been for the Mission Board's vision and cooperation. We predict that Raystown will, by the grace of God, be a self-supporting work soon, and may become in time a church employing the full-time service of a pastor. The report to the District Statistician shows for the last year a total expenditure of $991 not including pledges amounting to $415 on the Ashland College Endowment Campaign.

We are glad to report in closing, a fine spirit of fellowship and cooperation in each of the churches, and between the several churches of the circuit. Just now we are planning for the union church school picnic which is becoming an enjoyable and beneficial event. Place these churches on your prayer list.

THE CHURCH AT THE NATIONAL CAPITAL

It was the privilege of the writer to journey to Washington, D. C. not long ago, and dedicate the basement of the new church to be erected there. Also, we held a two weeks' meeting in connection with this dedication, the result of which has been known for some time past.

Ever since our visit to that city, we have felt strongly led to say something in behalf of that work, through the columns of The Brethren Evangelist,—to make a plea, if you wish to call it that,—and the feeling has grown so strong that we can no longer resist it.

First of all, permit us to say that in all our work as an evangelist, we have never known a more faithful and loyal band of real Brethren folks than we have in the city which is the heart of our nation. Most of them have old-fashioned "Brethrenism" bred in the bone. They are by no means rich in this world's goods, but they are mostly yet young in years, enthusiastic, hustling, determined, faithful, and with a deep love for our Lord. We do not hesitate to say that should we ever pull up our stakes in Long Beach, there is not a people anywhere in this country to whom we would rather go, with a view to building up a great work for God and his church, than to that band in Washington. In our way of thinking, Washington spells opportunity for the Brethren church.

We are not at all unmindful of the struggles, and sometimes the mistakes, made during past years in our work at Washington. But, the people there have been quick to profit by their mistakes, to bend the knee in confession, and to rise from their faces toward the future. God will bless that band, we are sure.

The church building is splendidly located, almost on Pennsylvania Avenue, the famous avenue running through the heart of the city, past the White House, the Capitol Building, the great Public Library, etc. The fact of the matter is, the church is better located than were it directly on the Avenue. There is but a beautiful triangular open little park between the church and that famous avenue, and the church is within easy walking distance of the great Public Library and the Capitol Buildings.

In a spot like this, the Brethren church should see to it that we have a church house of which we need not be ashamed. It is justifiable pride to which I would appeal. The people of the nation throng through the nation's Capital. They pass in throngs past our church. Other denominations have fine church buildings in that city, and in almost every case, the principal church of the denomination is one which received the help in building from the churches of that denomination all over the country. Some day,

NOT ALL BRAVE DEEDS

Judges 7:21. "They stood every man in his place."

Not all brave deeds are done in war,
Not every hero wears the bay;
There's many a hidden wound and scar
That never sees the light of day.

There's many a simple son of toil
Who rests not till his strength is gone;
There's many a daughter of the soil—
"A woman's work is never done!"

In slum and suburb, church and mart,
In hospital, at bench and bar,
'Mid cloistered groves in realms of art—
There our unhonored heroes are.

Wise men and foolish, sinners, saints,
Gods of this world and worlds afar:
Their courage falters not nor faints.
Not all brave deeds are done in war.

—Edwin Pugh, in the Observer.

if our Lord tarries, some fine young lad from some good old-fashioned Brethren home is going to be elected President of the United States. Stranger things than that have happened. Then what? Will he go to another denomination's building to kneel in prayer? Or, will he have to go down into a basement, underground to worship? And, President or no President, there are constantly members of the Brethren church going to Washington on business, or to take charge of some governmental position there. We, as a denomination, should see to it that they have the right sort of place to which to go to worship. Many of our people who go to Washington are there only temporarily. They do not place their membership there. Their financial help largely goes back to the old home church. And, unless they are well-grounded in the faith, they often go elsewhere to worship while in the city, simply because the Brethren church has not been a church that made an appeal to them. Such may be "weak in the faith," of course; but we are set to save to ourselves those who are "weak in the faith." That boy or girl, "weak in the faith," may be your boy or girl.

The Brethren who are strong in the faith, have done their best to overcome the past existing conditions. It took a large faith, but they arose to the occasion, and undertook the building of a basement on the site of the old frame church, to cost them a bit more than $25,000.00. The old church building had surely seen its day. For some years, the Primary Department of the Sunday school had to hold its sessions several blocks away. The new basement church is of itself, an immense improvement.

We shall not forget that on the day the basement was dedicated, it was with great misgiving that they faced a debt of about $5,500.00. It seemed they themselves had gone to the limit of their own ability. Nevertheless, their spirit and enthusiasm were such that ere that day closed, they had pledged themselves for nearly twice that amount. We never saw liberality on a like occasion that surpassed it. And, they are now nobly struggling to pay their pledges.

The point we want to make is this,—the First Brethren church in the city of Washington, D. C., should not be allowed to worship too long in that basement. A splendid basement they have, but a basement it is. The upper structure should soon begin to rise. Those fine people will do their utmost to complete that which they have so nobly begun; but, we strongly feel that they need some encouragement in the way of some real help. The Home Mission Board should not be unmindful of this need. Just how this matter should be brought to the attention of those in our brotherhood who would be willing to help if they know, we are not prepared to say; but we do believe that it should be done.

In closing, we want to say that our Brother Homer Kent has done a fine piece of work for the first year of his ministry, as pastor of the church there. God has certainly used him, in spite of some severe trials through which he has had to pass,—especially sickness in his own home.

The church in Washington has not requested us to write this article, calling attention to the situation that exists there. We have written it on our own initiative and because we know the absolute need. May the Lord, whose work it is, so direct that all shall be done to his glory and the advancement of his great cause.

LOUIS S. BAUMAN,
Long Beach, California.

JONES MILLS CHURCH

Since there has been nothing written about the work being done at Jones Mills, I am sure the readers of the Evangelist would be much interested to read about it.

The church is a band of loyal workers. The membership of the Sunday school has been doubled since a year ago.

On the last Sunday of June a Children's Day program was given. Many efforts had been made to prepare a worth while program. The weather was very pleasant and on Sunday evening the parents, friends and visitors filled the church. In fact many had to stand during the program and others could not get in. The program was a splendid success.

We are glad that we have something that is of interest to the folks here. The church is located in a promising field and we want the earnest untiring support of the folk about us that we may do those things which are worth while.

the average attendance for the past five months. Charting this attendance produces a rather straight line but the contest is for the purpose of preventing a slump in the line.

The "Poster Contest" is being conducted with the purpose of interesting those persons who have ability to draw, and thus bring our society before the public in a most effective manner. A C. E. pin will be awarded the person who produces the most effective poster.

"Morning Meetings" means that we will conduct our regular prayer meetings each Lord's Day morning, from 8:30 to 9:30, during the months of July and August. It is during this period that the churches of the city engage in UNION meetings each Sunday evening, and as a result the Christian Endeavor organizations of the individual churches suffer. We believe this will maintain the interest and thus we will not need to spend a month next fall in getting a new start.

C. E. Is Interdenominational

This very feature of Christian Endeavor was the means of bringing the Young People of the First Evangelical church to join with us in the Watch Service conducted Easter Morning at 6:00. The service was conducted under the joint leadership of the two societies and the participants were without exception, young people. Mention was not made of denomination and the service proved a most excellent manner of celebrating the Resurrection of our Christ. The impressive meeting was closed with a Friendship Circle and the singing of "Blest Be the Tie that Binds."

Lest We Forget

The work, about which we have told you has been made possible through the untiring efforts, and continued interest, cooperation and prayers of our pastor, Rev. Charles Ashman. We have always found him ready to give his assistance wherever needed and to proclaim our interests to the church in general.

Also, in our Society Counsellor, H. W. Darr; we found a most efficient Endeavorer and advisor. His most interesting methods of teaching in our class in Expert Endeavor, was the means of creating greater interest and better knowledge of the principles and purpose of Christian Endeavor.

We Will Meet in Cleveland

You may look for a group of Endeavorers from Johnstown, in the best camp at Cleveland, July 2-7. We want to help make our Denominational Rally, Tuesday afternoon of Convention week, the greatest event in the history of the youth of our denomination, and to be a part of the greatest gathering of Protestant youth of America.

AN ENDEAVORER,

have always responded well to the appeal, apparently recognizing the importance of the movement, and that response has done much toward bringing our one institution to the point at which we are in striking distance of one of our goals,—entrance into the Association of Colleges, which is essential to a universal recognition of the high quality of the work which is being done here. Only one thing has stood between us and that goal, and that the lack of sufficient endowment. Every dollar which is contributed to this offering, brings us that much nearer to that much to be desired end. One year, during the Bicentenary movement, when representatives of the committee visited many of the congregations in behalf of the cause, the offering amounted to something more than $7,000.00, and the percentage of cooperation was higher than at any other time, before or since. But on the whole, the response has been encouraging. I am confident that this year will be no exception, for with Dr. Bell in the field, and his frequent reports through the columns of the Evangelist, and the frequent reports from the pen of our president, Dr. Jacobs, the brotherhood is perhaps better informed as to the college, than ever before. It not only knows that here, it has its largest financial investment, having in the college a plant which is worth not far from one million of dollars, but from the reports as to its activities, the conclusion cannot be escaped, that the real leaders of the future church, both at home and in its mission outposts, must be trained here. This knowledge must account for the ever widening expressions of interest and cooperation. The offering asked for on the second Sunday of June, is beginning to come in, and I am herewith submitting my first report as to the results. As is the case in almost all of the offerings asked for by the various interests of the church, the first to arrive is one from

MARTIN SHIVELY Bursar,

LAKE ODESSA, MICHIGAN

It has already been several months since we packed our goods in Ashland, Ohio.

Strange things then began to happen. At Ashland our goods were "hailed" to the depot. When they arrived in Michigan, the Brethren took teams to "draw" them from the car. In Ohio we put some "buckets" in with our goods but upon their arrival in Michigan they had turned to "pails."

During our stay at Ashland we preached at several places. For some time we made regular visits to the Brethren at Logan, Ohio. This was quite a long trip to make but it gave ample opportunity for sowing hundreds of tracts and Gospels of John. Also some professed conversions were gleaned along the way, one of them being a ticket agent. As I went to leave a car on my last trip, I asked the conductor if he was living close to the Lord. He said, "I have been for a while." I said, "you say for a while, when did you begin?" And he said, "since you have been riding on my car." While at Logan we held a communion service. This was the first communion held at this place for many years. A large percent of those present had never seen a service of this kind.

In Ashland we gave out several hundreds of Gospels of John in the factories, also thousands of tracts and Christian literature were given out in trains, in the City Hospital, County Home, Orphans' Home, Home for Invalid Women, City Jail. At the large county jail I was permitted to go in with the prisoners and talk with them and pass out literature. Also scripture verse placards were placed in a factory, restaurant, shop, etc.

As usual we find that God has some people everywhere we go. Shortly after our arrival here we were paid a nocturnal visit. Since no one appeared empty, we benefited thereby. Especially were we glad for their efforts to keep the pastor sweet by means of maple syrup and honey.

This is a great bean country. I never saw so many in my life. The children brought a barrel of beans together and sent them to Brother Drushal in Kentucky. At Christmas the children of the congregation sent their offering to Brother Kinzie at Krypton, Kentucky.

Last winter the W. M. S. gave the men of the church a free dinner at the home of Brother John Nickerson. However, this feast was conducted along scriptural lines (2 Thess. 3:10) "If any would not work neither should he eat." The result was several cords of wood for the church.

During the winter months our Sunday evenings were employed in studying the Gospel of John. These studies proved more popular than our preaching. Several of these people had Scofield Bibles, others have ordered theirs since we have been here.

As we were finishing our Christmas sermon one brother became so "sick" that he had to leave the room, however he soon returned, bringing a new Coleman gas lamp with him, as a gift from the church to the pastor.

The S. M. M. are engaged in making bandages for Africa. Our Sunday school is well attended, being superintended by Brother F. Allarding. We observed Thanksgiving day in union with the Church of the Brethren. The writer preached the morning sermon, after which a good dinner was served to all present.

We read of the trouble some of our African missionaries are having with mosquitoes. So the children of the congregation sent them some Citronello oil to keep the pests away.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

This is the sixth year since our General Conference decided to ask for an annual offering for the cause of Education, for the help of the program, as it finds expression in Ashland College. The congregations

About Christmas time several of the members remembered Brother and Sister Yoder, receiving a good letter from them in return.

Our Foreign Mission Offering was the largest this church has ever taken, being over $256.00.

On May 22 we began our revival with the pastor as preacher and wife as song leader. On the last Sunday afternoon nine were baptized, making a total of eleven new members so far this year. On Monday evening we closed with a communion service, about 80% of the members being present. During the revival we held a demonstration one Sunday afternoon of the size of the Ark. The people gathered in a field and many were much surprised to learn that the ark was much larger than they supposed. It was not about the size of a large barn, air tight and black dark like some pictures. It was a wonderful boat as anyone can see by stepping off 450 feet for the length, and 75 feet for the width, and remembering that there were three floors. In fact there was ample room in the lower deck for every one of the animals, enough room on the second deck for the food. The top deck could have accommodated all four families with separate quarters. Each family could have had about 35 rooms, each room being fifteen feet square. Plenty of room in the rafters for a thousand song birds to sing for them. After the ark was measured and the outline marked with lime, we stood on the line and sang "Faith of our Fathers."

Over fifty people responded to an invitation from Brother Price, to tap his ice house. Several freezers of ice cream were frozen. We then gathered in the front yard in the light of gas lanterns and sang "Blessed Assurance." After prayer almost all gave a scripture verse. After that the ice cream melted and disappeared.

We are planning on evangelizing this country by means of tracts and Gospels of John. The people of this congregation are very willing to do this and have already bought about 15,000 tracts and 950 Gospels. This is a work of faith, but their faith is in him who has said, "My word will not return unto me void."

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be upon his people everywhere.

R. I. HUMBERD.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

LIFE'S ARITHMETIC

We have the wisest teacher,

And she has given us this rule
That helps us in our lessons—

You can use it in your school.
Always add a smile or two

When things are going wrong,
Subtract the frowns that try to come

When lessons seem too long,
Then multiply your efforts when

The figures won't come right,
Divide your pleasures, day by day,

With every one in sight.

Now if you always use this rule

You'll have a happy day,

For lessons then are easy,

And the hours fly away.

THE STORY OF THE TEENY WEENY PIG

Once upon a time there was a teeny weeny pig that lived on a farm. One day he was in a hurry for his dinner, and he got caught under a gate. And he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Along came Mr. Rabbit, and he said, "Oh, dear, this is terrible!" So he went and got from my garden a nice cabbage, and he brought it to the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Just then Mrs. Hen came to see what was the matter. "Oh, dear, this is awful!" she said. So she went into my barn and found a nice bag of corn, which she brought to the little pig. But he squealed, and he squealed, and wouldn't stop crying.

Old Mrs. Cow heard the noise and came to find out all about it. She said, "Oh, dear, this is dreadful!" So she went into my field and found some nice clover, which she brought to the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

Mrs. Duck waddled up to see what she could do. She quacked, "Oh, dear, this is horrible!" She hurried to my duck pond, where she found some nice juicy waterlily roots, which she brought for the little pig. But he squealed and he squealed, and wouldn't stop crying.

Hearing the noise, Mr. Robin Redbreast came flying up to see if he could help. "Oh, dear, this is unbelievable!" he said. So he flew away to my cherry tree and found some nice cherries which he brought for the little pig. But he squealed and squealed, and he wouldn't stop crying.

About this time along came Little Boy. He said, "Oh, dear, this is frightful! What is the matter?"

Mr. Rabbit said, "I brought him a cabbage, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Hen said, "I brought him a bag of corn, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Cow said, "I brought him some nice clover, but he won't stop!"

Mrs. Duck said, "I brought him some nice waterlily roots, but he won't stop!"

Mr. Robin Redbreast said, "I brought him some nice cherries, but he won't stop!"

Then Little Boy reached up and unfastened the latch of the gate, so that the gate opened. And out came the little pig.

And then he ate all the cherries with much gladness and said, "Thank you!" to Mr. Robin Redbreast.

And next the pig ate the nice juicy waterlily roots and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Duck.

Next the pig ate the clover and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Cow.

After finishing these, the pig ate the corn and said, "Thank you!" to Mrs. Hen.

At last the pig ate the nice cabbage and said, "Thank you!" to Mr. Rabbit.

Then he made a nice bow to Little Boy, and all the others, and said, "I thank you one and all for your kindness!"

So saying he jumped through a hole in the hedge and he never came back any more. —Sherman Ripley, in The Word and The Way.

THE BRETHREN EVANGELIST

An Indispensable

WHO can estimate the value of the religious newspaper? Who can measure the power of its influence? It goes into Christian homes everywhere and is read in most cases not simply by one individual but by three or four, and sometimes five or six, members of a family. Frequently, also, it is passed on to an outside group of other relatives and friends. The Christian weekly carries with it all the authority of the printed page, and its editorial deliverances take on an official character that commands immediate attention. The paper is read usually in hours of leisure, particularly on Sunday afternoons when the minds of men and women are free from the cares of the week and are open to the call of God to a higher consecration and a larger service.

And what, specifically stated, are the main contributions of the church press to the progress and welfare of the race and the Christianization of the world? The religious journal brings inspiration and a renewal of vital interest in the things of God, through editorials, articles in the family department, reports of missionary undertakings, and contributions that exalt "sweetness and light." It supplies information as to the teachings of Jesus, the history of his church, and the facts about present-day progress and achievement in the cause of righteousness throughout the world. It promotes fellowship by bringing groups of Christians in every section of our own land and in many foreign fields to a better understanding of one another and into a closer contact as children of one common Father. Through such religious reading the forces of Christendom are united for their common task and come to work in a spirit of co-operation toward a common goal.—Dr. L. O. Hartman, in Zion's Herald.

Christian Endeavor Crusaders at Cleveland

The title tells the spirit of the Christian Endeavorers in International Convention at Cleveland, Ohio, July 2 to 7, when 19,000 delegates from every state in the Union and from Canada were assembled. That is the spirit that Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of the International Society, gave to the convention both by his inspiring personality and by his keynote address, which we hope to publish in a succeeding issue of the Evangelist. And back to every village and hamlet, to every city and town, those youthful hosts have returned to carry the slogan and re-echo the rallying call: "Crusade with Christ."

The great convention was characterized by the devotional and practical, as one would expect where the spirit of youth predominates. And continually there were expressions of youth's overflowing vigor and enthusiasm, but never a suggestion of rebellion flowing vigor and enthusiasm, but never a suggestion of rebellion at the guidance and counsel of maturer judgment, as has been characteristic of some conventions of youth of which we have read in the not far distant past. They were the serious minded yet buoyant young people who love the church and respect its leadership, who not merely prize the teachings of Jesus, but are devoted to him as their Lord and Savior, and who not only believe in youth's rights of thinking and expression, but also in their need of instruction and training. And it is because of this wholesome attitude of these young folks, who greatly outnumber any other one class of youth in America today, and possibly all other classes combined, that we have faith in the church of tomorrow. They are its hope and will prove its strength and stay; they are as worthy as youth ever were to sing, "Faith of our fathers." In them it is "living still", more vital, more intelligent, more wisely directed than in any generation of the past. They are what the church has made them, and they will truly represent its thought and life. They are the beneficiaries of the past and they show a worthy appreciation of the heritage that has come down to them. The church will be safe in their hands and the Kingdom of God will go forward under their consecrated leadership and by their unstinted service.

It would be impossible to review the many notable speeches and helpful conferences that filled those memorable six days, though we hope to pass on some of the inspiring suggestions from time to time. But there was one demonstration that can to some extent be described and which interpreted Christian Endeavor to Cleveland as nothing else did or could. It was the great Christian Endeavor parade, which for variety, enthusiasm and spectacular effects surprised a city that is not unused to great demonstrations. Official comment and newspaper writeups and displays would seem to have exaggerated its greatness and importance were it not for the fact that this convention and parade were the biggest demonstration of Protestant Christianity that any American city has experienced. If we could let our readers see it through the eyes of Cleveland, it would be as great a service as we could perform in this regard. The nearest we can come to doing this is to quote what Fred Charles, the star reporter of the "Cleveland Plain Dealer", said in that publication on the morning of July 5th. His writeup is more than a report; it is an interpretation, and one that is remarkably true, and reveals something of the impact that the convention of Christian Endeavorers made on discerning Cleveland. His writeup in part is as follows:

"With their eyes on an invisible leader and a hymn on their lips, delegates of America's Christian young manhood and womanhood marched through Cleveland streets yesterday afternoon in the biggest Christian Endeavor parade in history.

"Cleveland got a great kick out of it. Crowds poured out of tenements, hotels, stores and offices to line the curbs. Cynical old men threw away their cigars to leave both hands free for applauding, cigarets dangled from lips that groped again for the words of once familiar hymns.

"The faith of these youngsters, they say, is a faith that moves mountains. It did better than that yesterday—it moved a whole city. If any came to sneer, they remained to pray or join in the hymns as the young folks passed.

In long lines, twelve abreast, rank upon rank, they came, those marchers by the thousands. It was their celebration of the Fourth of July, as well as their gesture of devotion to that invisible leader, and they made it gay and colorful.

"Under their banners, 'Crusade With Christ' and 'Christ the Only Hope of the World,' they marched, wearing paper hats, red capes, red aprons, blue smocks, red overalls, yellow tams. They carried red and blue balloons that bobbed overhead, and they sang—endlessly, tirelessly,

Like a mighty army moves the church of God;
Brothers, we are treading where the saints have trod;
We are not divided, all one body we,
One in hope and doctrine, one in charity.

"The old marching hymn seems to have been written for such occasions, and it never was more true than yesterday. Denominational lines broke. Methodist and Quaker, Presbyterian and Disciple, Evangelical and Magyar Presbyterians marched side by side.

"Every church in Cleveland, little or big, that serves as a rallying point for Protestant Christianity, had its delegations. The boys' band of the Jewish Center trudged along with their Christian friends, and drew warm applause.

"That's the kind of a town Cleveland is.

"Thousands were from farms and hamlets, and their shuffling feet wore away that ancient antipathy between country and city supposed to arise from different modes of life and different standards. They won the town and the town won them.

"Governor A. V. Donahey and City Manager William R. Hopkins, both in shiny silk hats, spent nearly two hours on the reviewing stand in front of city hall trying to be impartial in their applause. Officially, the city exerted every effort to make the party a real one.

A squad of motorcycle policemen assisted patrolmen in controlling the crowds. Street car and automobile traffic was shunted off Euclid Avenue, East Ninth Street and Lakeside Avenue N. E., along the route of the procession.

"The American Legion, under the marshalship of Brig. Gen. J. R. McQuigg, organized and directed the parade—the first time in the United States that the technical experience of the Legion has been drawn upon for such a purpose, according to legion officers.

"Hours before marching time, the delegates were assembling at their starting stations along Euclid Avenue between E. 21st and E. 30th Streets. Just as early, crowds began to assemble. Some brought settees with them. Others parked pillows on the curbs. Newspapers and pocket handkerchiefs served a similar purpose. One woman sat on her pocketbook.

"Behind the mounted policemen came a brigade of the 145th Infantry, Ohio National Guard, serving as escort for Governor Donahey and City Manager Hopkins. The governor's shiny tile was on and off repeatedly, acknowledging the plaudits of the Endeavorers, among whom he is tremendously popular.

"Rev. Dr. Daniel A. Poling, president of International Christian Endeavor, riding in a closed car with his staff, was next in line.

"The marchers followed. All of them may have been young in spirit but certainly not all of them were young in years. One man carried his small son. There walked gray haired women who joined Christian Endeavor in their girlhood and refuse to give it up.

"On came the "honor states" and the foreign delegates, led by the Canadians, under their Canadian flag, carrying huge maple leaves."

And there was much more that was said, and that we might say about the parade, which celebrated in such a fitting way the "Fourth" and demonstrated the energy and enthusiasm of Christian Endeavor, but this will suffice. Of scarcely less import was the music of that great convention; it interpreted under the leadership of the choir of 1,000 voices the zeal, spiritual grip and vision which the young people received there as nothing else could. The loving spirit of the aged convention song leader, Percy S. Foster, was in no small degree responsible for the great uplift of the music. and a like loving and lovable spirit was manifest on the part of the more youthful and vigorous choir director and soloist, Mr. L. George Dibble, whose solo and choir numbers thrilled the audience.

Christian Endeavor is in good hands so long as Daniel A. Poling and E. P. Gates are in charge, and it is likely that nothing will wrench them from their positions very soon. General Secretary Gates is an organizing genius and is blessed with wonderful patience and good sense in his handling of young people. Dr. Poling is a man of remarkable talent which he has had the indefatigable energy and good fortune to make the most of. It would be difficult to find a man who could operate as a convention chieftain more grandly and at the same time more sincerely than he. His judgment always seems faultless and his speech is truly and unaffectedly eloquent. Both he and Mr. Gates are deeply spiritual and highly conscientious and worthy to be the leaders of the young people of our churches.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Winking at sin is self-deception and the more skilled one is in the art, the greater the shock when disillusionment comes.

A cook is wanted for the Ashland College dormitory. Any one interested should write to Dr. Martin Shively, Bursar, Ashland, Ohio.

Ladies of the W. M. S. who are planning to attend the Winona School of Missions beginning July 25th, should read the notice of the manager of Hillside Cottage, as given in this issue.

Don't fail to send in your Educational Day offering, and it will greatly oblige the Bursar of the College if you will do it soon. And it is so important an interest that no member of the church should neglect to do his part in this great cooperative undertaking.

Brother W. H. Miller called on the editor this week as he was in Ashland visiting his brother, Dean J. Allen Miller and family. Brother "Will" manifested his customary interest in the news of the brotherhood and in the progress of its various interests, especially its home mission undertakings.

The Juniors of the Second Church of Los Angeles did themselves proud by carrying away the banner for attendance at the recent State Convention. They had already taken unto themselves their district and county banners. We congratulate them and their superintendent, Brother Leo Polman.

Brother L. A. Myers, pastor of the church at Morrill, Kansas, favors us with a letter received by him from Mrs. Miami Liven-good, missionary to British West Africa. We believe this missionary epistle will be highly appreciated by Evangelist readers, and we are grateful to Brother Myers for his thoughtfulness.

In a personal communication from Sister Grace P. Srack, who is traveling among the churches in the interest of the work at Lost Creek, we learn that she is being warmly received and that the people appreciate the more adequate and up-to-date information she is bringing them of the conditions, needs and accomplishments of the Brethren in Kentucky.

On June 15th Rev. George Walton was united in marriage to Miss Laura Echelberger, of Ashland, Ohio. Brother Walton is a graduate of Ashland College, has been giving himself to teaching but through the summer is preaching for our church at Roanoke, Virginia. We extend hearty congratulations and best wishes for many years of united happy service.

Brother William Shaffer, recent graduate of Ashland College, who recently took unto himself a wife and a pastorate, writes of his trip to and his initiation into his new work at Hamlin, Kans. Knowing something of Brother Shaffer's energy and adaptability, we predict for him a fruitful service for the Lord, in which service his talented wife will be of great help.

Brother Edwin Boardman, Jr., pastor of the First Brethren Church of Waterloo, Iowa, writes of the work accomplished since he took up the work there almost two years ago. By following the policy of seeking "progress by the conservative road of steady teaching," he has added to the church thirty-three by baptism and four by letter. Besides, he has been very busy in various types of community and religious service. He has accepted a call for a third year as pastor of the Waterloo church.

Brother Homer Anderson writes that since the beginning of the pastoral year four have been received into the Mulvane, Kansas, church by baptism. Also the church has observed all special days and taken offerings, a thing which has been characteristic of the churches where Brother Anderson has served. He is leaving the Bethel church in September and both church and pastor are open for new arrangements.

We have had inquiry concerning the dates of the coming National Conference to be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, and though we have received no official information from the Executive Committee, we believe we can safely announce, from our memory of the action of the last Conference that the dates are August 22 to 28. We are reminded that some of our people are beginning now to make arrangements for their vacation so as not to conflict with their trip to Winona Lake. It is a good thing to keep this event in mind, where at all possible, laymen should arrange their vacation to take place in General Conference week and go to Winona, except where it is possible to take time off for Conference in addition to the regular summer vacation. Also keep in mind that the Congress of the World League Against Alcoholism meets at Winona Lake August 17 to 23, convenient dates for many of our people to attend.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter gives us an interesting report of the good work being done in "The Gateway to the South." The race between the Sunday school of this church and that of the Philadelphia First church has stirred up considerable local interest and on Children's Day both schools scored their banner attendances, 404 for Philadelphia and one less for Hagerstown. A new forward step by the Hagerstown church is the employment of a Church Visitor and they are fortunate in the choice of Miss Mae Minnich to fill that position. Brother Carpenter is called for his seventh year as pastor of this church and it is evident that the people appreciate the great work into which he has led them.

The Ohio Council of Churches is pressing the enrollment of churches as participants in the third annual Prince of Peace Decalation contest. Over 1,100 churches have already signified their intention of conducting such contests among the young people of their group. Only young people of high school age are eligible and the contests are to be held on or before Armistice Day in November. Valuable prizes are offered, consisting of three sums of money and scholarships offered by various Ohio colleges, among which is Ashland College. It is a most effective way of promoting the spirit and understanding of peace and ought to receive the participation of every Ohio Brethren church possible.

While the Three Power Naval Conference is in session in Geneva, it is well for all who believe in the desirability of a warless world to combine and redouble their efforts in behalf of securing the necessary moral backing for the Conference. Linley V. Gordon writes that "America has always stood for only such arms and armaments as would secure her national safety. The idea of arms to be used for aggressive purposes is repugnant to the best thought and life of America. America has cooperated in every great movement to reduce armaments to the lowest possible point, as was evidenced by the calling of the Washington Conference on the Limitation of Armaments." The Honorable Charles Evans Hughes has recently stated that reduction of armaments is the foremost international question of the day, and Lord Robert Cecil of England has said, that "the development of public opinion is necessary before there can be any appreciable curtailment of the armed forces and preparations for war among the various nations."

God's Emphasis on Detail

By Martin Shively, D.D.

(Published in Three Parts. Part III)

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken, than the fat of rams." I Samuel 15:22.

Not only is the Word clear and decisive as to the matter of the necessity of faith, but it is equally positive in the demands it lays upon us as to some things which are to be done by the seeker of salvation. Thus when Jesus began his ministry, the text for his message was, "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." And when he sent out the twelve, also the seventy, on practice preaching tours, this was the text he gave them also. And repentance is not possible except as a result of deliberate investigation and contemplation of Christ and the better things which he presents. Neither investigation nor contemplation can be forced,—they must be the voluntary choice of man. And equal emphasis is placed upon confession of Christ, for it will be remembered that he said, "Him that confesses me before men, will I also confess before my Father and the holy angels. And of him that is ashamed of me and my word, of him will I also be ashamed." There can be no cowardly following of Christ, for he says, "Ye are the light of the world." And light will either shine, or there will be no light. Two things happen as men put their light under a bushel. First, there is no light, because it dies, and second, men are not enlightened, because light has been extinguished. Not only is faith and confession enjoined by the Word, but so is baptism. Personally, I have a very positive conviction as to what he meant by baptisms too, but no time can here be taken for discussion upon so large a question, and I shall content myself with little more than the mere mention of the matter and in a very general way. If Jesus had said not a word about it, so far as discipleship is concerned, still the fact that he demanded it for himself, and said to the protesting preacher, "Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness," there could be no room for doubt as to how he felt about it for himself, and this would at once suggest its necessity to us. But when he said to Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God," he placed a tremendous emphasis upon it. Also when he said, "He that believeth and is baptized, shall be saved," he raised it to a place of great importance. He received it, and he commanded his disciples to administer it, and even a slight acquaintance with the Acts of the Apostles and the epistles, will convince one that by the apostolic church, energized in a wonderful way at Pentecost and afterward, it was believed that Jesus meant what he said about it. Then there is that other ordinance, or rather that triple service, the most striking part of which was, perhaps, that which he did in the midst of that last supper with his disciples, when he rose from supper, and girded himself with a towel, and poureth water into a basin, and began to wash the disciples' feet. They might have remembered that he had said, "I am among you as one that serves," but in their great surprise they must have forgotten it, and the impetuous Peter exclaimed, "Thou shalt never wash my feet." Perhaps their surprise was no less when he said, "If I your Lord and master have washed your feet, you ought also to wash one another's feet, for I have given you an example, that ye should do as I have done to you." I once fell in with a very distinguished looking gentleman, as I traveled on a railway train, in the west. I had a feeling at once that he was a clergyman, and was not long in finding out that my belief was justified. In our conversation, after each had found out who the other was, he seemed puzzled when I said I was a Brethren minister. Of course I was asked to explain who and what we were, and when I had proceeded with my synoptic presentation of the doctrinal position of the church which I had the honor to represent, to the point of our belief and practice as to footwashing as a religious ordinance, he broke out with these words, "I always believed that Jesus meant what he said, when he uttered the words I had just quoted, and I believe it yet, but my people do not do it." I could and did reply, "I believe it too, and we do it." If we should discover at last that Jesus really meant what he said, and I believe with all my heart that he did, then we should have lost nothing by so assuming. And if we should at last discover that the words which thunder forth from the last chapter of the Book, really apply to the whole book, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues which are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life," we could not but tremble if we had not dealt honestly and fairly with it. And I do believe that the words just quoted do so apply. The things which I have been mentioning are by no means the only positive requirements which the Book lays upon followers of Jesus Christ—in fact they are but a very few of the many. Instructions as to our relations with our neighbors, are quite minute in their details, and that last soul-stirring command of the Lord which made believers responsible for the carrying of the life giving message to the very ends of the earth,—a commission which has so stirred the hearts of thousands, that they have willingly forsaken what has seemed all, to many, to bring light into the dark places, even unto the ends of the earth. These have found with every true disciple, that the joys of his Christian faith are his exactly in proportion in which they have tried to share them with others.

I would not have you think that I am trying to present or to represent a legalistic, ritualistic religion,—God forbid that I should be furnishing reason for such a conclusion, even remotely. But I do believe most firmly that man's soul reflects the light of salvation only as he keeps his face toward the Sun of Righteousness, who is the source of that light. All of the characteristics of the twice born man are reflected as his face is so illuminated, but I have no fear of successful contradiction when I say, that a thousand things obtrude to turn our faces away. Christians are not always found in their places in the church service, because of an irresistible impulse which has led them there, for there are perhaps many times when they are there because they have overcome, by sheer force of will, an inclination to remain at their own, or another fireside. Neither do I think that every person present at the mid-week prayer service, nor in fact any other service of like nature, is present because of an overpowering desire to be present, for I am sure that not a few who are to be found at such places of worship are there because they feel the need of the spiritual uplift which they know they must have if they are to be kept true to the tasks to which they have set their hands. And with us all, situations arise in which we cry out in fear or anguish, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me, and happy is that Christian who can then say, "Not my will, but thine O God be done." Hard things may await us at Jerusalem too,—things from which the flesh recoils, but if they lie in the path of duty, he alone is worthy, who like his Master, sets his face resolutely toward that city.

There are things which grow without cultivation or other attention at the hand of man, but they do not take the premiums at the county fair, for few if any of them, have any value. The most beautiful, the most useful things are those which have passed through long stages of cultivation and selection, and in the process, much has been cast aside. So too with that which is best and most beautiful in the highest examples of souls redeemed by the blood of the covenant. Like St. Paul, they have kept their bodies under,—a process which may reveal the presence of a thorn in the flesh,—a thorn which may not be extracted or withdrawn, and the pain incident to its presence, be borne, only because as in him, grace is found sufficient for the ordeal.

Jesus does indeed offer to his true followers, the highest measure of joy which man can experience, but the condition of its bestowal lies in the complete acceptance of his leadership, which, among other things, involves an implicit obedience. The consciousness of his presence will nerve the heart for any task, no matter how full of unpleasantness or danger it may seem to be, but we cannot forget that when he promised this presence, he predicated it upon obedience to an injunction, the breadth of which could not but have staggered the disciples, if they had comprehended it. "Make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you, and Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the age." I do not mean to suggest that we must pay the full price for the crown we hope to wear, nor even any part of the price, for that crown is paid for by the blood shed on Calvary, but I do mean to say that as followers of him, we must give, deliberately, the best we have,—a best made infinitely better by his own addition to it, and then, confidently, claim the promise, and not only claim it, but unquestioningly appropriate it. For the joy we receive from our religion, is only in proportion to the measure of our faith in its promises. But you will remember how unhesitatingly St. James declares, "Faith without works is dead, being alone." The deepest satisfactions are to be found in the acceptance of Jesus as Savior and Lord, and the greatest ecstasy is experienced in the assurance that our names are written in the Lamb's book of life. But, in the words of another, long since departed to be with God, "In the Christian life, it is neither the ecstatic feeling, nor the pensive trance, which is to be sought after, but the sober obedience of servanthship." "Not enjoyment, and not sorrow, is our destined end or way. But to live, so each tomorrow, finds us farther than today.

There seems to me to be far too much loose, incoherent thinking concerning the terms of salvation, for while in other things we are all agreed that there are at least fairly well defined conditions upon which success depends, in this, the most precious of all things which it is possible for men to possess, when almost anything, or even nothing at all, will suffice to achieve it. And this too despite the fact that Jesus said, "Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." And "He that endureth to the end, shall be saved." I believe that he used the word "endure", advisedly, and that the way is circumscribed by appeals to every instinct inherent in the flesh, and that he who walks in it, faces a constant struggle, if he is determined to go on. "Must I be carried to the skies on flowery beds of ease, while other fought to win the prize, and sailed through bloody seas? No, I must fight if I would reign, Increase my courage, Lord, I'll bear the cross, endure the pain, supported by thy Word." It is indeed a conflict, sanguinary and prolonged, for "We fight not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, and against spiritual wickedness in high places." No wonder the author of these words prefaced them by saying, "Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." Perhaps not in degree, but at least in kind, every redeemed soul shares in the experiences of the great throng which was seen by St. John, and concerning whom his guide said, "These are they who have come up through great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." And we may fail temporarily as did Mark, but like him, we may find reinstatement, but that will be conditioned upon such expressions of loyalty, as will leave no room for doubt as to where we stand, and to whom we belong. The thing for which I am pleading, is such a reverential attitude toward the Word, as will make us ready to do as did our ancestors in this church. Take the Book as it reads, doing all things which it enjoins, unless it is at once apparent that it was not so intended. Then claim the promises which it brings. "If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." Ashland, Ohio.

The Religious Press from the Standpoint of a Pastor

By Rev. Frederick Brown Harris

(An address delivered at the meeting of the Editorial Council of the Religious Press, Washington, D. C., June 14)

Recently, on my way to a conference at the headquarters of the Washington Federation of Churches, waiting on the street corner for the traffic to subside, I found myself glancing over the contents of a typical newsstand, where publications of all sizes and hues were crying aloud—some very loudly—for the attention of the passerby. What a medley! The daily newspaper, of course, was there. In many ways the modern newspaper is a miracle, and sometimes there is much more to commend than we give credit for. And yet, in the very nature of things, the newspaper is often the product of prejudice, antagonism, aversion and rumors. There is a disproportionate emphasis upon abnormal things and sensational happenings. To secure reader interest, and with the question of circulation ever before them, most newspaper makers go to unheard-of lengths in throwing the spotlight on stories of crime, featuring sex news, and in a greatly increased use of photographs, many of which have a decidedly low moral appeal, and a whole mass of entertainment material, comic strips, confessional stories, faked advice to the lovelorn, and dozens of other features.

Side by side with the great newspapers which, in spite of conspicuous defects, have much to commend them, there is the gutter journalism, the smut-crammed picture tabloids. And also on that stand, in magazine form, was the poison of unwholesome literature, the whole putrid mass with its sinister influence upon the plastic young life of this generation. As I looked, I seemed to hear again the thunder tones of Carlyle as he exclaimed, "Are there not in this nation men enough to venture forward and do battle for God's truth versus the devil's falsehood?"

Then, two minutes after leaving that newsstand, I was in the quiet office of the Federation of Churches and, having a few moments before the conference, found myself glancing through, one after the other, dozens of religious journals of various denominations. There are no words to describe the difference between the voices that were speaking there and the voices of the newsstand. Here, "whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report." The answer to Carlyle's passionate question as to whether or not there is any voice to be lifted up for God's truth against the devil's falsehood is here, and I found myself saying, "Thank God for the religious press of the nation!"

And, in spite of the fact that in this vociferous age there are so many voices in the air, it is a matter of thankful rejoicing, on the part of those who work and pray for the coming of the Kingdom, that the voice of the religious press is a mighty voice. A government official, recently appointed to an important task, in giving an interview, referred to the early background of his life. He said to a representative of the religious press that he was born in a parsonage in the Middle West where the last word about certain questions could not be said until a certain religious weekly had been received and they had heard from Buckley. Granted, times have changed since the versatile editor of the Christian Advocate was the autocrat of so many breakfast tables—times when there was no Mr. Mencken and writers of his ilk to throw black ink from green bottles at the devils of the wholesome and respectable, to turn ancient vices into modern virtues and to insist that the three chief blots on American life are "the Methodist Church, the Y. M. C. A. and the Anti-Saloon League"—times when there were not tons of syndicated newspaper articles for those who do not think, and pictorials for those who do not read—still the number of those whose opinions are colored and molded by hearing from the editor of some religious publication are legion.

When one thinks of the 8,290,000 Methodists, the 8,397,000 Baptists, the 2,546,000 Lutherans, the 2,561,000 Presbyterians, and the 1,164,000 Episcopalians, and many others, and considers the goodly number of these great totals whose opinions are affected by the impressions that come to them from some religious journal, it is evident that there are a good many bottles of editorial ink per week hurled at devils more real than any Luther saw.

The great army of pastors owes much to the ministry of the church paper. It feeds their minds, encourages their efforts, stretches out their horizons, saves them from provincialism, turns the currents of world affairs and world thought through their own tiny parishes. It sounds bugles of prophecy and progress that in local fields oftentimes change cringing compromise into militant marches. And then, as the pastor gives the church press a chance with his people, it does much for the pastor because of what it does for his people. It refuses sophistries, brings an antidote for the poison that seeps into the homes from unwholesome literature. It does a score of things that make the pastor's work easier and more effective. It increases the acreage of good soil for the sower who goes forth to sow.

From the standpoint, then, of the pastor who believes tremendously in the potency and productiveness of the religious press and who has a fairly consistent record for a score of years in getting his people not only to take, but to read, religious journals, I should like to state briefly some conviction as to the sort of voice in the religious press that means most to the pastor as he stands in close grip with the actual task of putting across the program of the Church.

The voice of the religious press must be a dependable voice. The busy pastor with crowded schedules and with all the rush of the pastorate must be able to bank absolutely on any statement of fact in the religious press. Otherwise the very pebbles which he puts in his sling will turn out to be putty instead of stones. Recently I asked a young lady just what it was that she did in her relation to a certain nationally known magazine published in Washington. She said it was her task simply to check up statements made in various accepted articles, to make sure that there was no error in fact. She declared that oftentimes writers who were experts in their fields made observations about other matters and sometimes used figures approximately, but that absolutely nothing was allowed to find its way into the magazine until every statement of every sort had been checked up and verified. How vital that attitude is in a religious press which offers material tending to refute certain positions taken by powerful interests.

I had a recent illustration of this in my own pulpit. In opposing military training in high schools, I quoted certain figures from the religious press of the country, to be specific, that since the war the number of military instructors among high school students had increased from 200 to 2,000. Immediately, a stinging letter from a member of the General Staff, scoring my so-called pacifist attitude, the accuracy of those figures was questioned. I could only say in reply, "The figures to which I referred are vouched for by one who is so sure of them that he is willing to print them over his signature in church papers from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I have never known him to be in error when it comes to a question of fact, and if he is in this case, I shall, of course, be glad publicly to change the figures which I gave." Inasmuch as all statement of fact, especially with regard to live issues such as militarism, are in the nature of ammunition going into the hands of those who are actually fighting the good fight and standing up and speaking out boldly, in God's name, against Mammon and Mars entrenched in high places, it goes without saying that too much care cannot be given to absolute accuracy in statements of facts and figures.

Surely, also, nothing is more needed in the present situation than that, with so many sneering and cynical voices, there should be a reassuring voice. The daily press and magazines read by millions of our people are filled with cynical jibes, ridiculing cartoons, lying caricatures, distorted and grotesque representations, or rather misrepresentations, of any so-called reforms, or any attempt to lift the standards of thinking and living. In many quarters it is a popular journalistic sport to take the decent and respectable and dress it up in clown's clothes and laugh it out of court. The attempt to do this with the great moral reform represented by the Eighteenth Amendment is, of course, obvious and well known. Dishonesty and unfairness characterize all reference to prohibition in many even respectable journals. Anything that would suggest that, in spite of the failure to enforce it, prohibition has already justified all the rosy prophesies that were made about it, are studiously and deliberately kept from the columns of the public press. At the recent meeting of the United States Chamber of Commerce in this very city, two speakers made statements with regard to the success of prohibition which were startling in their vindication of this great moral experiment. I said to a certain lawyer of Washington, "How is it that the public press does not take a statement like that, uttered not in a partisan way, but by economic experts in the Chamber of Commerce, and broadcast it to the country?" He simply smiled and said, "Well, that isn't good news." That's the good news, however, that the religious press is sending out from sea to shining sea. From the religious papers comes the reassuring voice which, more than anything else, is holding the people steady in the face of the greatest piece of lying propaganda that the world has ever seen.

Or, take the statements that are printed in the public press in the present disturbed state of the East regarding the missionary enterprise. The statements that are made are meant to be blows at the Church's program for world service. Take this caricature of a missionary, for instance, which appeared as an editorial in the leading afternoon papers of one of our great cities:

"The poor missionaries are doomed to offend their potential customers every time they open their mouths, for it is the essence of their art and mystery that they cannot wait for invitations to expound the Gospel according to their light, but they must roam around with a book in hand, banging at every head in sight. The motive, of course, is impeccable. They believe that every Chinaman they may fall to fetch may sweat in hell through all eternity, and they yearn to save him, even against his will. The missionary, in Chinese eyes, is a boulder and a nuisance, and so he is doomed to go on bellowing in what may be called a hostile vacuum, save only when a dire belly-need induces those who dislike him to be polite to him. The advantage of being cured of gall stones, or leprosy, or barber's itch today is more than sufficient compensation for the burden of having to be converted to Christianity in order to eat tomorrow. Man will never be wholly civilized until he ceases to intrude his snout into the shy, mysterious and highly private recesses of his brother's soul."

Is it any wonder that, with such editorial twaddle being devoured by a great many of the same folks who, the following Sunday, will hear their pastor appeal for work in China, the cynical suggestion is made that the editorial coat of arms for today ought to be a fountain pen rampant, over Truth dormant, with a devil-fish squirting ink embossed on the shield? The antidote for much of such poison squirted by a secular press, either careless or vicious, is the cold, fair facts available for those who seek God's truth rather than the devil's falsehood in the religious press.

For instance, Mr. Mencken's pictures of missionaries in China, drawn from his own vain imaginings in Baltimore, is answered by Bishop Grose of Pekin out of the travail of sacrificial service to China. How different is the picture from the caricature. Here it is, "Why missionaries in China? There is one vision that haunts my sight day and night. I see the gaunt and stunted forms of little children robbed of the joys of childhood; the joyless and hopeless faces of women stubbing their weary way on bound feet; men stooped and staggering under loads too heavy for beasts of burden to bear; and in the features of all, marks of sin, disease, suffering, despair.

In the midst of this welter of human misery, I see one like unto the form of the Son of Man. I hear him say, 'I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; I was a stranger, and ye took me in; naked, and ye clothed me; I was sick, and ye visited me; I was in prison, and ye came unto me.' When Lord? 'Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.' If Christ is incarnate here in the need of all these millions, I must answer their cry. This is the irresistible appeal and apologetic of Christian missions. Why missionaries in China? There are not many answers. Only one—Christ, Christ, Christ."

Above all things else, the pastor and the church needs the religious press, not to guard but to guide. . . . For instance, take the very live question of militarism. I believe with all my heart that there is where the acid test for the Church is going to be, and already is. I believe Dr. Jefferson is exactly right when he declares, "We are approaching the end of an era. The Christian Church has reached a crisis in its career. It cannot go on as it has been doing. It has got to become more Christian or cease to claim to be the leader of the world. The time has come when the Christian Church must say to diplomats and statesmen, 'Put up your sword,' It cannot serve Christ and Mars."

The fight is on. The pulpit can utter platitudes about a hundred things, just as a religious paper can comment on a hundred things, and there will be no reaction. But serve notice as, thank God, some pulpits and some papers are, that the Church will never again surrender its moral leadership, will never consent to sacrifice any of the fresh harvest of young life to pull business chestnuts out of foreign fires; will refuse to goosestep just because politicians blow the bugle, and you will soon hear from somebody. Some of us in the capital of the nation, who have lifted up our voices against certain present military tendencies, know how live a subject that is. There are all sorts of hundred per cent American organizations and hysterical, patriotic daughters of this and that who, because the Church is insisting as never before that the Cross must be above the flag, are charging the followers of the Prince of Peace of harboring Bolshevik attitudes and sympathies. Certainly, the voice of the Christian pulpit and the Christian press should be as prophetic as to the possibility of a warless world as was the American Ambassador to Germany only recently, when he declared, "I say that in the era in which mankind now is entering a nation can no longer protect itself by armaments, but the surest and cheapest defense will be justice, good understanding and mutual respect. The new age calls loudly for disarmament, to which it behooves the nations to respond with alacrity."

Washington, D. C.

We talk about the telescope of faith, but I think we want even more the microscope of watchful and grateful love. Apply this to the little bits of our daily lives, in the light of the spirit, and how wonderfully they come out!—Frances Ridley Havergal.

It is a glorious privilege to stir a man's soul. All kinds of possibility lingers in that talent. But no man ever really stirred the soul of another until his own soul was aflame with the passion born of some great thought or experience in his own life. Then, and only then, was he able to inspire in the souls of others the emotions which animated his own soul.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Days of Noah---and Today

By Thoburn C. Lyon

If we accept the Bible as the message of God to men, we must believe that sometime, somehow, Jesus is coming again; it has been said that in the New Testament alone there are over three hundred distinct references to his coming again, and they that are his have found the promise of his return a blessed hope indeed.

We are encouraged to look unto the prophetic word as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, and we find that the word abounds not only with the promise of his coming, but with numerous signs which, when we see them beginning to come to pass, shall plainly tell us that our Redeemer draweth nigh.

Men have been so anxious to demonstrate the near fulfillment of these prophecies that they have sometimes greatly distorted Scripture in their efforts, thus bringing the whole doctrine more or less into disrepute. We feel that this is the more unnecessary because there are so many unmistakable signs and movements that might well be emphasized. One of these, given by our Lord himself, is found in Matthew 24:36ff; we have chosen the 37th verse as our text and subject: "As the days of Noe were, so shall the coming of the Son of man be."

We find the days of Noah briefly summarized in Genesis 6; there are those who see something supernatural in verses 2 and 4, supposing that the giants (or Nephilim), were sons born of the union of fallen angels with the daughters of men, and so seek to find its counterpart in sinister spiritistic activities today. Personally, we believe nothing more is meant here than the intermarriage of the godly Sethites (Gen. 4:26), with the Cainites; such a union is conducive to a lowered plane of spirituality today, as it was then. But any interpretation of these verses must remain largely speculative, while there are other unmistakable characteristics of the days of Noah which we may find duplicated in our own day as in no former days.

In Matthew 24:38 we read that they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away. This last reference contains nothing at all unusual, nothing at all wrong; there is nothing wrong with eating and drinking, and we commonly teach that marriage is instituted of God, and honorable. The implication is simply that men and women were so engrossed with the common, everyday affairs of ordinary living that they forgot and neglected God and things spiritual—in a word, they had become grossly materialistic. This same thought is amply borne out by the record in Genesis, and the fact that the earth was filled with violence is only the natural sequence of such materialism; it was because the earth was filled with violence that God determined upon the destruction of wicked men (Gen. 6:13).

Today, as a result of the materialism that has settled down upon us, we find these same conditions fully duplicated in our own country and the world at large. It remained for the professedly Christian nations of the earth to inaugurate the world's greatest war; today we have brooding in China conditions that may even eclipse that. We have become accustomed to conditions in Russia, and know too well the rivalry and race hatreds of Europe; the world casts wondering eyes upon Mussolini. We think of America as an enlightened, Christian nation; yet one of our foremost jurists recently condemned her as the most lawless nation on earth. We lead the world in robberies and homicides of all sorts, and laws are commonly flouted by men in high positions; several of our leading states have elected as their chief executives men who have sworn to support the Constitution and yet publicly declare they will not lift a finger to enforce that part they do not personally endorse.

Only recently our President sent forth a call to the nations for another arms parley, and before they had time to reply he signed a bill increasing the range of the guns on our battleships; the same newspaper reported that France had unanimously (with the exception of the small socialist group), voted to nationalize women as well as men; they were to be conscripted and trained for war, no exemption being allowed for religious scruples, or for any other reason than physical disability.

Even in our churches, it seems to me, we have become so absorbed in doing things for God that we often forget him for whom we do them. We are engaged so largely in "eating and drinking", fellowship suppers and socials, entertainments, political reforms and what not, that we have little time, or thought, or strength left for God. There is nothing wrong in these things of themselves, but we become so engrossed with them that we neglect the more important spiritual things.

In the days of Noah we have also a very exact picture of the manner of his coming. We cannot but believe that as Noah preached on, by word of mouth and blow of hammer, he was met with ridicule as to what he intended to do with such a boat, inland. "We never have had enough water here to float a thing like that!" So, in the days of his coming scoffers are saying: "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." But one day God called the righteous of the earth—one small family into his ark, and judgment fell upon a wicked and unbelieving world. When the storm of judgment was past, the ark descended again and God gave Noah dominion over a purged earth. So in the days of his coming: we prefer not to be confused over the "coming for his saints," and "coming with his saints;" rather, his righteous people are raised up above the storm of judgment in the ark which is his church; then, when the storm of judgment is past, he descends with them to rule over a purged earth. So shall the coming of the Son of man be.

One last lesson from the days of Noah: Peter says, "The longsuffering of God waited in the days of Noah while the ark was a-preparing." Today, in just the same way, the longsuffering of God awaits again while the ark, his church, is a-preparing. We preach about the signs of his near coming and forget that the word declares it shall not be until the ark is finished. The "gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and THEN shall the end come." By our refusal to obey the Great Commission and GO; by our forgetting even to PRAY—we are causing the longsuffering of God to wait while apparently every other sign has been fulfilled!

Let us cease to morbidly look about us in search of supernatural, spiritistic phenomena that shall parallel our speculations as to the days of Noah; let us rather find the parallel in the too evident return to a gross materialism which has caused us as a nation so largely to put God out of our thinking, has caused us so largely to forget and neglect our divine commission, and has filled the earth with violence. And may we each determine NOW, that the longsuffering of God shall wait no longer because of us. Let us consecrate ourselves anew to that one work which our ascending Savior left us to do: namely, to carry this gospel of the Kingdom as a witness to all nations—the one unfulfilled sign of his coming. “As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be.”

Lydia Maryland.

Really great souls have always been ready and willing to do small things as well as great; they have brought the greatness of their mind, the loftiness of their souls, into the minor details of life. It is only the little mind and the small petty soul that refuses to do the apparently insignificant things of life. Your great man can always do the little things and do them with greatness of soul.—

THE TENT OF MEETING

(A Devotional Study)

MONDAY—Jehovah the Architect. Exod. 30:1-10. “The Tent of Meeting” was the Israelites’ church, the place where they met God, who was the architect of the structure. Every material, measurement and plan was included in his instructions to Moses, as well as the contents of the sanctuary. So does he plan and provide for our lives in every particular.

TUESDAY—Skill and Devotion. Exod. 31:1-11. The utmost skill was required in building the tabernacle, and God provided the mechanics needed. Not only the high and unusual positions in life require skill, but every task should be done as unto God and with a consciousness that the doing of it reveals the character of him who does it. God will furnish us with the power to maintain such exactness of character if we meet his conditions.

WEDNESDAY—The Meeting Place. Exod. 33:7-16. Whether in the center of the camp or beyond its border the tabernacle was still the place of fellowship with God, the symbol of divine presence. Religion is always greater than any place or season; God cannot be localized, and yet God does delight to honor in a special way with his presence those who meet in his sanctuary.

THURSDAY—Jehovah’s Glory. Exod. 40:34-38. The Children of Israel saw in the cloud upon the tabernacle the glory of God’s presence, and while we may not be visited with a visible manifestation of his presence, yet the presence of the Spirit will fill the church with God’s glory, and we shall recognize its presence.

FRIDAY—Giving God the Best. Hag. 1:3-11. The people were chided for living in grandeur while the house of God was in need of repair, and we today are often just as selfish and careless. How much more efficient, complete and beautiful might the house of God be, as well as the building of our own lives, if we did not rob God, but gave him our best!

SATURDAY—Joy in God’s House. Psalm 122:1-9. “I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord.” Joyous indeed are the fellowship of God’s children and the blessed presence of his Spirit, which are to be had in his sanctuary as nowhere else.

SUNDAY—Safety in God’s House. Psalm 5:17. Some one says, “The church is not a magic box to keep us out of danger,” and it is true, yet he who truly and regularly worships God there will find himself strengthened thereby against the assaults of evil and for righteousness. So there is indeed “safety in God’s house.”—G. S. B.

Jenny Lind

Jenny Lind, the woman, was greater, than Jenny Lind, the singer. “I would rather hear Jenny Lind talk than sing—wonderful as it is,” wrote Mrs. Stanley, wife of the Bishop of Norwich, in whose palace the great singer was a guest while in that city. The bishop’s son, subsequently Dean Stanley, who had no “ear for music,” and on whom, therefore, her singing was wholly lost, wrote that she had “the manners of a princess, with the simplicity of a child, and the goodness of an angel.” Her character showed itself, he added, “through a thousand traits of humility, gentleness, thoughtfulness, wisdom, piety.”

She looked upon her natural faculty as a gift of God, and never sang without reflecting that it might be for the last time. “It has been continued to me from year to year for the good of others.”

This feeling was no fine sentiment, but a religious principle. While she was the bishop’s guest she begged Mrs. Stanley to allow her to take three of the maids to a concert where she was to sing.

At a service in the cathedral she was moved to tears by the singing of the boy choristers, and had places reserved for them at her concert the next morning. When she came on the platform she greeted them with a smile of recognition, which the boys never forgot.

She gave to charitable objects thousands of pounds gained by her wonderful voice. While singing in Copenhagen, such was the excitement that court and town begged her to give them one more day of song. A gentleman of musical culture had, with his wife, anxiously looked forward to her visit. When she came he was on a sick bed. Jenny Lind heard of his desire, and found time to go to his house and sing to him and his wife.

When she went to London, Mendelssohn asked her to sing to a friend of his, who had long lain upon a bed of sickness. She went and cheered him with songs, the remembrance of which is still cherished by the family.

Again and again, when the opportunity offered for such an act of kindness, she sang to invalids who could not be present at her concerts. The gift of God within her was a trust to be administered for the good of others.—Sel.

OUR SUPREME NEED

I have just returned from a trip around the world, and I report that the world is upset. There is restlessness and discontent and confusion and strife everywhere. The supreme need in every land is not more money, nor more education, nor more economic system, but religion. Some countries are lamentably poor, and some nations are densely ignorant, and in no country is the economic system ideal; but the supreme need in every part of the world is a higher form of religion. Men everywhere stumble in darkness because they do not know God. Their conception of God is dim, and consequently their belief in man is weak. The supreme need is a fresh baptism of the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth. We shall never get out of our tribulations until we accept the revelation of God’s mind and heart which has been made in the Man of Galilee.—Rev. Charles E. Jefferson, D.D.

“The evil voices in the souls of men,
Voices of rage and cruelty and fear
Have not dismayed me; for I have perceived
The voices of the good, the kind, the true
Are more in number and excel in strength.
There is more love than hate, more hope than fear,
In the mixed murmur of the human heart.”

David and Goliath

Scripture Lesson—1 Samuel 17.

Printed Text—Verses 31-37, 40-42, 48-51.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 27:1-5.

Golden Text—Jehovah is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid. Psalm 27:1.

LESSON LIGHTS

Introduction—Some two years after last lesson. The scene of the battle which the young shepherd "came to see," 1 Sam. 17:28, was a ravine in the frontier hills of Judah. Saul's army is encamped on one side of the ravine, the Philistines on the other. A dry water course marked by a spreading terebinth tree runs between them. A Philistine of giant stature insults the whole Israelite army. He is clothed in the complete armor for which his nation was renowned, which is described piece by piece, as if to enhance its awful strength in contrast with the defenselessness of Israel. No one can take up the challenge. The king sits in his tent in moody despair. Jonathan it seems is absent. At this juncture David appears in the camp, sent by his father with ten loaves and ten slices of milk cheese fresh from the sheepfold, to his three eldest brothers who were there to represent their father, detained by extreme old age.—Dean Stanley.

A SLING AND STONE (1 Samuel 17:50)

I thank thee for each lowly gift,
Made truly great by faithfulness,—
By constant practice, sure and swift,
Something whereby to help and bless;
Treat me like David, Lord, and own,
And use my sling and stone.

In all life's common round prepare
My heart for what it yet must do;
Braving the lion and the bear,
I shall some harder task win through;
Rejoicing, if God ask the loan
Of my poor sling and stone.

I have not proved the armor bright,
And brazen helmet, kings may wear;
I could not go with these to fight,
But with my staff and God, I dare!
That evil, somehow be o'erthrown,
Lord, use my sling and stone!

—Winifred A. Iverson, in the London Christian.

The Genius of David.

"It has been commonly supposed that, in laying aside Saul's armor and preferring his own sling, David was giving up every advantage, and that the chances of his success were materially lessened by the fact that he was thus, comparatively speaking, defenseless. But that is a mistake. The genius of David was made manifest in the choice of his weapons, and so soon as he had determined to use the sling, the issue was not doubtful. The giant was open to attack only on the forehead; but then he was cased in such heavy armor that he could not move with swiftness, and so he could prove a formidable foe only when he was fighting at close quarters. David, on the other hand, was free, and could run with swiftness and agility; While using the sling he could begin the attack from a distance, and out of the range of his adversary's weapons. So far, therefore, as weapons were concerned, the advantage was clearly on David's side, provided only he could preserve his precision of aim and steadiness of hand."—Taylor.

David had gained this skill by seeking to perform perfectly the daily duties of caring for sheep and defending them against wild beasts and robbers.

David's Faith.

The slaying of the lion and the bear was also a proof of faith, for the deeds were done at great personal risk, not as mere acts of daring, but in the performance of duty. The wild animals attacked the flock he was set to defend, and the true "shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." The consciousness of duty strengthened him. He acknowledges that it was God who gave him strength and courage.

The lesser victories prepare us for the greater. We must conquer the lion and the bear before we can have assurance of victory over the giants. Every victory of Christ over the enemies of the truth is an assurance of his final triumph. "David had a rational basis for his trust in God, in his past achievements." "Has God never freed you in an hour of need? Cherish the thought of it as David did. Some day for you there will be a giant to fight, and it will fortify your heart to have remembrances of help from God."—Morrison.

The Two Types.

Goliath was a type of worldliness as opposed to the Christian: (1) In his bulk. The church, struggling against the world, often finds vast forces arrayed against it—millions of money, armies of men, mighty reputations. (2) In his armor. Evils like intemperance, political corruption, social vice, etc., seem cased in adamant. (3) In the awe he inspired. Men shrink from opposing the world and standing with the minority—and God. (4) In his pride. Worldly evils are arrogant and contemptuous toward religious forces. (5) In his real weakness. The world, like Goliath, can be humbled by God at a touch.

David was a fit type of the man of God fighting against worldliness. (1) In his apparent insignificance. Even yet the church seems weak, in money and other resources, compared with the immense wealth and power of opposing evils. (2) In his real power. "One, with God, is a majority." (3) In his confidence. The church has no doubt of its ultimate triumph. (4) In his simple weapons. The church will conquer the world, not by the use of the world's weapons—wealth, oppression, abuse, force—but by gentleness, love, and the spirit of God.

The Victory Is the Lord's

Brute force does not rule in this world. There is a power mightier than earthly weapons. At the same time David used the weapons he had learned in the path of duty to handle with skill. Like Cromwell's soldiers, who "trusted in God and kept their powder dry." No amount of dependence on God will supersede the necessity of using the means God has placed in our power. There is no real faith without works. But all the smooth stones in Palestine would have been of no avail unless God had guided their flight to the one small undefended spot on a man moving in haste.

"One struggle of might, and the giant of Gath,

With a crash like the oak in the hurricane's path,

And a clangor of arms, as of hosts in a fray,

At the feet of the stripling of Ephratah lay."

When the Philistines saw their champion fall, they fled in dismay. The Israelites, aroused and inspired by what God had done through David, their faith kindled anew into flame, arose and shouted and pursued the Philistines, even to their own walled cities.

"Then a shout like the roll of artillery rose,
And the armies of Israel swept on their foes."

PLANNING FOR "LOS ANGELES—1928"

There seems to be a growing interest among Brethren Sunday school workers as well as among those of other denominations and of all parts of the world in the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association to be held in Los Angeles, California, July 11-18, 1928. We suggest that it is not too early to begin to plan for so great an event, and any information desired regarding particulars may be secured of your state or county union heads or by writing to the World Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. The program in general outline was completed in an important meeting held on April 8th. It is said that worldwide Sunday school work will be by areas and for this purpose there are eight divisions.

Most, if not all, the field secretaries of the World's Sunday School Association will be in attendance, together with leading officials from each national Sunday School Association. In addition there will be a large number of delegates representing the several organizations, for these various units comprise the World's Association. It is estimated that at least 7,000 will be in attendance.

Already at least 180 Japanese have paid the registration fee of $5.00 and indicated their intention of being delegates to the convention. Special arrangements are being made for their travel plans. The Korean delegation will join with them in the trip across the Pacific Ocean. Their ship will stop for two or three days at San Francisco and then proceed to Los Angeles. Following the convention the delegates will separate into three travel groups. One will go northward to Seattle with a detour to the Yosemite enroute. By different routes two parties will cross the continent and one will return to the Pacific via Canada. At numerous cities enroute arrangements will be made to entertain these Japanese delegates. They will not travel on Sunday but will attend churches by special appointment. Similar courtesies will be worked out for delegations from other countries.

THE JUNIORS OF THE SECOND CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIF.

Editor of Brethren Evangelist:

The Second Brethren Church is steadily moving forward in the Master's service.

The State Christian Endeavor Convention was held at Santa Ana, June 22-26, and we want others to know what a Junior Christian Endeavor society can do when a church will give them a chance or, better still, a helping hand. Our Junior Christian Endeavor society already held their district and county banners, but decided to be selfish for once and go after the state banner.

Under the leadership of their superintendent, Brother Leo Polman, and with the adults of the church supplying the autos for transportation, they went a distance of 37 miles to the Junior Rally, which was held on Sunday P. M., the closing day of the convention.

There were 38 active members and 29 visitors. They returned the proud possessors of the state banner for the coming year. Did they have a good time? Ask the Juniors.

Their goal is not in material things for in their numbers are found many faithful little Christians.

"Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven."

STARTERS AND FINISHERS

"I've been looking over your society this past week," announced the inspector.

"That so?" said the Man-Proud-of-His-Society. "Well, what do you think of it?"

"Oh, it's running along well enough in its way, but it's not as I expected to find it. What's wrong with it?"

"Wrong?" echoed the M. P. O. H. S. "Why, I didn't know there was anything wrong with it. I thought we had a pretty good society."

"So you had," agreed the inspector; "the past tense is correct."

"Say, what are you driving at anyway? What is the matter?"

"That's just what I want to find out. You remember that I was here last year at about this time?"

"Yes, I do."

"Well, if I remember rightly, at that time you had an expert class under way, didn't you? I believe you were going to send more experts to the convention than any other society in the county, or in the town, at least."

"Yes, that's so. We did start one."

"I thought so. Well, how did it turn out? How many experts did you have?"

"Why—er none. We started with fifteen members, and kept along very well for awhile; then the leader was called away, and we sort of gave the thing up."

"Oh, I see. And then it seems to me that there was some talk of a campaign or contest to increase the attendance at the prayer meetings, wasn't there?"

"Yes, we did plan something of the sort."

"How did it work?"

"It started out pretty well at first; but after awhile we got on track of a scheme that seemed to be better, and so we dropped it."

"I see. And how about the new scheme? You tried that, of course?"

"Yes, we tried it; but it didn't work as smoothly as we thought it was going to, and so we gave it up after awhile."

"Well, how did the entertainment succeed? I mean that big one, the one that was going to beat anything ever held in the town. The chairman of the social committee, if I remember rightly, was all carried away with the idea. You were to have hired talent, an imported orchestra, and the treasury was to burst with the proceeds."

The Man-Proud-of-His-Society flushed.

"We completed our plans all right," he declared, "and held a few rehearsals; but, when we got into it, and saw how much time and work the thing was going to require, we decided we'd better give it up and have just an ordinary social."

"So that's accounted for. But the last time I was here I'm quite sure that I was invited to a five-minute prayer service before the regular meeting. Did you forget to give me an invitation this time?"

"No, we haven't held the meeting for several weeks. The prayer meeting committee started it, but after awhile found

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Peter, a Fisherman Who Followed Jesus. Matt. 4:18-20

Helen and Katie were just returning from Junior Christian Endeavor and as soon as they got inside of the house, Katie said,

"Mother, the Junior Superintendent asked us to be sure to read the daily Bible lessons this week. Will you read them with us each day when we have our Bible reading?"

"Of course I will, children. We will like that I am sure."

On Monday morning they got out their Evangelist and looked up the first reference.

Mother said, "Now, we must remember all through the week that our topic is 'Peter, a Fisherman Who Followed Jesus. You may read the first day's lesson, Helen.'"

Helen read Matt. 11:22-24. Then she said, "Mother, what does that mean?"

Mother answered, "Jesus is inviting people to follow him. Peter is not the only person who has been asked to follow Jesus. In these verses Jesus says to everyone, 'If you have too much work to do alone follow me and I will help you to carry your load.'"

On Tuesday Katie read the lesson for Tuesday which was found in Mark 5:1-17. When she had finished reading the Bible verses Katie said, "I do not see what that has to do about our lesson about Peter."

Mother answered, "Peter was probably with Jesus when these things happened.

However, the thing that you are to learn from this is that these people whom Jesus would have liked to have follow him, rejected him and sent him out of the country. Jesus had performed a great miracle and the people who learned about it ought to have been happy and they ought to have wanted to follow Jesus, but instead they were wicked and sent him away. Some people fail to answer when Jesus says, 'Follow me.'"

On Wednesday morn, Helen read Luke 9:57-62. When she had read all of it Katie said, "I heard the preacher explain that once. He said that that means that people ought not to make excuses when Jesus calls. They should always be ready to follow Jesus."

Katie read 2 Tim. 4:10 for their lesson on Thursday morn. This time mother explained the meaning of the verse. She said, "When the great Apostle Paul was on his missionary journeys, he sometimes took other Christians with him to help him. One time he took a Christian named Demas, but Demas was not a very good Christian. After a short journey with Paul, he began to want to do other things more than to preach about Jesus. So he left Paul and no longer listened to Jesus' words, 'Follow me.'"

On Friday morn, Helen read John 10:27. Then she said, "That means that Jesus is the great Shepherd and if we are his sheep we will always follow him. I like that verse."

Saturday's lesson was read by Katie. It was John 12:26. Mother said to her children as soon as the verse had been read, "There you have the reward that is promised to all who follow Jesus. I do hope that my dear daughters will follow Jesus and receive this reward."

On Sunday, Helen read Matt. 4:18-20. "Now," she said, "here is our lesson about Peter. All week we have been having references about other followers. Some of them followed faithfully and some failed to follow as they should. This time we have a follower who was faithful."

Mother said, "Was Peter always faithful?"

"No," said Katie, "he failed once, but Jesus forgave him and always after that Peter followed him."

When the lesson was over one of the girls said to her mother, "Now we will know our lesson at Junior Christian Endeavor better than we ever have before. I am so glad that we read the lessons each day. I hope we can keep it up from now on. Wouldn't it be nice if all the little boys and girls would read their lessons each day."

A Letter from British West Africa

INTRODUCTORY NOTE

Dear Brother Editor:

I am sending you a letter for publication, which was sent to me by Mrs. Miami Livengood to be read to the church here at Morrill. I read the letter to our people. The pastor of the Church of the Brethren ask me for it to read to their Foreign Missionary society. Also the Church of the Brethren at Sabetha ask if they could read it to their missionary society. Miami has relatives in both these churches. The letter has been going ever since we used it so I am a little delayed in sending it to you. If you wish you may publish it for those who are especially interested in our work in Africa..

L. A. MYERS.

EDITOR'S NOTE

It has been some time since Brother Myers forwarded this letter to us. We have been waiting until now for an opportunity to publish it. We are glad for this privilege as we believe our readers will greatly appreciate this letter.

Miango via Jos. N. Nigeria,
 British West Africa,
 January 10, 1927.

Dear Friends of the Home Church:

I thought you might be interested in hearing somewhat of my trip to Africa and the things I have experienced the short while I have been here, but first of all I want to voice my praise to God for supplying my every need and bringing me in safety to this part of his vineyard where I believe he would have me labor.

I had a very enjoyable and profitable stay at the American headquarters of this mission in Brooklyn. There a group of candidates received both religious and medical missionary instruction. The last two weeks in Brooklyn were full of shopping and packing and finishing details that no one can understand except they have prepared to live for several years in a country over ten thousand miles away.

I had my choice of sailing alone to Liverpool the first of August or waiting until some indefinite time in the fall to join a party but in that I had already waited two years to come to Africa, I very readily accepted the immediate opportunity and again found that God never faileth and proved himself all I needed in the way of a traveling companion.

I was delighted to have present at the farewell dinner given me at the Mission Home on the eve of my sailing, Mrs. Lavina Lanning of Sabetha, and son Harold and his wife. They also accompanied me to the boat. On board ship I had pleasant fellowship with an English missionary family who was returning from China for a furlough. In all they had spent nineteen years of service in China. The voyage was ideal except for a bit of fog that reduced our speed somewhat.

I was met at the Liverpool dock by the secretary of the mission headquarters of Liverpool. Here at the Mission Home I spent nine days awaiting the sailing of the African boat and meanwhile shopping for tropical needs such as sun helmets, mosquito boots and the like, and also doing some sightseeing in Liverpool. I feel that I could write a small volume on the strangeness and quaintness of this old English city, but that would not be getting on to Africa.

The party with whom I sailed from Liverpool to Africa was totally Scotch and numbred six, and at times I felt in need of an interpreter. However, at the end of the journey I could understand Scotch quite well. There was one American besides myself on the boat.

I cannot make such a good report of the African voyage as the boat is not to be compared with those of the North Atlantic lines and unfortunately this was one which had in former days been a freighter and had been converted into a passenger boat. It was very unsteady and although we had no stormy weather, the sea was a bit rough through the English Channel and the Bay of Biscay and again when we came near to the different islands. I made a reputation for myself, seemingly, all over the boat; and officers as well as passengers told me that I was a good sailor when we were in the "ports of call". I learn that the stewards of that boat are still making inquiry concerning me of the missionaries of this mission who are returning on that boat.

I had a very interesting time on the boat when we stopped at Las Palmas, Canary Islands. Some went ashore, but our party did not as it was quite late at night that we arrived. Here a supply of provisions was taken on board. Mostly fresh vegetables. Of course, these were brought out in small boats and then too a host of Portuguese or Spanish vendors (maybe both) came aboard with their wares which consisted chiefly of much handwork done on both linen and cotton materials. Many of these were bed spreads, luncheon sets and the like. The prettiest of all were the gay silk shawls and scarfs. These traders know just enough English to barter and when they first come aboard their goods are quite expensive but just before they are ordered off the boat one can purchase their goods for about one-third of what they ask in the beginning but one has to stay up until two or three o'clock in order to receive the reduction.

The main attraction for me at the ports along the ivory and gold coasts was the native divers who would dive for coin or bits of candy and sing in very poor English, anything from, "Yes, We Have No Bananas," to "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder," and would beg collars and ties from the passengers, which they would don and that would practically be the extent of their apparel.

One saw three classes of Africans in regard to dress, namely, the undressed, those partially dressed in any sort of a piece of cloth or garment and then those in full European dress. The latter are those who have seized the educational advantages offered in the coast towns by both government and parochial schools and are now clerks in government and other offices.

The coastal towns have surprisingly nice government buildings and residential sections. Lagos, our port of disembarkation, is one of the largest and nicest, and the end of the ship line on which we came but now what is known as "The Plague" is taking its toll of life by the score.

Here at Lagos one is swung overboard ship into a tender by means of a large chair manipulated up and down by a pulley arrangement. The tender carries one for several miles to Iddo wharf where you see your goods through customs and often have much trouble, but fortunately I escaped difficulty, due to my very meager outfit.

The next stage of the journey was the boarding of a train that runs about seven hundred miles inland. It is built after the English style of train, naturally, as this is British territory, having carriages or compartments, and also a dining car which is as flattening to the purse as those at home; but surprisingly good food is served. The mileage or actual railroad fare is double that at home with about one-fourth the speed.

My first two months in Africa I was around three hundred and fifty miles inland or up-country and my powers of description are too weak and my vocabulary too limited to picture to you the scenery up to that station. Although it was not by any means a jungle, yet the vegetation was quite luxuriant and consisted of many palms and like tropical growth.

I arrived in the country at the most trying time for one's health, namely at the change from the wet to the dry season and the heat in that part of the country is terrific. In order to keep one's clothing dry, which must be done to ward off illness, it is necessary to change several times a day and is such a waste of time. The mosquitoes were abundant and had a feast on me and consequently I had malaria the tenth day I was at my station, but it was very slight. Just one degree of fever, but am still carrying that much. It is termed "low fever" and though it does not make one ill it keeps one from being their best. It has kept me from going on with my language study, correspondence and many other things I am ambitious for. I am told by those who are supposed to know, that there is no known place any more unhealthy than West Africa, and not many years ago it was known as "The White Man's Grave." From 8:00 A. M. to 4:00 P. M. five minutes of sun upon one's head without the sun helmet, more than likely would spell death. In the dry season, sleeping sickness, spinal meningitis and small pox are epidemic. Two years ago two ladies of the mission died of spinal meningitis.

I am now several hundred miles toward the interior where the elevation is over four thousand feet and the weather quite fine. We are surrounded by high hills and extinct volcanoes. Some of these were in eruption about seventy years ago. We know this because there are some very old native men who remember when these were active. Now, in the dry season the wind blows a fine dust from the Sahara Desert which is not noticeable in one's immediate presence, but to look off three miles in the distance it is seen in the form of a mist or haze. The warmest it gets at this time of the year is seventy-four degrees and the mornings and evenings are very chilly. Although the above diseases are common to this part, the general climate is more healthful than the lower land.

For nearly the whole of the coming year I am to be stationed at what is known as the mission's Sanitarium, or Rest Home where tired or sick missionaries come from the hot and trying sections to rest and recuperate. Not only members of this mission but other missions come for the advantage of it. About twenty-five people can be accommodated and the house is made as homelike as possible. The compound is beautiful with both tropical and temperate flowers and shrubs and in the wet season a nice vegetable garden is maintained producing home vegetables such as Irish and sweet potatoes, tomatoes, carrots, cabbage, beans and the like. I am privileged to be at such a delightful place but it costs more to live here than at a regular "bush" station.

My work for the coming months is to learn the Hausa language and carry certain household responsibilities. Little or no regular mission work is carried on here, except services with the boys who help with the work and we are hoping to soon give them some school advantages. A mile away is a market place where a meeting is held every Sunday afternoon. Learning the language is not a matter of acquiring a vocabulary and constructing sentences in the usual way a language is learned, but is an intoned language. One syllable of a word being spoken in a low tone while the other in a high tone or sometimes several degrees of tone are used in one word. Many words are spelled the same but with different intonation. If one does not properly intone they are not understood. One engages a native from whom to get correct sounds and pronunciation.

Because this letter is growing very lengthy and because of not as yet learning perfectly the conditions in regard to native peoples, will leave that for another letter, but in passing will say that the work in this part of Africa is with both Moslems and Pagans. Among the first is seen the folly of a people living under a delusion or a false religion, while the latter are in the same way you have oftentimes heard before, namely, demon, sun worship and the like.

After all it is not the fact that I am many thousand miles from my home and loved ones, that my surroundings and living circumstances are so different, that the climate is trying but that the powers of darkness would settle on one's soul, that makes it trying. Flesh, self and satan are still my greatest enemies, as they were in the homeland. Pray that "when the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord will raise up a standard against him," that our Lord may be glorified in and through me, whether by life or death; that I might be a most fruitful branch in this part of his vineyard.

I heartily thank you all for your kindness shown toward me and that you may ever "follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience," trusting in "the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy."

Your Sister in the Beloved,

MIAMI LIVENGOOD.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

"The Gateway to the South"

"Children's Day" was "Everybody's Day" here as it marked a record attendance in our Sunday school. After our recent attendance contest with the Sunday school of the Philadelphia First church, in which our school won, both schools were looking forward to the time when an attendance of 400 would be reached and each wondered which would get there first. It came to pass that both schools set 400 as the goal for Children's Day, and the surprising result was as follows: Hagerstown 403, Philadelphia 404. This meant a new record for each school. It is remarkable indeed that the two schools should run so closely.

Hagerstown's average attendance for the past ten Sundays is 315, the highest average for ten consecutive Sundays in the history of the school. Other schools will find it profitable to run a race of some sort. It puts pep into the whole school. It generates more steam and enables the Sunday school engine to pull steeper grades and reach new heights of success.

The program given by the children under the direction of Mrs. Beachley and Mrs. Laughlin was greatly enjoyed. And the day was the greater success because of the presence of Rev. E. M. Riddle of Bryan, Ohio, who was passing this way on his vacation trip. He brought a very appropriate message on the subject, "Youth."

Having a "Church Visitor" to assist in the parish work is a new adventure for this church, but one that promises worthwhile results. The church is fortunate in securing a very efficient worker and one well known to our whole brotherhood, Miss Mae Minnich of Greencastle, Pennsylvania. She is an Ashland graduate, an able teacher, and was for several years a faithful missionary in our Kentucky mountain field. Miss Minnich came to us the middle of June to remain during the summer months. She has entered upon her duties like a seasoned worker in this new field of labor and is well liked by the congregation.

This church and several of the auxiliary organizations profited recently by the visits and the messages of three of our fieldworkers, Miss Edith Garber, Miss Gertrude Leedy and Mrs. Grace Srack.

The Maryland-Virginia District Conference met at Linwood and is now history, but the inspiration gained and the plans made ought to make this year the best yet in this district. The finest spirit of harmony prevailed. The district mission report was the best ever. The hospitality of the Linwood folks proved equal to the best. The pastor of the church, Rev. Brumbaugh, was tireless in his efforts to help make the conference a great success. The Moderator, Rev. E. L. Miller, filled his position with dignity, good cheer and efficiency in a way that met the approval of all present. We had an efficient secretary in the person of Clark Copp. One of the most active members of the conference was our good brother, Dr. E. B. Shaver, often called the "Patriarch of this District." He delivered an able message on the opening day. The helpers from outside the district, the Misses Garber and Leedy, Mrs. Srack and Dr. W. S. Bell, contributed much to the success of the conference. Our neighboring church, St. James, will entertain the conference of 1928.

Recently we accepted the generous call of this church to another year of service for the seventh time. The loyalty and the many expressions of appreciation and the many kindnesses shown to the pastor and his wife by this congregation are a source of constant encouragement, the value of which is best understood by all pastors and their wives who labor with the churches to the end that Christ may be exalted before men and the fulness of his Kingdom on earth be hastened. May the Lord bless abundantly his church here and everywhere and may all of his professed followers so labor together as to be ready at any time for our Lord's return.

G. C. CARPENTER.

BETHEL CHURCH, MULVANE, KANSAS

We will close our work at Mulvane September the first and would like to hear from some pastorless church who could use us in the work of the Lord.

The church has moved forward in a small way. For the pastoral years of September the first to date, four have been baptized and received into the church. We anointed one, driving to Blackwell, Oklahoma, a distance of sixty miles. The church has contributed to every offering for the work at large of our church. Home Missions, $12.50; White Gifts, $9.00; Publication, $4.50; Brethren Home, $4.15; Superannuated Misisters, $4.15; Foreign Missions $16.00; Educational, $17.00; also paid $350.00 on parsonage debt.

The parsonage is a new building with eight rooms, a good stable and some room for chickens, and about six acres of ground, making a place for the pastor to stay. It is four miles from the church and one and a half miles from Mulvane with school one and three-fourth miles from the parsonage. A good high school is in Mulvane.

The ground is good rich soil and with a reasonable amount of rain will produce. Rightly handled will provide more feed than it takes to keep one cow. We have an acre and a half of the best alfalfa in the country. Last year we raised potatoes enough to use until we had new ones.

We will vacate the premises in time for the oncoming pastor, so should there be school children they can get started with the first day of school.

There are some fine talented young people in the Bethel Church, who, if rightly used, will develop into usefulness.

We hope that God will direct the right man to their rescue. The pastoral committee is Dosia Wygal, Mulvane, Route 2; H. A. Howard, Mulvane; Miss Agnes Whitted, Derby, Kansas.

H. W. ANDERSON.

ON THE FIELD AT HAMLIN, KANSAS

After an excellent motor trip of about 1,500 miles we arrived safely in the city of Hamlin, Kansas, the morning of June 30, ready to take up the Lord's work in the Hamlin Brethren Church.

Ever since our arrival we have been royally entertained by the fine people of the church and community. Sunday morning the neighboring Baptist brethren adjourned to attend our services. The church was about taxed to its capacity and we had a splendid time worshipping and praising the Lord.

On the following Thursday evening an informal reception was given in our honor. Rev. Clemmings, the pastor of the Baptist congregation, a fine consecrated minister of the Gospel, having but recently moved with his family into the community, was also present. After some fine instrumental and vocal selections by members and friends of the church, Brother N. P. Eglin, the oldest living resident of the Hamlin community gave in a fine manner a history of the churches of this neighborhood. Rev. Clemmings was called on for a speech as well as the writer. Professor Hitt, principal of the Hamlin High School, gave a splendid talk of welcome and pointed out the high standing of a minister of the Gospel in a community.

The Hamlin Brethren Church, not having had a pastor for nigh unto two years, leaves a great work for their new pastor, which he hopes, by the aid of the Lord Jesus Christ to accomplish in his name. We have now reorganized a young people's society which was formerly held in union with the Baptist young people. Prayer meetings are being held every Thursday evening with choir practice following.

We are confident in the Lord for success, nevertheless we ask for your prayers in his name.
W. H. SCHAFFER.

WATERLOO NOTES

Dear Brethren:

We have just completed twenty-two months' pastorate on this field. Prior to coming to Waterloo all our service had been rendered in small pastorates in small towns or villages so the problems which faced us in this field were of a different order than those we had been called upon to solve before. The problems are still unsolved.

We found a well organized and sound congregation here, together with a Sunday school plant and organization that were of the best. On coming here we decided to seek progress by the conservative road of steady teaching, believing that while visible results might be slower in coming yet they should be more lasting. During the 22 months thirty-three have been added to the church by baptism and four by letter. During the same period seven have been lost by death and four by withdrawal of their church letter. We believe that the church is in a reasonably sound condition though there is nothing to go into ecstasies over. The fire of spiritual fervor does not make itself felt as we would wish and there is a seeming sense of staleness all too prevalent in the religious life of too many of the congregation, but there are also found here a number of people who are the very salt of the earth. As we compare the attendance figures for church worship and prayer meetings in this congregation with other congregations in Waterloo, we feel that we have much to be encouraged about.

A pastor's service in a congregation and city like Waterloo is only limited by his strength or willingness to serve. As with former pastors here the present pastor has been called to serve the community through the medium of addresses, sermons, Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camps, Sunday School Athletic Leagues, and financial and membership drives for Y. M., Y. W., and Community Chest. Every effort in such community service has served to put the congregation before the city and has helped the church to bear some adequate share of its part in the larger affairs of the community.

We have found most joy in two lines of endeavor through the past months (1) the presenting of America's opportunity in Latin-America; (2) working with the young people in Hi-Y Bible classes in the West Waterloo High School, Y. M. C. A. and Sunday school athletics.

In the first service it has been our fine opportunity to speak twenty-five times since January 13, 1927 on some phase of the Latin-American situation—a subject on which we have made somewhat of a study within the last five years. This has been gratis service but we believe that it will pay big dividends in the shape of a more sympathetic attitude toward the "lands of tomorrow". These addresses have been given before the various dinner clubs, men's brotherhoods, missionary societies, young people's classes and church groups in and around Waterloo.

With regard to the second service it has been our privilege to be Bible leader in two Y camps and to coach or play on our own church teams in the local Sunday School League. Another fine avenue of contact with the young men of the town was found in the opportunity to teach a Bible class of young men twice a month in the local High School.

The usual round of pastoral calls, weddings, funerals and opportunities for service in the local church, added to a teaching ministry in which we have honestly tried to present the big doctrines of the Bible in their entirety—have at least given us the consciousness of having achieved a bit of the program we set before ourselves less than two years ago.

The congregation has given us a unanimous call to remain a third year and, though we sorely wanted to go back to school and complete some contemplated work, we have heeded the apparent leading of God, as various avenues leading toward school have been closed to us for the time being and have decided to stay here for another period of service.

The Waterloo church sends greetings to all the Brethren and we pray that the rich blessing of God will be the portion of both ministry and laity as we strive conscientiously to help make the Lord's prayer a reality—"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

EDWIN BOARDMAN, Pastor.
1310 South Street.

FORTIETH ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF THE BRETHREN CHURCH, MARYLAND-VIRGINIA DISTRICT

The 40th annual conference of the Brethren church of the Maryland-Virginia District convened at Linwood, Maryland, June 14th, 1927, at 2 o'clock P. M.

The conference was opened by singing, "Take Time to be Holy."

The following committees were appointed: Committee on credentials: Dr. G. C. Carpenter, Mr. John Locke, Rev. Amzi Weimer.

Devotions were conducted by Rev. J. I. Hall. He read with comment, the 5th chapter of Thessalonians and followed with prayer. He asked God's help in giving us a peaceful conference and a mutually helpful time.

All joined in singing, "Stand up for Jesus."

At this time the address of welcome was given by the pastor of the Linwood church, Rev. H. L. Brumbaugh. He said, in brief,

We want to take the hand of each one and welcome them most heartily. Welcome means pleasing to our wills and we of the Linwood church want to express this meaning to all with sincerity. We welcome you as Christians and as brothers. Responses were given by eleven delegates. The credential committee reports 29 lay delegates present and 12 ministerial delegates. It was moved and carried that Rev. L. H. Brumbaugh be extended the full courtesy and fellowship of the conference. Next in order was the election of officers. Rev. E. L. Miller was elected on the first ballot as moderator of the conference. Dr. Tombaugh moved that the three who had received the highest number of votes for moderator, without election, should be considered as candidates for vice-moderator and the one receiving the largest number of votes should be declared elected. Motion carried. Rev. Homer Kent was elected vice-moderator. On motion by Dr. Carpenter to suspend rules, Brother S. E. Duncan was elected treasurer of the conference. Dr. Tombaugh moved that the secretary cast a unanimous ballot for John Locke for secretary. There was no second to the motion. After much discussion, Dr. Tombaugh moved that Clark C. Copp be elected by acclamation. Motion carried and Mr. Copp was thus elected as secretary. Moved and carried that the secretary should act also as statistician. The following committees were appointed by the chair:

Committee on resolutions, Rev. Emerson Rohart, Mrs. T. G. Locke, Mrs. Fannie Gol-laday.

Committee on time and place, Rev. J. I. Hall, Mrs. Schendel, Mrs. Simpson.

All engaged in singing, "Beautiful Words of Life." At this time we were favored by a remarkable address from Rev. E. B. Shaver, the patriarch of Brethrenism. He made a great plea for the acceptance of the teachings of Jesus as they are without comment and without fashioning them to suit our tastes. Modernism is eating at the heart of our faith. It is our duty to preach doctrine so that our people may know what the church stands for. Men in the past have fought to establish the principles of the Brethren church and we must keep the faith and preach it fearlessly. Following the address the pastor made announcements. The afternoon session closed by singing, "Faith of Our Fathers", which accentuated the stirring plea of Rev. Shaver to adhere to the clear, true principles of the Bible. Benediction by Brother Shaver.

Tuesday Evening, 7:30 P. M.

The evening session was opened by singing two hymns, "We're Marching to Zion" and "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart." A very impressive and inspirational devotion was conducted by Rev. Rohart. He read the 3rd chapter of James and followed with prayer. He continued the devotion by singing a very timely selection "Jonah and the Whale." At this time a very vital and touching message was brought to our attention by Sister Slack from the mission field of Kentucky. She told how the young people of Kentucky seemed to feel that they did not need Jesus or that they would find him when their time came. She told some dramatic and appealing stories about the young girls in the mountains of Kentucky. She asked us to pray for the work in Kentucky and give as God directs us. Delegates were assigned to the various homes and announcements were made at this time. Rev. Kent, vice-moderator, was called to the chair at this time. All joined in singing "The Battle Hymn of the Republic." The conference now listened to the moderator's address, delivered by Rev. E. L. Miller. He made a very emphatic and challenging appeal for genuine patriotism. Jesus was a great patriot. To be a patriot one must love their fellowmen. We must take our religion seriously, not sadly. Let us stand by God and serve him. America must free herself from many things which are defiling her. Let us make our nation a greater blessing in the world than she has ever been. Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord. At the close of Brother Millers' address the hymn, "Forward" was sung by the congregation. Benediction by Rev. Homer Kent.

Wednesday Morning, 8:45 A. M.

Conference opened by singing, "Near the Cross." Rev. John Thompson conducted the devotions. He read the first 16 verses of the eighth chapter of Romans. Song followed, "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms." The program at this hour was given over to the subject of the Sunday school. Sister Srack spoke on the subject of, "Teaching the Adult."

If we are to teach adults we must have something to give them and the only place you can get it is from God. So many teach without preparation. We must study and prepare our lesson. In every lesson there is a message for human hearts. In preparation, study your lesson from God's Word the best you can and the Holy Ghost will give the message.

In the absence of Brother Roher, an open forum was conducted on the problems of the Sunday school. An interesting discussion ensued on this most important subject. All engaged in the song, "I Need Thee Every Hour."

At this time the program was the Preachers' Hour. Dr. Tombaugh expressed regrets that he was unable to give his scheduled address and asked to be excused due to physical disability. At this time Rev. Homer Kent gave his address, "Shepherding the Flock." He said in effect: God is the great Shepherd and we are under-shepherds. Three attitudes should be assumed by the under-shepherds; First, the attitude of learning. The pastor must know his flock. Secondly, The pastor must love the flock and love the Christ. Thirdly, the attitude of leading. We must lead by a living example. We represent our Lord by our lives. To lead we must study and pray to be worthy of leading God's flock. May God help us to be worthy of the crown given by the Chief Shepherd.

Rev. Kent's address was very clear and definite, motivated by a deep sincerity in the Lord Jesus Christ. Following this address a discussion engaged our attention for ten minutes. The privileges of the floor and the courtesy of the conference were extended Brothers Bell and Riddle and others who were visiting this conference. Song, "Rescue the Perishing" followed.

Eleven o'clock was Mission Hour. Rev. G. C. Carpenter, president of the mission board, was in charge of this session.

Rev. Emerson Rohart gave a brief account of the mission field at Winchester, Virginia, which church had its first birthday anniversary May 22nd, 1927. He reported the work progressing very nicely. At this time Rev. Carpenter gave a brief message on the general subject of missions. The Lord gave us first the basic missionary command, "Go ye into all the world."

Our religion spoils if not used, if not passed on, is God's rule for blessings in this world. Our maps must cover the whole wide world.

In view of the fact that the mission board lacked a necessary quorum to elect its members, Rev. Tombaugh moved the election of G. H. Haun and G. A. Copp to this board. Motion was carried. Rev. E. L. Miller was nominated by G. C. Carpenter to take the place on the mission board, made vacant by the death of Samuel Hounshell. Rev. E. B. Shaver was nominated for the same office by Dr. Tombaugh. Dr. Tombaugh withdraws his nomination at the request of Brother Shaver. Rev. Miller was elected to the mission board.

Responses were heard at this time by visiting Brothers Bell and Riddle. Rev. Carpenter dismissed us with prayer, praying especially for the sick brethren of our conference district.

Wednesday Afternoon, 1:30 P. M.

The afternoon session was opened by singing, "A Charge to Keep." Devotions were conducted by Rev. G. W. Chambers. He read the 19th Psalm and followed with prayer. All joined in singing, "Come Thou Almighty King." Following the hymn, the minutes of the conference were read and approved. An additional report of the credential committee showed a total of 48 delegates present. Committee on conference location for next year reports St. James, Maryland asking for conference for next year. A plea was made by Dr. Carpenter for conference to be held near the center of the district. The matter was postponed for final action. Brother Coffey of Roanoke, in the absence of his credentials, was received into the conference. It was moved by Dr. Carpenter and passed by the conference to recommend to our next conference an amendment to the constitution of this conference, making the vice-moderator a member of the district executive committee. Rev. Homer Kent was elected as a member of the district executive committee for the coming year.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter was nominated as a trustee for Ashland College. Upon suggestion of Brother Bell only one candidate was nominated for college trustee.

Rev. Rohart revived us from the tiresome business session with a vocal solo. He sang a negro spiritual, "I Ain't Goin' to Grieve My Lord No More."

At 2:45 the program was given over to women of the conference. Mrs. Simpson was in charge of this hour's program. All joined in singing "Near the Cross." At this time we listened to Miss Gertrude Leedy, the General Secretary of the National Woman's Missionary Society, who spoke on the subject of "The Devotional Life." She emphasized the need of the family altar and the spiritual comfort and helpfulness of prayer. A prayerful life is a powerful life. The two important factors in the devotional life seems to be time and method, but prayer is greater than either of these. Through prayer we talk to God, forming a basis for our devotional life. Prayer should include adoration, confession, petition, intercession and thanksgiving. These factors should be arranged according to our needs. To be alone with God gives inspiration and softens the temper. Miss Leedy closed by giving ten reasons why we should have a family altar in our homes. A hymn followed, "Bind Me Closer to Thee." At this time a discussion was led by Miss Edith Garber for the young girls and women only. The men folk adjourned.

THE STORY WE SPOIL

In my study there stands a very beautiful cabinet of oak in which are stored my sermon manuscripts. There are hundreds of them, and every one is the result of patient study and solid thought. As compositions I am not ashamed of them, for not a single one of them has been slipshodly wrought; and yet I am in the mood this morning to take the lot into the back yard and make a bonfire of them; and that because of the remark a little boy, of whom I have just read, made to his mother after he came home from church. "Why, mother," he said, "when the minister was telling about Calvary, I could just see Jesus going up there, and the Cross, and the people, and just when I was most interested, the minister stopped—and went on with the sermon." And that's what my conscience is telling me this morning is wrong with those careful productions of mine that may be burned before it comes to noon—that there is too much of the sermon in them and too little of the simple gospel story, and it is to tell that over again that I am called. And what a story it is! Just a few pages from the place where I found the words of the little boy quoted, I found another story. A Hindu priest once sought out Bishop Warren, to ask him what it was that he had come to India to preach; and for answer he was told the story of the Cross. The priest listened with increasing alarm as the old tale was retold, but when the narrative came to the point where Jesus prayed: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," he rose up in anger and cried: "Get out of here! Get out of India! You will convert all the people if you talk to them in that way. We have in all our religions no story of love like that." There is no other story like it, and if we told it oftener, and did not so often "go on with the sermon," I believe our preaching would be more effective.—Methu-dist Recorder.

that the members weren't taking much interest in it, and so we decided not to bother with it."

"That's too bad. Wasn't it your society that was to reach 300 percent in the efficiency campaign within six months? You must have been neglecting to put the stars on lately, for I notice that you've only 195 points to your credit, fifteen more than last year."

"Oh, we've taken credit for all we're entitled to, I'm afraid," shamedfacedly admitted the M. P. O. H. S. "It's true that we did start out with that goal in mind, but somehow we didn't reach it."

"No, it's very evident you didn't," agreed the inspector.

"Say, do you know what the matter is with your society now?" he demanded.

"I'm beginning to see."

"You have plenty of starters, but not enough finishers. You need to add the Glue family to your membership list. It's easy enough to start somethings, but the real test comes in finishing things."

"You seem to have located the trouble accurately," acknowledged the Man-Proud-of-His-Society; "and I'm greatly obliged to you. It's strange that none of us realized it before. Now, if you'll excuse me, I'll go and finish the preparation for the next Sunday's topic, which I started the night before last and laid aside until a more convenient time."—Albert A. Rand, in C. E. World.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

A Midnight Ride

By Elizabeth Fulgham

One moonlight night a man on a horse came riding slowly out from an old gate in the wall about the city of Jerusalem. Long ago cities had big high walls about them to protect their people from robbers or other enemies. The gates were closed at night, and no one could pass through. But at this time the wall about Jerusalem was old and partly torn down, and the gates had been burned. The horse picked its way very carefully, for piles of crumbling bricks and cement and the half-burned timbers of the gates lay all about. At last the horse stopped where there was a great gap in the wall, and there was so much rubbish that it was hard to go farther.

The man himself seemed very sad. He gazed back through the breach in the wall over the quietly sleeping city. No wonder he was sad! Down there in those houses, many of which were also badly in need of repainting, lay sleeping little girls and boys and men and women, the people of the Jews, this man's own people. What if an enemy should come that night and attack the town? There was no strong wall to give protection. What would become of those precious, helpless children? The man wanted to do something about it; that was why he had come many, many miles over rough roads and through dangerous places to Jerusalem. He understood why the wall needed repairing and why the whole city had such a tumble-down appearance. Many years before a king from the land of Babylon had come with a great army and captured the city. He had taken away most of the people to be slaves in his country. This man's own father and mother were probably among those carried away, and he had grown up there. When quite young he had become a servant of the king. It was his duty to hand the king his cup of wine, first tasting it to show that no enemy had put poison in it. He was called the king's cupbearer.

One day the king, who had become very fond of the faithful cupbearer, saw that his servant's face was very sad.

"Why are you so sad?" asked the king. "This can be nothing but sorrow of heart."

Now, it was against the rules of the palace for anyone to be sad in the presence of the king, and no doubt the cupbearer answered in fear for his life. "How can I be any way but sad," he bravely said, "when the city of my fathers lies in ruins and the gates of the walls burned and the wall itself almost torn down?"

But the king was not angry; he was used to having people come to him for help, and so he asked: "For what do you make request?"

How relieved the cupbearer must have felt! For days before he had gone without food that he might pray the more earnestly to God for help. Even now he whispered a prayer that God would help him say the right thing to the king. Then he begged the king to let him return to Jerusalem with workmen to repair the city and the wall. Imagine the man's great joy when the king granted the request, even giving him a great deal of money that would be needed for the work! It was a long, hard journey and no easy task that the cupbearer undertook. When he arrived in Jerusalem, he found things very bad indeed. The people were discouraged, and there were enemies on every hand to hinder and make fun of anyone who tried to do anything. Perhaps that was why the cupbearer wished to ride out along the wall at midnight before he had told anyone why he had come back to Jerusalem. He wished to go with only two or three friends to see just what had to be done and make his plans before he told the people what he hoped to do.

As he sat there on his horse looking down over the sleeping city, unprotected by a strong wall if an enemy should come, he must have prayed again that God would show him the best way to set about the work. Anyway, he certainly chose a wise plan. Near the wide breach in the wall where his horse had stopped there was a house where some family lay asleep.

"Surely the man who lives in that house would be willing to work right here on this bad place in the wall, because it is so close that his home is in great danger," thought the cupbearer.

And that was the way he finally directed each man to do, to work on the wall nearest his own home. Because of outside enemies who tried to stop the building of the wall the men had to take their weapons and fight before the wall was finished. But at last after fifty-two days of hard work the wall was repaired. It was a happy day for all the people. They all gathered together, singing and praising God, and they promised that Jerusalem should be known as a city that worshiped and loved God.

How happy the little children must have been to know that now their homes were protected by the strong wall the cupbearer had rebuilt! I wonder if you can guess the name of this man, a king's cupbearer, who took the midnight ride along the wall of Jerusalem? If you cannot, look in your Bible for the sixteenth book, which is named for the builder of the wall.

No one can make a success of his life unless he is willing to trust God. We all need divine help to meet the conflicts of life. We may not have the Midianites around us to subdue our country and make slaves of us, but there are many temptations and sins which beset us and which will make us slaves if we do not trust God and fight them.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE TO THE W. M. S.

Last year the W. M. S. women in attendance at the Winona School of Missions voted to come to the "Hillside" so they could all be together in one place. The School of Missions begins July 25 and I would like to know somewhere near the number to be expected so that I can make arrangements. Would all ladies wishing a room please write me? Also for our General Conference the last of August (August 22 to 28), I want to make the same offer as last year, of giving 20% to one of our missions. Last year it was to South America, and this year it will be to Kentucky. I have 35 rooms.

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

"Face to Face With Jesus Christ"

FINALLY, my friends, in the words of Tom Hanny, who went from the poppy field of California Christian Endeavor to his fever-laden jungle of service in Africa.—

"Finally, my friends, I would leave you face to face with Jesus Christ." I believe in youth. In a generation of moral strain more intense than any previous generation; with adult life too hurried to give adequate attention to its sons and daughters, aye and often too pleasure-bent and selfish to supply them good examples, young men and young women in ever increasing numbers are moving toward the guarded heights of Christian character. They are worthy of our confidence and they are fit to bear the work of the world. In them God has set his witness; with them the future is secure. These, the radiant and the impetuous; these, the brave-hearted and daring all things—these I would leave face to face with Jesus Christ.

"In the beauty of the lilies, he was born across the sea,
As he died to make men Holy, let us live to make men Free!"

And, as in another time the flower of Christianity steel-clad went forth to reclaim his sepulcher, let us now crusade with him, crusade to cleanse our own hearts, to capture our friends; crusade to establish liberty with law and to perfect the peace; crusade to build the new earth, to win the warless world.

"To Make Goodness Interesting"

"A great difficulty faced by the religious press is that it is the abnormal rather than the normal that attracts people's attention and that the problem of the religious press is to make goodness interesting," said Dan B. Brummitt, editor of the "Northwestern Christian Advocate," at the Editorial Council of the Religious Press recently held at Washington, D. C. Dr. Brummitt spoke on the subject, "The Relation of the Pastor and the Church Paper to Each Other—As the Editor Sees It." We have supplied our readers with the companion address given by a pastor and we trust it will be received with thoughtfulness and that it will have the effect of bringing about a better understanding of the mutual relations of the church paper and its constituency. But we are particularly interested here in emphasizing the problem which our contemporary points out, the problem of "making goodness interesting". That is really a big and difficult task, and it is the task not alone of the church paper, but of the pastor of the church as well. In this, as in practically every phase of responsibility, we are cooperators. This is the common task of editor and pastor alike, and, as well, of all religious workers and teachers.

If we were to attempt to work out a solution of this problem on paper, many and various ways would be suggested. But after all should be said, the problem would still remain to vex the minds, to try the patience and to test the perseverance of us all who are interested in the triumph of the right. But there are at least two considerations which we may be permitted to stress—principles or attitudes to guide us in our approach to the problem.

First, we should frankly recognize the fact, and not lose our temper over it, that "it is the abnormal rather than the normal that attracts people's attention." It is the unusual, the out-of-the-ordinary, the singular that causes people to stop and look. "It's different" is a common advertising catch phrase, and is based upon good psychology. And acting upon that principle shrewd advertisers are continually inventing some new and strange way of getting the attention of the people in order that they may tell them the story of their business. A splendid imitation of a Jersey cow is placed in a show window to compel the attention of people to the products of a great dairy. A huge elephant with swinging trunk, flapping ears and swaying body is built in the high ceilinged lobby of a great department store to get the crowds to flocking that way. A steeplejack is employed to scale the outside wall of a tall building, pausing at every window he reaches, and finally at the top, to bellow down to the watching, breathless crowd the name of a certain make of automobile. It is the thing that gives a thrill that gets the attention of people. Let a man walk down the street on his hands with feet in the air and everybody within eye-reach will stop and gaze at him, but let him walk as men usually walk and only his intimate friends will see him. Let a newspaper flare out in bold headlines that can be read across the street the story of a daring bank robbery, and everybody with two cents in his pockets will soon be burying his face in that paper, but let it feature the story of a highly respectable citizen, and there will be no extra papers sold and the regular readers will say, "There's nothing in the paper today." Let the soap-box orator harangue the people in language that borders on the indecent and rain curses upon the things that be and he will have a crowd listening intently to his blatant noise, while the Salvation Army captain around the corner will be wasting his energy on a half dozen indolent listeners and the preacher in his comfortable church will be spending his righteous words on the "faithful few." However, it will not do for the preacher to take a gun into his pulpit in order to gain a respectable hearing, nor for the editor of a church paper to fill his pages with social dross in order to secure a wider reading. Nor must he grow unduly pessimistic or scowling over the situation. He should not blind his eyes to it; he should face it frankly, but he should not allow it to throw him off balance, nor to cause him to lose the keenness of his spiritual vision.

Second, he must believe in the possibility of "making the good interesting", and of so filling the mental horizon with the good that is interesting that there will be little desire or attention given to the base and unworthy. The success of this process depends both upon the dispenser and the receiver of the good and worthy things of knowledge. It depends on the skill and sincerity of him who imparts and also upon the keenness and responsiveness of him who receives. But the burden rests supremely upon the pulpit and the religious press of finding the people where they are and of lifting them to where they ought to be. And that is exactly what they are doing by the long and steady process of instruction and spiritual impartation. One of the greatest values of the religious press is the provoking of the thoughts of the people on higher things and the stimulation of their aspirations. And that service can be greatly extended by the cooperation of the pastor and other local church leaders with the church paper. The task of making the good increasingly interesting—of elevating the tastes of the people, of ennobling their ideals, of sharpening and spiritualizing their sense of appreciation is a cooperative undertaking.

"Should Christians Tithe?"

This question came to us recently through the mails and the communication informed us of a group that had upon occasion been debating the question. At other times we have been asked the same question. Only recently the question was put to us personally by a little group with whom we were conversing. Also we were among a group of preachers who were taking sides on the question, some holding that the tithe was a duty, a debt brought over from the Jewish law, others claiming that it was not binding upon Christians since they were living under the dispensation of Grace, the law being fulfilled in Christ and we being free from its requirements. So the question is constantly bobbing up in the minds of Christian people and it is the subject of frequent discussion and dispute, and though we have frequently written upon it, we are made to realize that it is a subject on which teaching needs to be often and plainly given.

In the first place it seems to us that a people who profess such allegiance to the whole word of God would be extremely cautious about dismissing lightly a matter that was recognizedly an inescapable obligation under the law and concerning which Jesus never spoke a word except by way of commendation. When he said concerning the tithing of mint, and annis, and cummun, "these ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone"—justice, mercy, and the like, and should not have forgotten the real spirit of the law—and when he nowhere and at no time told his disciples that they were free from the obligation of the tithe, the ignoring of its requirements would seem quite out of keeping with our customary attitude of preferring to do more rather than risk doing less than is absolutely necessary to full Gospel obedience. An attitude that is so much in dispute, a position that is so near the borderline of things required and things non-essential is too precarious for those who desire to leave no question of doubt as to their loyalty and obedience.

Moreover we have grown quite accustomed to declaring our allegiance to "the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible", not confining our professed fealty to the New Testament alone, which records the requirements of the Gospel of Grace. If we are going to make our declaration of loyalty so broad, we must be willing to accept the implications of such a profession and certainly do as much as was required by the law. Let us do more than merely mouth our slogan. May it be more than empty words, more than a scholastic yell by which to demonstrate the measure of our enthusiasm and the power of our lungs. If we really mean what we say, let us frankly admit it and faithfully practice it.

And surely there is a very real sense in which we can insist on the requirements of the law, and that is, that a moral law can never be declared null and void, but must forever remain in force. The law of one day of rest in seven is such a law. It was true before it was incorporated in the decalogue. God wrote it in the nature of man before he penciled it upon tables of stone. It is not a mere question of days that God is concerned about in the Fourth Commandment, but of man's welfare. He did not thereby merely restrict man's use of a day, he hedged him in from a danger, he protected man's life. For man's own good he required a minimum of one-seventh of his time. And we venture to assert that the same is true with regard to the tithe. It is the minimum of God's requirement of the increase of man's hands, which requirement is made not because God needs anything from man, but because man needs constantly to be brought face to face with the obligation of his stewardship. And nothing in the Gospel is clearer than the fact of Christian stewardship and nothing more binding than fidelity to that stewardship.

It would be foolish to expect fidelity to a trust without giving some suggestion as to what faithfulness requires. That suggestion is found in the tithe. And in a very vital sense one can speak of the "law of the tithe" as truly as he can speak of the "law of the Sabbath", and not in a spirit of legalism in either case. One may be legalistic in the observance of either. But the requirement in either case is based upon more fundamental and pre-existent considerations than any written ecclesiastical statute. Man's greatest spiritual welfare, his highest and eternal good depends on the incorporation into his being of the qualities that these requirements are calculated to develop. "It is required of a steward that a man be found faithful" is not a mere officious statement of Over-Lordship. The tithe as a minimum of faithfulness is not a mere arbitrary test. It is not a mere matter of financing the kingdom. It is a matter on which hinges great enrichment of life and growth in grace, and spiritual joy and satisfaction. It is a matter that is fraught with far-reaching, spiritual significance and that lifts it out of the mere legalistic. It is a moral and unalterable requirement and man cannot ignore it without detriment to himself. Therefore it would seem clear from these considerations, not to mention the many others which space forbids, that Christians should give at least a tithe.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The latest word from Dayton, Ohio is to the effect that Brother Orion E. Bowman, who was for sometime in a critical condition and then reported improved, is not in such a hopeful condition, and prayer is requested in his behalf that God may heal and preserve his life.

Brother W. H. Schaffer, the new pastor of Hamlin, Kansas, informs us that it was an error to have reported last week that the young people had been reorganized into a denominational Christian Endeavor society; it was being contemplated, but the definite form of reorganization had not yet been determined.

We are glad for the privilege of reproducing the very thoughtful and informing article of Dr. Florence N. Gribble from the Missionary Review of the World, and we are also pleased to note that this authoritative missionary magazine has recognized Dr. Gribble's literary skill and historical knowledge of the inland African missionary situation.

Professor M. P. Puterbaugh, treasurer of the National Sunday School Association, reports what he believes to be the final returns of the White Gift Offering, and it is gratifying to note that the Sunday schools went over the top in fine style. The goal was set for $4,500, and the total to date is $4,680.15. We congratulate the Association officers on the confidence which this fine response indicates in their leadership.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, makes a second appeal for funds for the repair of the loss caused by the flood at Lost Creek, Kentucky. Some have very kindly responded, but the need is vastly greater than the response has been. Read Brother Drushal's report of the situation in this issue and you will begin to realize, or at least you can partially imagine how disastrous the flood was. It will cost considerable to get the furnace and electric light plant repairs and to clean the mud off of everything in sight. Let us help them put things in shape, and that quite promptly, before school begins. Send your gifts to W. A. Gearhart at Dayton, Ohio.

An interesting letter and a reassuring answer to prayer is written by Brother Percy Yett, one of our faithful missionaries to South America. The door of opportunity was opened to the town of Realico through the intercession of the praying women of the W. M. S., and as well by the persistent praying of many of the brethren whose hearts are burdened with the problems that are there to be faced. We say the women, especially, because the problem that was so vexing was solved at the very time when according to the W. M. S. prayer program, this particular point was the special object of prayer. Indeed, prayer is more than an influence to the believing, it is an effective, accomplishing power.

Brother Freeman Ankrum, pastor of the church at Oak Hill, West Virginia, reports the evangelistic campaign recently conducted by Brother R. Paul Miller of the Philadelphia First church. It was a successful meeting, thirty-four being the numerical results, and the membership greatly built up spiritually and encouraged in the great work they are doing under the direction of their energetic pastor, during whose term of service thus far one hundred and thirty-five souls have been added to the church. The new church building plans are going forward apace, a beautiful church is already on the blue print and the task of raising the finances is being pressed with commendable vigor. Within a year it is their purpose to have their new church completed.

Brother R. D. Barnard very kindly supplies us with a brief report of the Cleveland Christian Endeavor convention, especially the Brethren rally. It would have been a great thing for the Brethren societies if many could have been largely represented at that great convention. It would have benefited the pastors, we dare say; it would have given them a reassurance that Christian Endeavor has not served its day and is passing out, rather that it is yet vital, aggressive and efficient, and meeting a real need that is being met by no other organization. Where Christian Endeavor is not as effective as it once was, it will usually be found that the leadership is not giving it the attention that it needs. The organization is as potentially powerful and adaptable to local needs as it ever was, but it will not work itself any more than it ever would. It needs leadership, time and effort, and the young people need its training.

BEGIN NOW TO MAKE YOUR PLANS TO ATTEND THE GENERAL CONFERENCE of the Brethren church at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 22 to 28. In addition to the announcement of the Congress of the World League Against Alcoholism to be held at Winona, August 17 to 23, to which Brethren churches are invited to send delegates, the No-Tobacco League of America will hold its twelfth annual convention at Winona Lake, August 15 and 16 and churches, young people's societies and Sunday schools are invited to send delegates to this convention. The No-Tobacco League is "a nationally incorporated institution devoted to a thorough study of the tobacco problem with the purpose of finding a sane, practical solution of it." It is said not to be primarily a reform agency, but primarily aimed at education. Its stated motto is: "Let us keep the young folks clean from the blight of nicotine; let us teach the youth the truth about tobacco." Any one interested may attend its convention and participate in its deliberations.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Crusade with Christ

Address by Daniel A. Poling, International President of the Christian Endeavor Movement

Delivered Saturday evening, July 2, at the opening session of the International Christian Endeavor Convention, Cleveland, Ohio

Tonight for the first time in all the years of Christian Endeavor another than Francis E. Clark is responsible for the opening address of an International Convention, but he is not silent here. Beyond the words of any man to define the significance of his presence, he lives among us and carries on with us. He has but gone to his coronation. The work he began, the movement founded and led into worldwide acceptance and achievement, these, under God, shall win yet greater triumphs. But he has, and can have, no successor. He remains the St. Francis of the young, Father Endeavor Clark for the centuries. At a suitable moment this convention shall pause to honor itself by remembering him. Tonight in the richness of his memory we seek in all that we shall say to be at least worthy of his spirit.

The war taught us that no system yet devised by man can keep men from each other's throats when fear crashes the cymbals. And Fear's bloody twin is Pride. These two, exploited by lust for gain, can make a continental welter overnight and have the world in battle grips by the second dawn.

The political and social economists assured us that the close of the Nineteenth Century ushered out forever the menace of general armed conflict; that it would not be sanctioned by the worker, that he had been internationalized; and that it would not be financed—that wealth would not consent to waste itself. But Sarajevo crashed the cymbals and logic was given a brutal death. Over the ravished fields and cities of Europe; above the fences of whitening skulls and the crimson bubbles fading from the seas, stands clear and high the great conclusion, "Without me ye can do nothing." Civilization's ultimatum is "Christ or Chaos;" and the rallying call of this, the thirty-first International Convention of Christian Endeavor is "Crusade with Christ."

Crusade with Christ to win a warless world. He was named the Prince of Peace. At his advent was born an anthem of propaganda that has survived for eighteen hundred years. His Sermon on the Mount is the epic of human brotherhood. He challenges us to engage the impossible when he commands "Love your enemies;" but he accepts for himself the obligation to produce the ultimate triumph when he declares, "I am the way!" Crusade with Christ!

We entered into a solemn covenant to end war. We over-swore ourselves. In the crash of worlds we lost our reason and sought to make of conflict a vehicle of peace. But we have not only failed to accomplish that which we promised to perform, we have as yet failed to make an adequate endeavor. Those with whom we sealed the holy pact lie maimed or dead. They took the vow in deadly earnest. They gave the "last full measure of devotion." But we who offered all to Mars have yet to learn that peace is priceless."

We have tried the way of fear and price. We have experimented with balance of power agreements. We have placed our trust in selfish alliances. We have gone to the end of the road with traditional statesmanship and we have found at the last only a catastrophe that has all but wrecked man. In a school of horrors we have learned that Edith Cavell was right!—"Patriotism is not enough." "I am the way" remains as the only alternative. Christian Endeavorers, crusade with Christ!

Youth lifts himself in flight across the Atlantic. Through the uncharted ether he sweeps, as toward the pole star of destiny, to the glowing objects of his will. Let youth claim peace today! Give to this mighty gathering a voice of brotherhood that shall be heard to the end of the earth. Let Cleveland 1927 open an epoch of good will! Launch here a movement that shall enlist all national, state, provincial, city, district and local unions of our society, with their four million members, in a campaign to pledge our members and all others we may enlist, to pledge to crusade with Christ for our peace. I recommend that the trustees of this international body appoint a commission of five or seven members to meet at the call of the World's Christian Endeavor with similar commissions that may be appointed by the British Christian Endeavor Union, the European Christian Endeavor Union, the Christian Endeavor Unions of Germany, Australia, India, China, Japan and by all other national and international agencies of our inter-racial and interdenominational fellowship. I further recommend that we consider with these several commissions ways and means for making an effective world-wide youth crusade for peace. It would be particularly appropriate for the General Secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor to serve as executive secretary of our commission.

What more fitting memorial to Francis E. Clark than this! Here joins the cause that called his life in youth and that became in later years veritably his passion. For it, he left the comforts of home to become with Harriet Clark, his wife, a wanderer across the face of the earth. To it he dedicated his time and talents without reservation and in it he poured his body and his soul. We shall see him always as we saw him in London, with the flags of the nations grouped about the monogram of our movement and above his royal head. The voice that spoke to the world then has died upon his pulseless lips, but

TRUSTING
In the Lord Jesus Christ
For Strength
I PROMISE HIM
That I will strive to do Whatever He would like to have me do his spirit is the bugle on ahead. The legions are afield in every land and the common watchword is "What Christ did teach. Each man for his brother first and Heaven then for each."—Christian Endeavorers for Christ and the church—March on!

But let the record be complete and true to both the genius of our movement and the success requirement of a Christian enterprise. "Without me ye can do nothing" is civilization's ultimatum, nor is it less than the first personal requirement for each crusader. We may talk with easy sentences in a kind of superficial eloquence about a new world, but there can be no new world without new men and women to build it. Science can clear a fever-laden jungle. Reason can achieve the logical form of an association between nations. Force can destroy an empire and raise a state. But only God can build the new and warless world, for he alone can make new creatures out of fear and pride-led men.

"Personal allegiance to and acceptance of Jesus Christ" has defined the spirit of our program for the past year. By the unanimous vote of the representatives of the denominations and commissions whose delegates sit in this convention, it has been made the legend of our plans for the two years just ahead. Personal acceptance of and allegiance to Jesus Christ. Crusade with Christ! The two are one! To go with him in his world-saving way, we must be with him. Beyond all creedal statements and including them, this trumpet is the challenge to be Christians and "to do whatever he would like to have us do." Here our program stands or falls. Here enters victory or defeat. We can do all things through Christ. We can only fall without him.

For me, evangelism is first. Youth needs pre-eminently not technical education, but an informed and vitalized heart. Out of the heart are the issues of life. Organize in personal evangelism. In our union activities let us come alongside the city federations of churches to participate in visitorial evangelism and let no pastor ever fail to have in congregational evangelism the one hundred per cent loyalty and participation of his Christian Endeavorers. Bible study classes and mission study classes, as well as classes definitely organized to study personal work, should be dedicated to the supreme business of bringing young and old into personal acceptance of the allegiance to Jesus Christ. We must have our part in seeing to it that Christian education is unfalteringly and pre-eminently Christian. Nor shall we forget that "The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." It is here that we come upon the great dynamic, the great dynamic without which, as without Christ, we can do nothing.

To make tangible the spirit of this suggestion, I recommend the appointment of a commission of five or seven on Youth Evangelism, a commission to meet with similar commissions from the young people's departments of all the churches, or with those who may be in charge of the educational and evangelistic activities of the churches, and also to meet with representatives of the World's Sunday School Association, the International Council of Religious Education, the Young Men's Christian Association and the Young Women's Christian Association. It would be appropriate to name the Secretary of Christian Vocations of the International Society of Christian Endeavor as the executive secretary of this commission.

The Christian Endeavor movement has become, not only interdenominational but interracial and world-wide, because it has been always, and above all things else, Christian. Christ alone is universal. And because he is universal, he shall reign "Where'er the sun doth his successive journeys run." Let us build upon this sure foundation the new or the enlarging structure of service. Stand fast upon the covenant. Christian Endeavorers, do not consent to compromise your peculiar significance, which is peculiarly your strength. Write it as your leadership may recommend, as your practice and judgment may indicate as appropriate and most effective; but write it strong and lift it high. In it are joined practical psychology, sound pedagogy, a great tradition, a worldwide harmony and the passion of youth to make Christ king over all.

Here center the loyalties of our movement; loyalty to the church—your church; loyalty to your church as to your home. I am invariably suspicious of the individual who discusses with favor an internationalism that does not begin in patriotism—begin there, though it should not end there. And I am as poorly satisfied with the person who is so engrossed with unity that he forgets or neglects the unit. Christian Endeavorers, crusade for the church! Under God, I owe my first loyalty to the communion in which I am enrolled and with the congregation of my choice. Any other conception of the spirit of our society is a misconception. It is from this common base that we who are of all races and creeds and conditions have marched out to join a spiritual High Command and to make with Christ our common cause.

It is from this base that we have gone to a unity of spirit in all things and to unity of labor in many things, a unity that has made "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God" more than a poet's fancy and a marching song. But the spectacle of Protestant dissensions and multiplied divisions is not pleasing to her youth. The prayer of the Master is to them a growing urge, and tomorrow must be better than today.

As to the International Society of Christian Endeavor, we are a platform of agreement; a plane of contact for all; a center in which shall be granted fellowship and good will and from which, please God, shall radiate inspiration and power. We have no arbitrary mandate. We possess no governing functions; nor do we covet these. We stand to serve. We stand to serve where Francis E. Clark set up the flag. We stand to serve in the way long honored by the communions and at the call of the churches.

In years of practical ministry in the field there has come to us a wealth of experience. As the work has grown, new departments have been introduced and additional secretaries have been added. We shall continue to follow the policy of allowing needs to develop opportunities and issue calls. The proven past shall not be abandoned for a future promise, however alluring. We shall emphasize with vigor Junior work and the Intermediate Society; the Alumni; religious vocations; our Field in the Army and Navy; prison and social service; recreation and superintended travel and we shall earnestly strive to make youth's citizenship a ministry for law observance, law enforcement, and active participation in all the affairs of the state. Indifference and neglect are the twin dangers of a Republican form of democratic government. Freedom can only survive under law, and eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty.

As to Prohibition, the organization which in 1911 electrified the Continent with the slogan "A Saloonless Nation by 1920" declares in 1927, "It is the law and it is a good law." Let nullifications and modificationists alike count this organization "Bone dry!" As for me, no candidate for public office can have my support and vote who is less than the outspoken friend of this, "The greatest social adventure in the history of civilization."

To further the cause of Prohibition law observance and law enforcement, to unify citizenship activities in this direction, to achieve if possible a united program of educa-

Home Religion

By Wilbur B. Stover

(Elder Stover, who has so generously and graciously contributed this article to "The Evangelist" in the interest of a widespread revival of Home Religion, was for a third of a century a Church of the Brethren missionary to India and since his return has been a prolific writer of missionary and devotional books and magazine articles.)

Family Worship and the Lord's Prayer

There is much gained in every way by praying together; this truth is accentuated by the daily family prayers, but more especially in the manner of conducting these prayers. Every formality is best avoided, yet personal experience has proved to us all that the sustained attention which one is able to give while another is praying is usually limited, the mind wanders hither and thither meanwhile, so that something more than saying Amen together is clearly found needful: some parts of the prayers recited together will come nearest to supplying this need.

But formality must be avoided. To this end it is the usage of some to repeat together sometimes, either following the Lord's Prayer, or without it, the familiar little prayer of the Psalmist David:

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."

Or the little Mizpah prayer, especially when all will separate soon afterward:

"The Lord watch between me and thee, when we are absent, one from another."

Or, in the same way, that Pauline benediction, which is very lofty in expression:

"Now unto him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, unto him be the glory in the church by Christ Jesus throughout all ages, world without end; Amen."

Or the most familiar apostolic benediction:

"The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, be with us all; Amen."

That which is commonly called the Apostles' Creed, fits in well to begin or to end the general prayers, all repeating it together, while kneeling. We ought all to know it, and by occasional repetition it becomes familiar to all of us:

"I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth; and in Jesus Christ his only begotten Son, our Lord; who was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the virgin Mary; suffered under Pontius Pilate; was crucified, dead, and buried; the third day he arose from the dead; he ascended into heaven; and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; from whence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in the Holy Ghost; the holy catholic church, the communion of saints; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting. Amen."

Than any one of these, however, I would prefer to use the Lord's Prayer more often, though these will all fit in fine and frequently as a closing part of the prayer service. One complements the other. The last several years in India we drank coffee in the morning so as not to get the tea habit; the tea in the afternoon so as not to get the coffee habit. In some such way as that, these varying forms of expression will be used and found exceedingly wholesome, all the family unite in using the form suggested.

The Lord's Prayer is more adapted for morning worship than evening, therefore, as for myself, I usually avoid using it at an evening service. "Give us this day our daily bread," is hardly meaningful when one has had his daily bread three times already, all that he could desire, and would refuse more if offered to him. It means nothing in the evening; unless perhaps we change it to the rendering of Luke, and say: "Give us day by day our daily bread." But Luke's rendering of the Lord's Prayer is incomplete, and one will find himself going back to Matthew for the ending. Moreover, the teaching of Jesus is concerned with the present relative to material needs, much rather than to be anxious about tomorrow, "for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself." The family worship therefore logically becomes a morning service, when guidance is sought for the duties of the day, when the body is rested and the mind refreshed, closing frequently with the Lord's Prayer.

But did you ever analyze the Lord's Prayer? Did you ever look at it in the large, before looking at its detailed statements? Too many good folks enter into the fine analysis of sentences and half sentences, of words and roots of words, which tends to blind one to the fine sweep of larger meanings; that is, they become so wrapped up in ordinary detail that they fail to see the extraordinary principle involved. May we look together at that wonderful model prayer in an endeavor to see it as a whole, and so comprehend its guiding principle? When we get that we will not only appreciate the privilege of praying the prayer together, but every time we so pray, we will recall the great objective, we will find ourselves following our Leader in more than mere words. We will be able, I trust, to be guided by the principles of that prayer, whatever our words may be when we pray.

I. "Our Father who art in heaven,
Hallowed be thy name."

This is the first expression in prayer. What is the force of it, what the approach? The first endeavor is to find expression for a loving relationship; having found it, to break forth in praise; the whole phrase is the expression of a devout worshiper. the first thing in prayer, the point of first magnitude, the thought of undoubted sincerity, is worship.

"Holy, holy, holy, Lord God, Almighty!

Early in the morning, our song shall rise to thee."

Bishop Heber voiced the thought; we praise him for what he is; our approach is constantly challenged, for our finite can never fully comprehend his infinity. But to the extent that we know him we praise him, and our hearts cannot find sufficient expression for our praises.

"We praise thee, O God, for the Son of thy love,
For Jesus who died, and is now gone above."

We praise him, we worship him for what he has done for us; for while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us. Personally, before we were born, the way of our salvation was prepared for us. Our hearts glow with the thought that in a great time coming, we shall be like him. No, we cannot find any spirit of rejoicing either in absorption of the righteous or in annihilation of the wicked, but we do rejoice and worship him, because we shall be with him, we shall be like him, we shall see him as he is.

Moreover, we worship because we love, and not because we fear; as our worship becomes integrated, our love becomes intensified. We forget ourselves in our adoration of him, and we worship, we praise, we express our emotions in words of our own or in words of others; often we worship by simply being silent before him; if the silence is guarded, it may become the most intense worship, unexpressed, unformed, unrestrained, unlimited.

Summer Loyalty and the Layman

By J. C. McBride

Our very lovable Sunday school superintendent recently announced that vacation time is here and it was to be expected that our people in large numbers would go to the mountains or seaside resorts on extended vacations, or tour to other parts. I did not agree with him, and yet it would be "unusual" for everybody to remain at home during the summer vacation, especially in California where there are so many places to go and such wonderful roads.

Now, in general, I think there is a tendency to lay down on the job during hot weather all over the brotherhood. Many of our eastern churches dispense with evening services altogether during the summer months.

While I am directing this article to the laymen, I might say to the preacher, perhaps one of the greatest sermons of modern times was preached to an empty house, and another to a lot of stumps in a deserted lumber camp. Stick to your job, Mr. Preacher, and you will get listeners even though you may have to go into the byways and hedges—and the Word of God will not return unto you void. Now, honestly, do you believe that? Then stay on the job during the summer months.

It is easy to criticize another man's work, but not so easy to provide a better way. If the devil ever went to sleep some good saint might slip up and administer chloroform. But since such chances are remote, the only hope of success lies in eternal vigilance. The call of our Master, "Can you not watch one hour with me?" should be heeded at just such a time as the vacation season. I am not decrying the vacation, oh, no, but rather the fellow who absents himself from the church services during the summer months and forgets God. About nine months in the year they sing, "I'll go where you want me to go, dear Lord," and then like Brother Jonah they depart for parts unknown without consulting God about it.

I wonder if there is a falling off in special programs at this time of year. Are you satisfied with conditions as they are, or do you want to increase the attendance? Personally, I think every preacher should strive to make his evening services evangelistic, and some means should be employed to get the unsaved to attend such services. Really, now, the movies have no trouble to get a full house at 25 cents per, while the preacher is able to rustle only a handful of listeners with seats free as the water you drink.

The laymen of the church could go a long way in building up the attendance by personal work. A life insurance agent is enthusiastic about his proposition and so is a book agent. Many Christians should be put to shame for the lack of enthusiasm in presenting the Gospel of Jesus Christ, whom they pretend to represent. The song goes "Tell it wherever you go," but it would fit their case better if they sang "Tell it for thirty minutes on Sunday morning and let the rest of the world go by."

Now, what am I driving at? Just this: I would have a well chosen choir leader take charge and conduct a very interesting old time song service. Hear the requests of people outside the membership for special old-time favorites, using one, two or three verses as the occasion may deem best. Advertise this by circulars, letters, newspapers or other means best adapted to the community—but by all means ADVERTISE. Following the song service have the preacher or some lawyer, judge, or other interesting speaker, take up and discuss the bad civic conditions and their remedy in your community. Advertise that as a special feature, as being vital to the welfare of the neighborhood. Then let the minister fire a good, heavy broadside on appropriate subjects in keeping with the effort at hand.

I don't believe in letting politics come into the church, but I am not so sure about reversing matters. When rotten spots appear on the surface of our civic life I believe it is the business of the Christian people to stick together and rise up in righteous indignation and clean up things as they should be.

The slump to indifference which is so apparent at this season of the year would be greatly overcome by the promotion of just such a program as outlined above. If every layman of the church would rally to the support of the pastor in an effort to whip the devil in a warm climate now, it will not be necessary to go and do battle against his satanic majesty in a hotter climate in the hereafter.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Tests of Discipleship

By W. S. Crick

TEXT: "After these things, Jesus manifested himself AGAIN to the disciples at the Sea of Tiberias, and he manifested himself on this wise."—John 21:1.

Apparently, the climax of the Fourth Gospel is reached in the closing verses of the twentieth chapter, when Thomas, looking upon the wounded body of his Savior, said, "My Lord and my God!" But the Apostle John was led to add still another series of events, which occurred, possibly on the third Lord's Day after the resurrection.

The evidence seems to be conclusive that the twenty-first chapter is an appendix, or postscript. To the Spirit-illuminated mind of the beloved disciple, there yet remained great truths to be handed down to the church, truths embodied in the significant events of that memorable day, when "Jesus was the third time manifested to the disciples, after that he was risen from the dead." There yet remained certain definite and absolute tests of discipleship, which the risen Lord sought to introduce before he departed from them in the flesh.

The tests to which he subjected the seven disciples were of a mature character. The rudimentary norms to which one's discipleship must measure up, such as faith, repentance, confession, baptism, the new birth, etc., had been duly set forth in the preceding narrative. These tests implied in the twenty-first chapter would appear to be designed for those who seek to become post-graduate disciples in the school of Christ. Tests to determine whether one has really advanced beyond the "first principles" (Heb. 6:1), or whether one is ever and anon "laying again the foundation" without having ever "pressed on to perfection."

It may be well for us to try to place ourselves in that fishing boat on the Sea of Galilee, during the moments when the dew-laden sands of the seashore were kissed by the first rays of the sun and made to scintillate, and submit to these advanced tests. The particular tests in which I am now interested may be set forth by three questions:

- I. Have I a plan for promoting Christ's cause?
- II. Is my life abundantly fruitful?
- III. Does love for him prompt my service?

When we honestly answer these questions, we may know whether we are advanced disciples—learners—in the quest for saving truth, or whether we are yet "beginners", mere "babes" (1 Cor. 3:1), suitable only for the Cradle Roll, so far as vision and service are concerned!

I. Have I a plan for promoting Christ's cause?

It seems at first thought almost incredible that Peter, James and John and the four other disciples could be found so soon after their Lord's passion and resurrection, riding the waves of Tiberias, with no higher aim than catching fish! How could they be content to return to their erstwhile haunts, when the marvelous fact of the empty tomb was fresh in their consciousness?

Someone has said, "The fate of the Christian church—yea, of the world—was riding in that fishing boat that night!" The very men whom Jesus had designated to be his principal heralds were absolutely without a plan for spreading the message, and were content to return to the smelly, slimy boats and "go a-fishing!" One would expect them to have spent the night in praying and planning how they might at once awaken old Capernaum with the declaration that Jesus of Nazareth had been acclaimed the Son of God by having risen from the dead.

But those seven visionless, purposeless fishermen learned the lesson that night of failure that changed their lives. They learned that when their Lord was waiting for them to "fish for men", and they were reluctant to do it, they could not prosper in the material things of life. They learned that "without him they could do nothing!" How ashamed they must have been to admit, seasoned fishermen that they were, that they had not taken a solitary fish during the whole night! With a suddenness that was startling, they came to realize that the days and nights of aimless riding the sea, without plan, goal, vision, or purpose with respect to the Lord's commandments, were forever past. Never after would they be content to go "a-fishing", but always thereafter would they be "fishers of men."

My brother, where are you tonight in relation to the Master's program, and his will for your life? Have you a plan, a program, a goal for your service, and zeal to attain it? Or, are you spending your time "a-fishing", making a living, and as a secondary interest being a nominal, half-hearted, unenthusiastic "member of the church?" If your calling is that of a Church school teacher, have you a plan for the lives in your class that extends far beyond next Sunday's recitation, and focuses on conquests for the Lord Jesus Christ through the saved and dedicated lives of your pupils?

If you are a church official, or a pastor, are you looking ahead in the administration of your church, planning, praying, studying, and inaugurating greater things for the body of Christ? Have you a vision of a larger and better church program, or are you content simply to "ride along" with present indefinite and lifeless ideas and methods?

Are we, as parents, in planning with our children for their future, giving first place to the claims of God on their lives, and their individual responsibility to him? Or, are we so preoccupied "a-fishing" that the Master's cause can suffer insofar as we are concerned?

Let us apply to our own lives this test the Christ ap-

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

MONDAY

FAMILY REUNION AT THE MOUNT OF GOD—Exod. 18:1-12. What a happy picture we have here of a family reunion, closing with solemn worship! The members of many a family would be inspired with higher ideals and nobler ambitions and challenged to keep the family name honored and respected if there was an occasional reunion at the Mount of God.

TUESDAY

SWAMPED WITH DETAILS—Exod. 18:13-24. We cannot do too much for God but we can attempt too many things. When duties begin to swamp us it is time for us to begin to question whether we are not attempting more than is for the best interest of the Kingdom and more than God intended us to do.

WEDNESDAY

SHARING SPIRITUAL PROFITS—1 Cor. 12:1-11. Spiritual gifts are given that men may profit by them, and not personally only but socially as well. He who shares the benefits of his talents most with others, profits most from them himself, and most truly follows the example of Jesus.

THURSDAY

WORKING TOGETHER—1 Cor. 12:12-21. God has made us so that we need each other. No one can get along by himself as well as he can with the help of others. By divine appointment we are "workers together" and "with God", and he who thinks himself sufficient unto himself will meet with disappointment and failure.

FRIDAY

GOD'S BUILDING MATERIALS—1 Cor. 1:21-31. God is prevented from doing what he wants to with many lives because those lives do not present the right sort of material for God's use. Self-sufficiency will not do; he needs nothing from us so much as self-abnegation and submissiveness. He needed nothing but himself and his almighty power to make a world, and he needs nothing from us but to do what he wills.

SATURDAY

WISE MASTER BUILDER—1 Cor. 3:9-15. God is the great Master Builder; he knows how to use every act and word and even the thoughts of our lives and build them into eternal structures. And we shall be the inheritors of a building not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

SUNDAY

CHRIST OUR COMMANDER—Isa. 55:4-13. Christ is our great commander, and he is a living, active leader and commander. He says, Go ye into all the world, and on his authority, we may say, as in the days of his resurrection, he goeth before you into Galilee. He still both commands and leads the way.

plied to those seven disciples on Tiberias, and discover whether we are planning, aspiring, praying and working with a vision and purpose for the cause to which we profess to have committed our lives, or whether we like them are spending "all night" in fruitless toil for the lesser things of life.

II. Is My Life Abundantly Fruitful?

It is interesting to inquire what fact led the beloved disciple to recognize the Stranger who accosted them, as "The Lord!" The little group of discouraged fishermen little expected to be discovered there by their risen Lord. By what evidence did John recognize him, when there evidently was nothing familiar about his manners, dress, or voice that suggested his identity to the other six disciples?

Mary Magdalene recognized the risen Lord by the manner in which he spoke her name. The two disciples dining at Emmaus, by the manner in which he returned thanks for the evening meal. Thomas by the gruesome wounds made by the nails and spear. But it was not until they obeyed the Stranger's instructions, had cast the net on the other side of the boat, and were tugging at it, in an effort to drag it in, that John whispered to Peter, "It is the Lord!"

To my mind, it was the weight of the net full of fish that caused John to recognize the Lord. In other words, it was the result obtained when the Master's command was explicitly obeyed. I believe in experimental religion, as well as dogmatic. If the "Stranger" had vanished immediately after John had confided his conviction to his mate, no amount of argument could ever have shaken John's belief that the friend on the shore was the Lord. He knew that no one else could make possible so remarkable a catch, after every trick of the fishermen's lore had

Like the youth born blind, whose eyes Jesus opened; while he was unable to argue fine points with the lawyers, in theology, as to whether his Benefactor was "a sinner or not", of one thing he was absolutely certain, "Whereas I was blind, now I see!"

Jesus came that we "might have life, and have it superabundantly." I am contending that if my life, or your life, is not fruitful, it is because we are not obeying our Master's directions. And, of course, if we are not obedient, we are not disciples. The second test of our discipleship is fruitfulness, for fruitfulness depends upon obedience, and mature discipleship depends on "confessing Jesus as LORD." "He that abideth in me and I in him, the same beareth much fruit—for apart from me ye can have nothing!" "If a man love me, he will keep my word!" "If ye love me ye will keep my commandments!" "He that saith 'I know him' and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him!" (1 John 2:4).

How does your life measure up under this second test? Can you experimentally recognize the Master by the weight of the "catch" you are making in "fishing for men?" Can you say with John, "Whatsoever we ask we receive of him, because we keep his commandments, and do the things that are pleasing in his sight!" (1 John 3:22). Again using the analogy of the vine, "Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit—and SO shall ye be my disciples!" If your efforts are futile, if your service is irksome, if your life is empty, better "check up" on yourself and discover whether you are "keeping his commandments." There can be no fruitful life without obedience. There can be no mature discipleship without absolute yielding to the will of God. Can you meet this test?

III. Does love for Christ prompt my service?

There are so many excellent lessons to be drawn from the Lord's interrogation of Peter; but we can stress but one. Our Lord knew the terrific struggle going on in Peter's heart between impetuosity and devotion, vacillation and penitence, discouragement and zeal. His reproofing glance toward Peter at his trial had wounded Peter to the depths. His specific directions to "tell my disciples AND Peter" of his post-resurrection plans, must have caused a lump to gather in Peter's throat and tears to trickle down his cheeks!

But here is Peter, leading six of the disciples on an excursion that again betrayed his fickleness and bewilderment. Consider what must have been the risen Lord's feelings when he heard (for of course he did hear) Peter say, "I go a-fishing!" Following the crew that night (for surely he was accompanying it) perhaps he did not hear his name mentioned, nor his commission of "So send I you" discussed! The Savior saw that he must call Peter back into line again.

How the Savior's heart must have leaped when he saw Peter bound over the side of the boat, when John whispered "It is the Lord!" and plunge through the surf to his side! Little wonder Christ asked Peter.

"What made you jump into the sea and make a dash to be first at my side? Why did you go out of Pilate's courtroom and weep bitterly? What motive caused an old man like you to run to my empty tomb? Was it love, Peter, for me, that prompted these?"

"And if it was love for me, how strong is that love? Lovest thou me more than these grimy boats, these dripping nets, these base companions of the fish mart? Lovest thou me more than the contentment that comes to you while sailing in the moonlight on these familiar waters? Is the thrill that comes with catching fish greater to you than the exaltation that comes with bringing the lost sinners unto me? Am I dearer to you than all these?"

And Peter, seeing that remonstrance was in vain, that the Lord "knew all things"—knew the fightings within for mastery—said, "Thou knowest that it is love that prompts me—that I love you more than these!"

Then, replied the Lord, "If you really love me, forsake these familiar haunts, these degrading associations, these purposeless, fruitless lapses, and shepherd my sheep! Provide food for my lambs! Don't you realize that my sheep—my precious lambs—are troubled, torn, starving, bleeding, dying?"

This third advanced test of mature discipleship is a test of motive. Are you a superintendent, a deacon, a secretary, a teacher, a giver, a leader, because it is polite, an "accommodation", your duty, because it is popular—or profitable? or because you LOVE JESUS? What motivation prompts your service? If you are serving the Master for any motive other than genuine love for him, you are not a "full-grown" "complete" disciple!

Conclusion

Let us not be content with merely meeting the kindergarten tests of discipleship. They are conclusive, but they are so inadequate! Let us aspire to be "full grown men" in the school of Christ. Let us show our advanced standing as disciples by:

1. Having a real workable program for the advancement of the section of the Master's cause to which we are applying ourselves, being certain our lives are measuring up to the will of God.

2. Being so thoroughly yielded and obedient to our Lord's commands, that our lives are abundantly fruitful.

3. Loving our Savior so supremely that our every deed and thought will be only for his glory.

Then, and then only, can we pray truly this benediction of St. Peter (1 Peter 5:10, 11).

"And the God of all grace, who called you unto his eternal glory, in Christ, after that ye have suffered a little while, shall himself perfect, establish, strengthen you! To him be the dominion, for ever and ever. Amen."

tion and agitation, I recommend the appointment of a commission of five or seven to meet with similar commissions or with representatives from all the young people's groups of the continent. It would be appropriate to designate the Extension Secretary of the International Society of Christian Endeavor as the executive secretary of this commission. I would further urge that young people be largely represented on each of these proposed commissions.

Finally, my friends, in the words of Tom Hanny, who went from the poppy field of California Christian Endeavor to his fever-laden jungle of service in Africa,—“Finally, my friends, I would leave you face to face with Jesus Christ.” I believe in youth. In a generation of moral strain more intense than any previous generation; with adult life too hurried to give adequate attention to its sons and daughters, aye and often too pleasure-bent and selfish to supply them good examples, young men and young women in ever increasing numbers are moving toward the guarded heights of Christian character. They are worthy of our confidences and they are fit to bear the work of the world. In them God has set his witness; with them the future is secure. These, the radiant and the impetuous; these, the bravehearted and daring all things—these I would leave face to face with Jesus Christ.

And, as in another time, the flower of Christianity, steel-clad, went forth to reclaim his sepulcher, let us now crusade with him, crusade to cleanse our own hearts, to capture our friends; crusade to establish liberty with law and to perfect the peace; crusade to build the new earth, to win the warless world.

Introduction

The sacred record here gives an account of the friendship of two young men. Truly more memorable and worthy of study than that of a battle. For love is better than hate. There is a story of a blind man who was asked his idea of the sun. He said he thought it was like friendship. Like the sun (1) it enlightens—in intercourse with those we love we see what was unseen before. Like the sun (2) it warms—the affections are strengthened by exercise. Like the sun (3) it gives life, causing sweet dispositions to spring up like flowers. The teacher should carefully read the whole assignment of Scripture portions of the five chapters and write out a composition of the story of Jonathan in your own words. It will help you tell it interestingly to your class. Jonathan, one of the finest characters in the Bible, was a knight above reproach, vs. 1-4. Some consider him a negative type of Christ; son of a king, v. 1; loving a lowly one, 17:58; making a covenant with that one beneath him in rank, v. 3; giving him his own robe and weapons, v. 4; Ph. 2:7, 8. Jonathan risked his life for David, 20:23; welcomed him to his place in the kingdom, 23:17; Lu. 22:28-30. All this Jesus does for us, and "exceeding abundantly" more. Eph. 3:20.—Illustrator.

How Make Friends

1. There are many ways of making friends of the ordinary type, but the friends that are true and genuine, the friends whose friendship endures, is loyal and will make sacrifices, are made by cherishing a common love for God and for each other. Alice D. Adams says, "The essence of the friendship of David and Jonathan was the fact that each of them loved God, and so it was inevitable that they should love each other." Says Alexander Whyte, "Under Samuel's ministry, Jonathan's heart had early been knit to God, and thus it was that his heart so knit itself around David's heart, in whom he found a man after God's own heart. True religion, the knowledge and the love of God in your child's heart, will compel him to seek friends outside of your door if you are without the knowledge and the love of your son's God."

2. Friendship that is worthy is based upon the qualities of goodness and the recognition of those qualities in each other. The pure soul can no more be united with the fool in mutual love and devotion than can light be united with darkness, or heat be joined with coldness and each retain their former character. Jeremy Taylor has said, "A good man is the best friend, and therefore soonest to be chosen, longest to be retained, and indeed never to be parted with, unless he cease to be that for which he was chosen."

3. Friendliness wins friends and the qualities of kindness, helpfulness and sympathy that are genuine and are permanently characteristic and are continually expressed make for a friendship that is appreciated and never wears out. Every one likes to be treated kindly; every one sees the times when he needs help; every one passes through lonely hours occasionally and craves comradeship; every one feels the need of human sympathy and the support of friendship's uplift. The way to make sure of having such friendship is to be that kind of a friend.

4. The highest friendship is based on frankness and helpfulness with regard to one's own weaknesses and shortcomings. Friendship that is blind to the faults of a friend is in danger of being broken when disillusionment comes. And the friendship that is not frank cannot be truly helpful.

Testing Friendship

"We do not know who our friends are until we have been in trouble. The cloudy day dissolves the crowd that delights in sunshine. When we have need of our friends we shall know how many friends we have. The men who call upon us in the day of trouble are the men who are born for adversity, and who are representing the genius of true friendship. Here we are brought to the Friend of sinners; nothing can change him, if we be faithful and constant in our love towards him."—Joseph Parker.

"There is such a thing as pursuing friendship—a friendship that does not forget, but follows the needy one through the lapsing years and from place to place of sojourn or confinement—and those who practice it are saving to a reckless world one of the sanctities of life."—Winfred Rhoades.

Friendship with the Master

The friendship of Jonathan and David teaches us lessons concerning the higher friendship with Jesus. First, we must be friends to him as well as he to us. He loves us, whether we do him or not; but we are not friends unless we also love him, nor can we claim the benefits of that friendship. Second, friendship with Jesus is based on worth. We love him because he is so good, so noble, so pure, so lovable. And he finds something in the poorest and weakest of

The Brethren at Cleveland

This is about the Cleveland Convention, —the International Christian Endeavor Convention. It is especially about the activities of the Brethren people at the convention. Of course there was scarcely a general session without some Brethren people in evidence, but especially were they in evidence at the Brethren Rally. This Brethren Rally was in two sections, not because the attendance was so large that we could not all be in one session but because there were so many things to talk about that we could not say them all in the time allotted for the first meeting. The first meeting was a Luncheon at the Y. M. C. A. at noon, Tuesday; 38 people were present, I believe. Brother Clarence Kolb, who is now State Christian Endeavor Secretary of Pennsylvania was presented by the Chairman, Dr. J. A. Garber, and gave a very interesting and inspiring address.

The big Fourth of July Christian Endeavor parade interfered with our program just here, and when the Chairman had made sure that the other speeches would keep till the next day and that the folks wanted to have another session we were dismissed till the next day and met in one of the small rooms at the Public Auditorium. Rev. E. M. Riddle was in charge of this meeting. There were two or three visiting people from the Church of the Brethren. We were happy that they could be with us. There were three short but inspirational addresses at this session, by the Brethren E. M. Riddle, L. R. Bradfield, Geo. S. Baer, and by the president of the Christian Endeavor Society in our Johnstown church, whose message I remember but whose name I do not recall. A very happy discussion followed the set addresses.

We are very happy to have been at the convention, and especially at the Brethren Rally. We only wish there might be a much larger attendance for the Rally at the Convention in Kansas City in 1929.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNIFIER

The most impressive lesson of the London Christian Endeavor Convention was this: the unity of the church of Christ.

Here were representatives of thirty nations and more than that number of denominations, met together in the closest brotherhood.

The world is torn by suspicion, controversies, selfish ambition, grasping greed; but this world of Christian Endeavor is at glorious peace.

The League of Nations still lacks some of the leading nations, and some of its components threaten to withdraw, but this Christian league is conterminous with the world, and all its members are in it to stay.

In Christian Endeavor no one seeks his own, but each his brother's good. In honor these Endeavorers prefer one another. One is their Master, even Christ, and all they are brethren.

The demonstration of this blessed fact of unity in Christ was of itself enough to justify the London Christian Endeavor Convention. If Christian Endeavor societies and unions did nothing else, their standing evidence of the oneness of believers would warrant their continued existence and ensure their enthusiastic progress.—Christian Endeavor World.

Dodging a duty causes great ingenuity in the invention of excuses. Apologizing for absenteeism one man says: "My parents did not teach me to go to church when I was a child and so I never got the habit." Another says: "My parents took me to church every Sunday and I got enough when a child." But a real man faces things for himself.—The Christian Evangelist.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

(Topic for July 31)

A Visit to Negro Neighborhoods I John 2:7-11

When Eliza Scott was a very little colored girl, she began running errands and doing every kind of work that she was able to do for the white people. Soon a wonderful thing happened. A kind white lady became interested in the little girl and decided to take her home with her to Indiana. So Eliza left her wee little dirty home down in the Southland and went home with the kind lady. From that time on Eliza lived just as you live. She went to school. She kept clean. She dressed neatly. She was so sweet and polite that many people learned to like her.

So the years passed and Eliza grew up. Many times she thought of her mother and the little home that she had left. She wondered if her sisters and brothers were missing her. Often she talked to the lady who was taking care of her about her little home down South. So one summer day, when Eliza was out of school and felt that there was nothing that she needed to do for a few weeks, she said, "Mother Brown, I wonder if you would care if I went down South for a short while. I want to find out what has happened to my mother and my sisters and brothers. I want to see the house that I was born in."

Mrs. Brown did not say anything for just a little bit. She was thinking to herself her very unhappy. She does not realize "If I let Eliza go down there it will make what kind of a dirty little home she did have. Yet she will not be satisfied without ever going to see her folks." So she said, "Yes, Eliza, you may go, but remember that I love you and will be waiting anxiously for you to come back."

Next day Eliza left. She rode on the train for a long, long time. It took her a day and a half to reach the little town where she had been born. When she got off of the train she got into a taxi that was at the depot and told him to take her to Mrs. Druscilla Scotts. She thought to herself, "Now I know that mother is poor, so I must not expect to see a very nice house."

The taxi man drove and drove. They went through a beautiful street where all the houses were lovely and Eliza said to herself, "Maybe mother has earned enough money that she has been able to buy one of these houses." But they drove on by.

Then they came to a street where the houses were moderately nice but not so expensive as the others had been, and Eliza thought, "I guess mother couldn't earn enough to live in one of those expensive houses, so she is living in one of these." But the driver took her on past all of them.

Then they came to a street where the houses were very tiny, but they were clean and nice looking and Eliza thought, "Poor mother, she had to work hard but she couldn't buy a big house. She had to buy one of these tiny little places!" But they drove right on past all of them.

The street became rough and ugly. The houses became dirtier and dirtier looking. There were dirty little children playing around and women in dirty ragged dresses standing in the doorways and Eliza thought, "Oh, surely I never lived in such a place as this." But the driver stopped in front of one of the dirtiest in the whole street and Eliza got out. There were tears in her eyes and she had a horribly sick feeling when she realized that her own mother was living in a place like that. A dirty little girl came to the door as Eliza entered and said, "Mother is not here. She is washing for Mrs. Smith."

Eliza did not know what to do. The house was so dirty that she was afraid to sit down and yet this was the place where she had once lived. She knew that she would not want to sleep in a place like that or eat in a place like that. The only thing that she wanted to do was to fly back to Mother Brown and stay with her. But she did not do that. She said to herself, "These are my people and I must do something for them."

She stayed right there in that dirty little house that made her feel so sick and terrible and she began doing things for them. She taught her brothers and sisters to be clean and polite. Day after day she worked and when fall came and it was time for her to go back to Mrs. Brown and to school, she left a clean home and her mother and sisters and brothers promised that they would keep clean and do things as she had asked them until she came back again.

As Eliza went back on the train she thought to herself. "These people are mine even if they are poor, and I am so glad I can help them. Oh, how I wish that there were a whole lot of girls and boys too who would be willing to show the poor colored people how to live decently."

A Testimony to Answered Prayer

Dear Friends in the Homeland:

I noticed in the Prayer Guide of The Woman's Outlook for the month of May, the following request for prayer for the 22nd of May—"Pray for the work in South America, especially at Realico, that is being cared for by our missionaries and native helpers." Now the point that is interesting to me is this. We had become quite discouraged with our work in that city because the family in whose house we were holding our regular meetings was compelled, because of lack of employment, to move to a distant ranch, and it seemed almost impossible for us to find a suitable location to hold our meetings. Because of the high rent it was impossible for us to consider the two or three halls that were available. We had made two trips to Realico for the express purpose of finding a location for our meetings, but we were defeated both times. So on May 21st, while the brethren in the homeland were praying for peace and joy and usefulness for the large number who have recently been converted in South America, and just the day before the brethren were praying for Realico especially, we went forth for the third time to search for a hall. This time, I am happy to write, we were successful. The Lord was very good to us and we received during this dispensation of grace a promise that is especially for the Kingdom age. Isa. 65:24. "And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." On reaching Realico we met a policeman, whose family had been attending our meetings, and he gave us the information that led to the renting of a nice room centrally located at a small rent. The room will hold about seventy-five people. The Christian Endeavor society at Renanco has taken a great interest in this new work. The society voted to buy the material for ten benches. The benches will seat five people each. So this gives us a seating capacity of fifty to begin with. The president of our Christian Endeavor society, Brother Carlos Salimena, made the benches. He did splendid work, and we are proud of this improvement.

Last Thursday, June 10, five young men from Huinea Renanco went over to assist in the inauguration of our new location. We had attractive circulars printed inviting the people to our services, and we went from door to door distributing these, together with appropriate tracts. Generally speaking, we were well received by the public. Many of the children that had formerly attended our meetings, when they received our announcements cried, "O, Mama! O Mama! The missionaries have come back. O, we are so glad! We will come to the meeting without failure."

The first night, even though it was quite cold and threatening rain, we had a good attendance. Many people were standing in the doorway, even out into the street listening in. The attention was very good considering the people with whom we were dealing. One young man came into the meeting smoking a cigarette, but he soon discovered that that wasn't the proper thing to do, and the cigarette disappeared. At first two young ladies seemed to think that they had as much right to speak as the speaker, but after being called down they gave better attention, and we closed the meeting with much interest and enthusiasm.

Please pray that the Lord will give us victory and help us not to make any mistakes. I believe that if we pray and work hard and give faithful testimony that the Lord will give us many souls for our hire. I feel that this is a great opportunity for us. Realico is a good size town. It is growing. And as far as we know we are the only representatives of the Most High God in that city. Even the Catholics have not entered that place to date. I understand the reason the Catholics have not entered that town is because of the hardness of the hearts of the people. It has been said that if a priest entered Realico the people would murder him.

However, I feel that that statement is an exaggeration. Nevertheless, I know that human life has very little value in this heathen land. I also know that the Word of God says that, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." We are confident that our workers give better testimonies than the priests; therefore, we shall not fear what men shall do unto us. Our hope is in the Lord, and he will do what is best for his own. All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth.

Pioneering in French Equatorial Africa

By Florence N. Gribble, M. D., in "The Missionary Review of the World."*

When Stanley, whose birthplace had been Wales and whose adopted country was America, was exploring the Congo for the King of Belgium, a young Italian named De Brazza was also exploring for his adopted country, France. Reaching Stanley Pool first, he claimed the country on the north and west for the land of his adoption.

French Equatorial Africa has today an area of approximately 700,000 square miles and comprises four districts, Gaboon, the Middle or Moyen Congo District, the new familiar district of Oubangi-Chari-Tchad, and Lake Tchad military district.

The capital of this immense territory, Brazzaville, is a beautiful and attractive city. The ornamental palms and fragrant flowers enhance the artistic beauty of the landscape. Notwithstanding these facts, the white population scarcely exceeds five hundred, and consists principally of officials, traders, army officers and their wives, with a small missionary population.

The native population of French Equatorial Africa is varied. Tribes of mixed blood inhabit the coast regions. One has the desert tribes in the north and the Bantu tribes of the lower Congo, including the well-known Bakongo and Bateke. Yet there is little congestion in French African population for the sum total of all these tribes aggregate not more than ten million. If the population of these vast territories were equally distributed, it would average only fifteen to the square mile.

One of the most densely populated regions of these vast domains is found in the Oubangi-Chari-Tchad district, lying east of the Camerouns, north of the Belgian Congo, and west of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan. In this district are some members of the Bantu groups, but for the most part the population consists of mixed blood from the Arab and Berber strains. Especially is this true in the eastern extremity of the district where are found the Zande, whose prowess is so well known, both in conquest of other tribes and in hunting.

The French African native is no longer a cannibal because cannibalism is under the ban of French law, death being the punishment of every native convicted of eating human flesh. But witchcraft, fetishism, secret societies and many other customs of tribal life hold the heathen native in their sway. Mohammedanism has gained the tribes of the north, and Roman Catholicism has made inroads along the Congo and Oubangi Rivers.

The officials are respected by the people and the French language is taught to the native. While religious services may be conducted in the language of the people, yet the schools give instruction in the French language only. Missionary schools come under the same official regulations as government schools, and teachers must obtain the "Superior" Certificate from the "Alliance Francaise" in Paris,—the recognized school for the preparation of foreigners desiring to teach in French colonies.

The government is carefully administered. The chief executive is the governor-general who resides at Brazzaville, and who is assisted by lieutenant-governors, one residing in Gaboon, one in Moyen Congo, one in Oubangi-Chari-Tchad, and one in the Lake Tchad Military District. The lieutenant-governors, thus presiding over their respective provinces, are assisted by administrators, presiding over subdivisions of the provinces known as circonscriptions or districts. Each of these administrators is assisted by black soldiers or police, many of whom are recruited from Senegal.

So far as possible, even with this efficient organization, the French colonial government respects the tribal laws, and the administrators work through the native chiefs, appointing, guiding, directing, removing them, but permitting them to employ their faculties and talents, and as far as possible respecting their inheritance. The native is subject to tax, and herein lies a large part of government revenue. The rate

He led the pioneer party of the Mission Oubangi-Chari, and laid down his life in establishing the first Station. Without his courageous faith and sacrificial labor, this needy field would not now be in process of evangelization.)

ground. Their place was surrounded by the water, but happily it did not get into the buildings. G. E. D.

ANOTHER SUCCESSFUL MEETING AT OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

The fourth meeting since coming on this field is now history. Brother R. Paul Miller, though compelled to make numerous changes in his plans, was finally able to arrange to hold this meeting. We were afraid for awhile, though we had planned it for a year and a half that we might be obliged to cancel it. The meeting started out June fourteenth with a large attendance and the crowds were good until the last. There were only two nights when the house was not comfortably filled and many times uncomfortably. One night was when the weather was exceptionally hot and the other was when the rain fell in torrents. God brought a blessing the rainy night when a young man came forward who may sometime become a servant in the Brethren pulpit. There were a number of nights when people were turned away for lack of seating room. A campaign has been held here each year and we have taken in members right along during intervals between meetings. The field is being steadily worked and members are continually being added, but the numerical results of the meeting were thirty-four. Some of these are reconsecrations but the majority of them came for the first time. God has given us some splendid material in these people and the most of them will unite with the church.

During the four meetings, one hundred and thirty-five people have taken a stand, and of this number sixty three came during the first meeting Brother Miller held here. This was not a campaign for numbers and neither were the bars let down. Brother Miller preached the Whole Gospel, plain, forceful and uncompromisingly. Besides the numerical results there was much accomplished otherwise in the holding up of a high standard of Christian life. The Oak Hill Brethren church stands for the Whole Gospel and will continue to do so if it stands alone. Brother Miller has won the hearts of the Oak Hill people because of his stand on the fundamentals. People from the other churches of the town voluntarily acclaimed him the best of his line to have conducted a campaign here. Much visiting was done and many homes were opened to us with invitations that could not be accepted because of the lack of time. This was our third campaign together and we anticipate if the Lord tarries, as many more. The best wishes of not only the Brethren people here but the community as a whole go with Brother Miller back to his labors in Philadelphia. We are looking for his coming again though when the new building is completed and ready for dedication. This is our next large task, and one in which we desire the prayers of the brotherhood.

The District conference came the first week of the meeting here, we had five at the conference. We are now planning a delegation for National conference and hope to have the largest yet this year unless something should intervene between now and time to start. Ere this will be in print we will be on our vacation that the people here granted us, and which will be spent in Florida and the Gulf States. We covet an interest of the children of God that members might be continually added to his church.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

THE REVIVAL AT OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

In great weakness of body and helplessness in the spirit we made the trip to Oak Hill to fulfill a promise made over a year and a half ago to hold a meeting for these good people. We found the ground well prepared by the faithful work of the pastor in the months and weeks which preceded. We had excellent attendance and attention from the very first night. For the first week or so we gave messages on prophetic truth, and then for the second and third weeks we turned to straight evangelism.

It is not very often that we find fault with the weather in a revival meeting, for we have found that if you have the interest of the people they will come no matter what the weather or business conditions are. But this time, it figured remarkably in the result. The first two weeks were fine, but the third week began with a hot wave that simply melted folks down. The crowds dropped away to nearly nothing. Then came a cooling storm (and by the way that was some storm!) and the last Sunday, was a good day. But the hot wave coming just at the time when ordinarily a revival is reaping its harvest, seemed to greatly hinder the meeting. But we cannot say that the storm prevented any work that our God would have done for he is the God of the storms. "He can work and who can hinder?" But of course in the flesh we look to circumstances perhaps more than we ought to.

The church in Oak Hill has a fine program ahead and have the spirit for accomplishing it as well. A new church building will rise on the site of the old one before another twelve months roll by. This is the climax of the fine progress which has characterized this work since the present pastor, Freeman Ankrum, has come on the field. He is a sober and concrete builder of churches and has won the esteem of the entire city in his work. There are great things ahead for the church here if they follow faithfully their leader, and we trust they will have the loyalty and wisdom to do so. The membership includes some mighty fine Christian laymen who are not of the kind to let opportunities slip.

We not only recovered most of our ill health, but also put on several pounds of weight, due to the wonderful hospitality of these people. We could not ask to find more open hearted people with genuine friendship than are in this place. May the Lord bless them all and lead them all until he comes.

his disciples to love, and possibilities of greater worth; but only as they grow like him can there be the truest mutual friendship. John the lovable was "the disciple whom Jesus loved." Third, friendship with Jesus implies self-sacrifice. Jonathan cheerfully relinquishes his hopes of his father's kingdom for his friend David. Jesus left his heavenly kingdom to come down to us, and he died upon the cross that we might be kings and priests in his Father's kingdom. We, on our part, are to show our love by sacrifices for him and his cause. Fourth, the tendency of friendship with Jesus is that we become like him. "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Meditating on his character and goodness, loving the good shining in his character, we are conformed to his image. Fifth, friendship with Jesus is full of refreshment, courage, strength, and cheer. Sixth, it leads us to love all for whom he died and whom he loves. Seventh, it will endure forever.—The Illustrated Quarterly.

Wednesday Evening, 7 P. M.

The evening session was opened by singing, "The Church in the Wildwood" and "Sweet Bye and Bye." Devotions were led by Rev. Kiddle, former pastor of the Linwood church. He read the 8th chapter of Romans. Following the scripture reading all worshipped God in prayer, led by Brother Riddle. We were favored at this time by a solo from little Miss Reba Munch of Washington, D. C. This solo was a preface to Rev. Rohart's delightful and inspirational vocal selections. Following this Rev. Rohart spoke on the subject of "Prayer."

He said in brief, What are we doing with our spare time? Do we take time to be holy? The earnest prayer of a righteous man avails with God. We ought to wait in the presence of God. The basis of all prayer is union with the Lord. Prayer is the pulse of the Christian. The purpose of prayer is to glorify the Father in the Son. Following his very impressive talk Brother Rohart sang "There will be no Disappointments There."

At this time we had the privilege to listen to Brother Bell, a representative of our college and publishing company. He said, in effect, that the Brethren Publishing Company and the college at Ashland have both grown tremendously in recent years. So far as my knowledge goes the College and the guiding forces of the Brethren church are free from radical modernism. The only place where we can get trained men for our church is from our college. We are in this endowment campaign because we are forced by the State of Ohio to increase our endowment to a half million or lose our standing as an accredited college. Many of our people own fine radios and automobiles and then give ten dollars to the Lord and think they are very charitable. You'll get out of life what you put in it, that is one of God's great principles of life. Dr. Bell told us that over $110,000.00 of the $200,000.00 allotted to the church, has been raised.

Following this address a mission play was presented by the Linwood Missionary Society. The play brought to us a vital message of the importance of missions in an impressive manner. Mrs. T. Glenn Locke followed with an impressive reading which was very apropos. Benediction by Rev. E. L. Miller.

Thursday Morning, 8:30 A. M.

Devotions were conducted by Dr. G. C. Carpenter. A selection of missionary nature was read responsively and followed with prayer. Two additional lay delegates were reported by the credential committee, making a grand total of 43. Committee on conference location reports the selection of St. James as the place for conference to be held next year. Report accepted. Moved and carried that conference be held at the same time (About June 14th) next year if agreeable to the St. James church. Statistician's report was read and accepted. The following report of the resolutions committee was read:

We, the members of the Resolution Committee beg to submit the following resolutions:

Whereas the Linwood congregation has spared nothing to entertain this conference with utmost cordiality;

Whereas the splendid interest and cooperation of the entertaining pastor was responsible for much of the success of the conference.

Whereas the conference enjoyed the edifying and inspiring addresses of speakers from out of the district.

Whereas, the pageant presented by the ladies of the Linwood congregation was a very excellent example of what may be done by pageantry to teach the needs of missions and to arouse interest in the missionary societies of our church.

Whereas, a number of the brethren of the district and elsewhere are ill at this time and were remembered in prayer.

Whereas the addresses of the conference's sessions pointed out the necessity of adhering to Brethren doctrines and principles.

Whereas, our moderator set before the conference the task of the church in its relation to the world today and particularly in America.

Whereas, a spirit of love and cooperation pervaded the whole conference, reminding us of the Psalmist's saying, "How excellent it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

Be it therefore resolved—

That the conference by a rising vote declare its appreciation of the most splendid hospitality of the Linwood congregation.

That the conference go on record as being very grateful for the addresses of the special speakers from outside the district who gave their time and abilities to promote the Kingdom of God at this conference.

That those of the congregation who presented the pageant be especially thanked and their excellent example be followed in other churches of this district.

That we remember in prayer those brethren who are ill.

That the doctrines and principles of the Brethren church be duly emphasized in preaching.

That the church strive to continue to progress in the good fight, keeping the faith and the spirit of love and cooperation characterizing this 40th conference.

Report accepted and resolutions adopted.

Report of committee on change of name of conference. The committee recommends to the next conference for final adoption that the name of this conference be The Southeastern District. The adoption of the resolution was ordered by the conference. The resolution reads as follows:

We recommend that article 1, section 1, of the Constitution be amended to read as follows: This conference shall be known as the Southeastern District Conference of the Brethren church and shall comprise Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and North Carolina.

The conference treasurer reported a small balance which was ordered by the conference to be turned over to the Ministerial Aid Fund.

The report of the Ministerial Aid Fund was read and received.

A resolution was offered by Dr. Tombaugh to instruct the treasurer of the Ministerial Aid Board to especially urge the payment of old outstanding notes. The resolution was adopted. The ordination of Rev. Emerson Rohart was reported. Brother John Locke at this time addressed the conference on the subject of Religious Education. He said, in effect: In many cases religion is not mentioned in our schools and thus we teach irreligion by exclusion. The Association for the Advancement of Atheism is trying hard to drive out the influence of the church in our schools. We need to use real pedagogy in our Sunday schools. It is a lamentable fact that the church can't use such powerful agencies as the press and motion pictures to disseminate the Word of God. We should educate our emotions as well as our intellect. The church's most important business is religious education.

Discussion followed led by Rev. Miller. There were many complimentary responses to Brother Locke's very fine address. It was moved and carried to have Brother Locke's manuscript published in the Evangelist.

At this time the general conference was resolved into various departmental conferences.

Thursday afternoon was given over to various recreational activities.

Thursday Evening, 7:30 P. M.

Devotions were conducted by Rev. L. H. Brumbaugh. Several inspirational hymns were sung. The 37th Psalm was read responsively. Following this Brother Brumbaugh read the 9th chapter of Acts and followed with prayer. Very delightful special music was rendered by the Linwood choir. The message of the evening was delivered by Rev. T. C. Lyon. His general theme was, "Visions." He told of the four visions of Isaiah.

1. A vision of the Lord in his glory appeared to the prophet first. This is the first experience in the lives of those who serve the Lord. This leads directly to the question, "What would you have me do?"

2. A vision of his own sin and unworthiness came next.

This vision is a natural sequence after the glorified vision of God.

3. The third vision was one of cleansing. If there is a real desire for cleansing it will somehow come, for he that seeketh will find.

4. The last vision was one of service.

In conclusion, we might as a people have this very real vision of God, in his glory and carry it home and give it to others, for it is only after such a vision that real service can be rendered. It is worse to have had a vision and not lived up to it than never to have had a vision at all. We must put the ideas which we have received at this conference into effect.

The closing hymn was "Take My Life and Let It Be."

Closing prayer and benediction by Rev. J. I. Hall.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

WALTON-ECHELBERGER—At noon on June 15th, 1927, Rev. George Walton and Miss Laura Echelberger were united in Christian marriage at the home of the bride's parents, County Treasurer and Mrs. H. E. Echelberger, Ashland, Ohio. The groom is the youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Walton of Fremont, Ohio. His brother Frank sang two beautiful solos and his other brother, Rev. B. A. Walton, assisted the writer with the double ring service. Miss Mabel Zehner played the wedding march. Both of the contracting parties are graduates of Ashland College. Mrs. Walton enjoys the distinction of having been a John Lichty scholar, and has served as an efficient public school teacher and principal. Mr. Walton, too, has been successfully engaged in teaching during recent years. They went immediately to Roanoke, Virginia where Brother Walton is serving as the summer supply pastor of the First Brethren church. We join their many friends in wishing these excellent young people the choicest blessings of life. J. A. GARBER.

LECKEY-LEIDY—Miss Ruth Leidy and Donald Leckey were united in the bonds of holy matrimony at the home of the bride's parents, on Tuesday evening, June 21, 1927. Both of these young people are members of the Brethren church. Mr. Leckey is a member of the First church Johnstown, and Mrs. Leckey is a member of the Oneumach church. They have the best wishes of a large circle of friends. Ceremony by the writer. AUSTIN R. STALEY.

CRAIG SUMMERS At the home of the undersigned at Rackett, W. Va., on Saturday evening, June 18th, 1927, Mr. LeRoy C. Craig and Miss Delphia Summers of Burnt House, W. Va., were united in the bonds of holy matrimony.

The groom is a member of the Mt. Olive Brethren church. The best wishes of their many friends accompany them. May peace and prosperity accompany them to their journey's end, and the overshadowing of an all-wise Providence keep them faithful in their obligations to each other and their Master, till he comes. N. D. WRIGHT.

LIVINGSTON-JOHNSTON—On Tuesday morning, June seventh, Mr. Russell W. Livingston and Miss Alma Johnston were united in marriage at the parsonage of the First Brethren church, Fremont, Ohio, by the undersigned. The bride is a daughter of David Johnston of Mt. Etna, Iowa and a niece of Mrs. Henderson. Both bride and groom were students at Ashland College. They will be at home near Nova, Ohio. May happiness and blessings be theirs. S. C. HENDERSON.

SCHAFER-HOSTETTLER—At the Lewis Hostettler home, near Johnstown, Pa., the undersigned solemnized a marriage ceremony that united two of our most promising young people, both from fine old Brethren stock and of our stable old Pennsylvania Dutch ancestry. Brother Schaffer was just graduated from the Seminary and goes to Hamlin, Kansas as the pastor of our church there. Sister Hostettler, a teacher in the Windber, Pa. schools and an Ashland graduate, will make a worthy helpmate in the pastorate.

The attendants were Raymond Gingrich, a fellow student of the groom, and Rhoda Hostettler, a sister of the bride.

A large number of relatives and friends witnessed the ceremony, after which a wedding breakfast was served. The young people left immediately upon an eastern wedding tour, after which they will take up their residence in Hamlin. Our prayers and best wishes accompany them in their new life. GEORGE H. JONES.

WRIGHT-NORTHCUTT In a newly furnished home ready to begin housekeeping, the pastor united in the bonds of holy matrimony, Sister Vivian Northcutt and Mr. Walter Wright of Muncie, Indiana. The bride has been one of our finest young people and carries into her new home the best wishes of a host of friends. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends. The couple were attended by a sister of the bride, Miss Hazel Northcutt, and Albert Pullen. GEORGE H. JONES.

TOOLEY-SIMMERMAN—Brother Walter Tooley and Miss Margaret Summerman were united in marriage by the pastor of the Muncie church, at the parsonage. The groom is a member of one of our faithful families here. A small group of relatives witnessed the ceremony, after which the young people left for a honeymoon trip. They will make their home in Muncie, where the groom is employed. Our best wishes accompany them in their new life. GEORGE H. JONES.

IN THE SHADOW

MILLER—David Miller, son of Henry Miller, was born August 1, 1856, near Louisville, Ohio, died June 17, 1927, aged 70 years, 10 months and 16 days.

He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Seefong, February 23, 1882. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, Mrs. Wilda Lotz, and Mrs. Clara Moul, one son, Henry, all of Canton, Ohio; three brothers and two sisters.

He was baptized and received into the Brethren church at Louisville, Ohio, May 28, 1889 by Elder Josiah Keim.

He lived many years in Canton, where he died.

Funeral services in the Louisville Brethren church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Porter, pastor of the Louisville Brethren church. ALVIN BYERS.

SNYDER—Sister Amanda Snyder, life long member of the First Brethren church at Louisville, Ohio, departed from this life on Saturday, April 16, 1927. The funeral services were conducted from the church by the pastor, R. F. Porter.

LESH—Brother John R. Lesh died at his home in Canton, Ohio, on Sunday evening, June 19, 1927, having attained the age of 75 years. Brother Lesh was a member of the Louisville Brethren church, from which church the funeral services were held in charge of the pastor, R. F. Porter.

GILBERT—Anna M., late of Farmersville, Ohio, was born in the county in which she died, December 13, 1840, and died at the home in which she had lived for many years, June 6, 1927, aged 86 years, 5 months and 24 days.

She was married to Joshua Gilbert, December 24, 1860, and to them were born four sons, all of whom survive her. Her husband passed to his reward, seven years ago, and since that time, she has remained in the old home, with the youngest of her sons, Ward, who will miss her perhaps more than any one, because they two lived alone since the loss of her husband, and neither have ever had any other home. A foster daughter, Hattie, had also gone before.

She, with her husband, were charter members of the Brethren church at Farmersville, and was among its most loyal members and supporters, so long as it was maintained, and since its disbanding they found places of worship in the adjoining congregations at Gratis, West Alexandria and New Lebanon. They were Brethren to the core, and remained so unto the end.

The Gilbert home was the preachers' home, during all of the years of the Farmersville congregation, and it was thus that the writer came into it, thirty-five years ago. And my estimates of that home was and is, that it was one of the most nearly ideal homes I have ever known. Josh Gilbert was a wonderful father, holding to the last the unswerving love and devotion of his sons. The mother too was a chum of her children, as was indicated in a letter written to me by the son, Ward, only a few weeks before her death. He said she talked of her early departure with as much composure as if she were planning a trip to the home of a friend, and added, "You may, perhaps imagine what that means to me, for she and I have been great pals for all these years." No mother could ask for a finer compliment.

The funeral service of this splendid woman was very largely attended, being conducted in the family home, with interment in Lower Twin cemetery, where the body was laid to rest beside the husband who had preceded her. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Brethren Beardsley of Dayton, and King of New Lebanon.

MARTIN SHIVELY.

EMMERT—On June 7, 1927, the oldest member of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, Maryland, familiarly known as "Aunt Jane", went home to glory. She was a good woman, a faithful friend, a loyal Christian. She was a charter member of this church. God blessed her with many years, being in her 95th year at the time of her home-going. The funeral was in charge of her pastor, assisted by Dr. J. M. Tombaugh and Dr. J. Y. Irwin.

G. C. CARPENTER.

BAER—On June 11, 1927, the oldest member of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, Maryland, Miss Anna Baer, familiarly known as "Aunt Ann", went to be with her Lord. She held the title of the oldest member only four days. At the time of her death she was in her 89th year. She became a Christian at the age of 86 and her faith never wavered. She was kind-hearted and loved her church. Funeral service was conducted by her pastor.

G. C. CARPENTER.

DIXON—Mrs. Rachel Stutzman-Dixon, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Stutzman, was born June 6, 1872, and died at the Mercy Hospital, Johnstown, Pa., February 19, 1927, aged 54 years, 8 months and 13 days. Death was due to pneumonia. Mrs. Dixon was a patient sufferer throughout her long sickness. She was a member of the Third Brethren church, Johnstown. Deceased is survived by the following brothers—John, Daniel, David, Hiram, Louis and Charles, and the following sisters—Barbara Staumhaugh, Sadie Adams, Annie Murphy; also one son, Wilbur and one daughter, Reulah and three grandchildren.

We commit all things unto him who doeth all things well. Funeral services conducted by her pastor.

JOS. L. GINGRICH.

SHEARER—J. Melvin Shearer, son of John and Rosella Glass Shearer, was born November 17, 1874, and died at Brooklyn, New York, March 9, 1927, aged fifty-three years. Mr. Shearer grew to manhood in and around Johnstown, Pa. While in Johnstown he was an attendant of the Lutheran church. Death was due to blood poison which terminated a brief illness of but eight weeks. Deceased is survived besides his wife, May Shugart Shearer, by his mother, one son, T. Johnson, Brooklyn, N. Y.; one daughter, Mrs. Matthews J. Hall, Cleveland, Ohio; two grandchildren, one brother, M. D. Shearer, also a host of friends both at Johnstown and Brooklyn. Services by the writer. JOS. L. GINGRICH.

SNAPP—Elizabeth Ellen Snapp, eldest daughter of the eight children of Joel and Eliza Detrick, was born February 9, 1829, near Gretna, Ohio, where she peacefully passed out of this life, June 4, 1927, aged 88 years, five months and four days, having been an invalid for 19 years. She united in marriage with Samuel Snapp, January 5th, 1865, her husband departing this life September 10, 1909. To this union were born six children: Joseph William, Elmer Franklin, Mary Eliza, Minnie F. and Daisy B. Snapp, and Mrs. James Thatcher. Only the latter three remain, together with five grandchildren and two brothers to mourn her departure of this life. Services at the Gretna Brethren church conducted by her pastor, the undersigned, and burial in the Huber cemetery. FRANK GEHMAN.

GALL—Alva Gilbert Gall, son of Samuel and Susan Gall, was born near Glenford, Ohio, March the fourth, 1875 and departed this life April 13, 1927.

He was one of the faithful leading members of the Glenford church. He held a position of trust and he is already greatly missed by the pastor and members.

He died quite suddenly. He was working with a new team of horses when one of the horses kicked him in the side. He suffered from this kick twelve hours and died. The entire community was shocked by such an untimely death.

He leaves his dear wife and a son. These two good people, who are bearing their cross and remaining true to their calling, need our prayers.

Services were conducted by the writer at the Glenford church. B. F. OWEN.

SWARTZ—Emma Swartz, faithful member of the First Brethren church of Ashland, Ohio, was born January 2nd, 1856, and lived her allotted years of three score and ten. Married to Wm. B. Swartz December 31st, 1884, who preceded her to the Spirit world thirty-three years ago, she became the mother of four children, all of whom survive her, with four grandchildren, two sisters and one brother. Her daughter, Zella, is a faithful member of our church, also.

The deceased united with the Christian church at an early age and had always been an earnest and faithful church worker. For the past 30 years, she had been affiliated with the First Brethren church and took an active interest in the work of the W. C. T. U. and the Missionary societies. She had a wide circle of friends in Ashland and Wayne counties who knew her as a splendid Christian woman and a fine neighbor.

Great hanks of flowers, gifts of her neighbors and friends, told of her love of the beautiful as well as of her daily testimony for her Lord and Master who has released her from the torments of shaking paralysis, to give her rest with the people of God and a reward for faithful service and testimony.

Funeral services by the undersigned, assisted by Dr. J. Allen Miller. CHARLES A. BAME.

IF WE BELIEVED IN GOD

By Jessie W. Gibbs, Villisca, Iowa

If we believed in God, there would be light
Upon our pathway in the darkest night.
If we believed in God, there would be power
To foil the tempter in the sorest hour.
If we believed in God, there would be peace
In this world's warfare, ever to increase.
If we believed in God, there would be joy
Even in tears, that nothing could destroy.
If we believed in God, there would be love
To heal all wounds and lift the world above.
Lord Christ, be near us, that, beholding thee,
We may believe in God and be set free!

"Ye believe in God;
believe also in ME."

"I that speak unto thee am HE."

The Question of Sunday Games

The question of Sunday games is ever with us. Should Sunday be turned over to the playing of games? What should the Christian's attitude be towards Sunday recreational activities? In one community it is the question of Sunday baseball. In another, it is golf. In another, the maintenance of a commercialized swimming pool. Whatever the activity under question, the issues involved are practically the same. The arguments produced in one community are very much like those of every other community. Neither do they change much from year to year. Therefore what Dr. Charles E. Jefferson, that consecrated, keenly spiritual and fearless preacher of Broadway Tabernacle, New York, said last summer in his metropolitan pulpit concerning Sunday golf is equally true this summer and in every community in the country where golf is played on Sunday. And what he said regarding golf, could be said, so far as the underlying principles are concerned, of any other community sport with only a slight change of terminology. We therefore commend his words as peculiarly timely and searching and trust our readers will think the matter through carefully and sincerely. Dr. Jefferson said:

"A practical question much debated of late is the propriety of Sunday golf. The argument for Sunday golf is this: 'I am in an office or store six days of the week. I go early and I come home late. I have no chance for exercise. I do not get enough of the open air. In order to keep up my health I need to spend Sunday on the golf links. By playing golf on Sunday I keep myself fit for my work.'

"The weak point in the argument lies in the constant repetition of the first personal pronoun singular. It is all I from beginning to end. The whole problem is dealt with from the egotistic standpoint. He must pitch his argument to the key of the Lord's Prayer, in which all the pronouns are plural. A man cannot find out what is allowable on the Sabbath simply by consulting his own physical needs. He is not living on a desert island. We New Yorkers are living on an island which has a population of millions. A man here is under obligation to ask himself, what is best for the whole city? In what direction should my influence run? On which side should my example count?

"He is under bonds to take into account the other man. If he is a golfer he must not forget his caddy. To be sure the caddy is only a boy, but a full grown man should not consider a boy beneath his notice. Men in the days of Moses were mindful of the rights even of beasts. A caddy works. It is not play to look for somebody else's golf balls and to trudge several miles with a bag of golf clubs on one's back. The caddy does not work on Sunday for the fun of it, but for the money he gets out of it. The golf player must therefore ask himself if it is a manly thing to make some one else work on Sunday that he may play.

"The business man needs air, but American boys need things also. Is the influence of the golf player on the caddy a wholesome one? The caddy looks up to the man whose clubs he carries. The golfer is to him a gentleman, a man of position and means, a leader whose conduct it is safe to imitate. No man can rightly play golf on Sunday without considering the welfare of his caddy, and not of his caddy only, but of all the caddies in the city and country. It is said that there are now over a hundred thousand caddies on the golf links of this country every Sunday and a man must ask himself whether he cares to increase the number.

"But there are other men besides the caddies who are involved. If play on the golf links is continuous, the work upon them must be continuous also. The greens and trees must be looked after every day. To be sure the men who do this are usually foreigners but foreigners are men, and even the Mosaic legislation was careful of their interests. Along with these men one must consider the men who keep the club house open, and also the men, the chauffeur, or railroad employees, who carry the golfer to the links, a considerable company they form when one gets them altogether. Of course a business man needs exercise, but his fellow men also have their needs and these needs of theirs are not to be lightly ignored.

"But we are not done yet. If golf is allowable on Sunday, then tennis is, and so are baseball and basketball, and football, and bowling and the other games which our generation is fond of. You cannot make a distinction between golf and other games. If it is wise to play golf on Sunday, it is wise to play all games and if it is proper for one man to play, it is proper for all men to play; and so you come at last face to face with this momentous question: Would it be a good thing for the city, the commonwealth and the Republic, if half the people played every Sunday and the other half worked in order that they might play? That is a question which a golf player is obliged to answer before he earns his right to spend his Sunday on the links. He no doubt needs air, but society also needs air, the air which blows down from the mountains of God. He needs physical exercise, but society also has its imperious needs. It needs to exercise those higher faculties of mind and heart which keep humanity alive. The Sabbath was made for man. It was made for the whole city, the whole nation, the whole human race. If we are faithful to the trust committed to us we shall 'remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy,' and never by our example shall we weaken its influence over the lives of others, or cripple it in its great work of heartening mankind along the difficult and ascending way."

In addition to what Dr. Jefferson said, we would point out to those who are sincerely desirous of getting the truly Christian view of the problem these observations: first, that the playing of Sunday games is not conducive to keenness of spirituality. The Sunday baseball player does not usually find the atmosphere of the prayer meeting enjoyable. The Sunday golfer is not at home in the intense spiritual environment of the communion. That which makes a man uncomfortable in holy places and scenes is scarcely a proper indulgence for a Christian.

The playing of Sunday games and otherwise using the Lord's Day for selfish pleasure does not contribute to one's desire and effectiveness as a Christian worker. Those who engage in Sunday games are seldom the pillars of strength in the church. They are not the ones who pray mightily and contribute generously to the extension of the Gospel. They are not the soul winners of the church, nor the ones who are ready to teach, and to inspire devotion to, the great doctrines of the Bible. An indulgence that hinders such service is to be regarded with caution.

The world does not place a high rating of the Christianity of the indulgent in Sunday games. It may consider him "a good sport", "a regular fellow", "a sensible Christian", but it will not consider him the kind it cares to call upon when death is approaching, or when the conviction of sin has been brought home to the heart. At such a time the world will call upon the service of the man or the woman who has kept apart from the worldliness of the world and has shown those qualities which have ever made the children of God a "peculiar people" and "zealous of good works." Such considerations should help solve the problem for the Christian.

Pray definitely and often for the outpouring of God's Spirit upon the Church of Christ; it will help both you and it.

Every saint is a potential sinner and should never relax even for a moment his hold on the keeping power of the grace of God.

A woman who plays for prizes in her social club may later have her heart broken by the excesses of a gambling son, but she is merely reaping what she has sown.

A Sunday school teacher entertained her Sunday school class at her home one evening and the next evening she was hostess to an exclusive card party. "Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel!"

EDITORIAL REVIEW

There is no greater thrill than that which comes from having influenced a soul to take the step "for Christ and the church."

The man who laments most loudly about the ineffectiveness of Prohibition is one whose appetite or business is most inconvenienced by it. The real trouble is that Prohibition prohibits too effectively for his safety and comfort.

General Conference credentials have been mailed to the congregations. Those who fail to receive their supply, or not a sufficient number, should address the Conference Secretary, O. C. Starn, Gratis, Ohio.

On the last Sunday in August, Dr. Charles A. Bame, pastor of the Ashland Brethren church, begins an evangelistic campaign at Mathias, West Virginia, where he undertook a similar campaign last year, but was rained out.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, director of our missions in the Argentine, writes encouragingly of the work at Rio Cuarto, where two more confessions were recently received and ten are being instructed preparatory to baptism. Four were baptized at Alejandro. The Sunday school maintains a commendable attendance, even against odds, ranging from 120 to 150.

The many friends of Professor A. L. DeLozier will greatly enjoy his unusual report of his voyage and the discoveries he made regarding the monster ship on which he sailed to Europe. And we will look forward with eagerness to his next letter concerning his landing and other interesting experiences which he will be able to report. As Dr. Gribble reports, he is now hard at work with his studies in France.

Brother L. G. Wood, of Fort Scott, Kansas, writes, "In my report as published in Evangelist number 25 you made me say: 'In May I received a letter from an old friend of ours who was in Fort Scott', while in reality I said: 'In May I received a letter from an old friend of ours who NEVER was in Fort Scott.'" The remark referred to the receipt of an unexpected gift to the work at that place. We are sorry for the typographical error and gladly make the correction.

Dr. Louis S. Bauman, treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society, gives a summary of his report of the Easter offering receipts, the complete report of which appears in the July number of the "Brethren Missionary", and it is an encouraging report because of the continued interest it indicates in this outstanding task of the church. Notwithstanding the fact that some failed to get their reports in the hands of the treasurer in time to be reported, yet the total is nearly a thousand dollars over the total receipts for last year, and this, in the face of a stringent money situation in many parts of the country, and of a strong pressing of heavy claims of other brotherhood interests.

A most interesting message comes from Dr. Florence N. Gribble this week, consisting in part of quotations from letters received by her from those missionaries on the fields in Africa, where evangelizing and building operations go on with prodigious energy. Events of interest were happening rapidly in France when Sister Gribble wrote. Her sister had arrived and is planning to bring Marguerite home with her. Prof. DeLozier arrived and made himself busy in one of the famous French universities. And Dr. Gribble herself was writing, studying and making preparations to return to Africa.

Brother Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the First church of Johnstown, Pennsylvania, tells us of the splendid progress being steadily achieved by that aggressive group of Brethren, under his capable and energetic leadership. They made an Easter offering for Foreign Missions that was the third largest in the brotherhood and five young people definitely dedicated themselves to life service for Christ. Nine souls have been recently added to the church largely through the instrumentality of the department of evangelism inaugurated in the Sunday school. The prayer meeting maintains a commendable interest. The wide-awakeness of the Christian Endeavorers was demonstrated by their large delegation to the International convention at Cleveland.

Dr. Martin Shively, Bursar of Ashland College, makes his second report of the Educational Day Offering. Though it is not as encouraging as we might have hoped, yet we will not be discouraged about it until compelled to believe that some of our larger churches are not coming across with a respectable offering for this fund. Brother Shively is exceedingly anxious to receive at least $2,000, which will equal the interest at five per cent on $40,000, and will count for that amount on the required endowment for the entrance of Ashland College in the North Central Association of Colleges, a goal so necessary to the attainment of proper standing as an educational institution of the type that it professes to be. We know of no place where gifts will count for so much as in this Educational Day offering; it is an unusual opportunity.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his canvass of the North Manchester, Indiana, congregation, where Dr. J. Raymond Schutz is the many-talented pastor. This splendid people did a fine thing for the college, considering the local demands being made of them. One gift of a thousand dollars was received from a member of this church, which is the third such gift received from Indiana Brethren. The total gift of the church was $2,612.58, which brings the campaign total up to $115,285.52. Dr. Bell is right when he says that more large gifts, such as one person in this congregation made, must be had if the college is to reach its goal. The men and women whom God has generously blessed with the goods of this world must begin to realize the claims of education upon them, regardless of whether they have children to educate or not. Christians should not be selfish in their giving to education any more than in their giving to missions, and we all alike must face before God our bounden duty of providing adequately for the Christian education of the young people of our church. And of those to whom much has been given, much will be required.

In this issue will be found word from Brother A. V. Kimmell, Secretary of the General Conference Executive Committee, who says the program will soon be forthcoming in the Evangelist and assures us that it will be strong and inspirational throughout and that the various denominational interests will be adequately represented. The date of the Conference is August 22 to 28 and the place is the same old stamping grounds we have gathered at for a generation—Winona Lake, Indiana. Brother Kimmell gives a much needed admonition when he urges that delegates shall be conscientious about attending the sessions of conference and not stand outside the auditorium, visiting while a few are laboring with business sessions, or delivering addresses to a "baker's dozen." Preachers, first of all, should feel the responsibility for being faithful to the conference sessions and should set the example to the laymen, all of whom should realize that the first duty of a delegate is to attend conference, and visit or engage in recreations afterwards. And there is usually plenty of time for such side issues. Let us be careful not to turn the main tent into a side show, and the side shows into the main tent.

Brother George Pontius, pastor of the Fairhaven church near West Salem, Ohio, reports the gift of $500 to various general interests of the church, made by the lamented Sister, Mary Jollif, a member of that splendid rural church. The gift was divided between Home and Foreign missions and the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana. This is an example that ought to be emulated more widely by Brethren people. And it is not only those who have no heirs, as this good sister's action shows, who ought to bequeath some of their earthly goods to the advancement of the work of the Kingdom, but those who have heirs may well realize that the Lord has a claim upon their material possessions, and that he ought to be given a generous portion as an acknowledgment of that divine claim. That is not saying that one should wait until death overtakes him before he gives of his wealth for the work of the church; he ought to give continually and freely while he is living, when he can make sure that his gifts go where he desires and when he can see and rejoice in the fruits of his giving. But even at that, when life draws near its close one ought to feel responsible for wisely disposing of what he has left in a manner that God can approve. And with that attitude adopted the interests of the Kingdom will not be forgotten.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Two Hundred Nineteen Years of Church Life Lost or Preserved

By Earl Huette

(Whether you wholly agree with the author of this article or not, we hope it will stir up some serious thinking and possibly result in some profitable discussion of a vital problem.—Editor.)

After you bruised your toe the first time, did you tread more carefully to avoid doing it the second time?

Certainly you did.

The Brethren church is facing a crisis in her history. We are not seeming to hold our youth. We are sadly in need of an effective program for our young people. Quite likely we have bruised our (church) toes on the wrong method of conducting young people's work. Therefore we should, according to the law of nature, tread more carefully.

Let us take off the polish now. Let us get down to the bare facts. Let us be willing to follow through and recognize truth although it hurts.

Youth in this article will be considered as including those young people between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five.

Youth today is broader in its thinking and more able to decide momentous questions than folks of thirty or forty years of age were able to do a few years back. Youth of today does not let conventionality interfere with a program.

Father, mother, uncle, aunt, cousins and friends who, these days, attempt to tell the young people "how to do things," or "what they must or must not believe" are likely to hear in reply words from the modern street vocabulary such as express impatience, disgust, or rebellion.

And let us ask ourselves, how much after all, do older folks know about what social problems our youth are facing and what will hold their interest to religion during these days of automobiles, radios, motor boats, airplanes and such other speedy mechanisms?" The old adage "Experience is the best teacher", should apply in this case. But before you go further to say that you, being older are more experienced—let me remind you that these fast vehicles and methods of communication were only dreams when you were having your experience as a youth. So that rather counts you out when it comes to having so much experience along modern lines. You are just getting it. The truth is the older folks seem to have lost their heads and sense of direction even more than the youth. It is a truth that youth is always able to adapt itself to changing conditions more readily than those older. So let us compromise by saying that young people of today are just as able to speak about the application of religious teachings to present day life as are the older folk; that their experience is just as long and that they have the additional odds of adaptability.

Older people are apt to apply the teachings of the Bible according to their old-time methods of thought and practice, though many of them were wrong or inapplicable. Youth will take the Bible and go through it from cover to cover and seek out truths that will apply to life in a practical manner. Youth will make far more stringent rules of life for self-government from the suggestions found in the Bible than older folks will, because "experience" has taught the older folks to be cautious and on the lookout to avoid the sacrifices, dangers and hardships. Youth will face up to these facts and suggestions in a spirit of loyalty that far exceeds the loyalty of most of the older folk.

We are through generalizing, let us make a few charges against the elder folk and see where we come out.

Youth has been looking for a high standard of living, but it seems that all it sees is the double standard of living in which the elder folk indulge. (To be sure there are some of our elders who are not guilty of a double standard of living, but it is quite likely that they are the exception rather than the rule).

There are very few but who want youth to steer clear of some of the things they did when they were young. Perhaps all down the line, every person has his regrets, but many are continuing in their duplicity while warning or criticizing young folks. If we expect our youth to go to church and Sunday school, and live a righteous life, we should go with them and lead the way. We must not surround our youth, or permit them to be surrounded with the froth of life and expect them to return substance in its place. Do we exhibit the transient things of the world and look for essential truths from them? Do we give them stones and demand stars in return? Shall we

The Student Hymn

By Dr. Frank Mason North

Tune: Materna

*The world's astir! The clouds of storm
Have melted into light,
Whose streams aglow from fountains warm
Have driven back the night.
Now brightens dawn toward golden day;
The earth is full of song;
Far stretch the shining paths away,
Spring forward! Hearts, be strong!*

*Where lies our path? We seek to know,
To measure life, to find
The hidden springs of truth whence flow
The joys of heart and mind.
We dream of days beyond these walls,
The lure of gold we feel;
Life beckons us and learning calls,
Loud sounds the world's appeal.*

*But thou, O Christ, are Master here;
Redeemed by thee we stand;
We challenge life without a fear;
We wait for thy command.
For thy command is victory,
And glory crowns the task;
We follow thee, and only thee,
Thy will alone we ask.*

*Give us the wisdom from above;
We pledge our loyalty.
Change flash of hope to flame of love
And doubt to certainty.
In thy great will, O Master Mind,
In thee, O Master Heart,
Our guerdon and our guide we find, throw them tinsel and ask for gold? Will we permit the mud of the gutter to be set before them and ask for rain-bows from them? We put false gods upon their altars and cry out to them to worship the real one. Sham standards we give and desire true worth.
Our Lord, our King, thou art.*

Just one instance will convict us and cause us to see the real truth of what we are practicing upon our youth in this regard. Everywhere slogans and signs invite youth and age to amuse themselves, to spend money, to play, to eat, to drink, to make superficial impressions, to aim at smartness, to get on in life through the acquisition of material things only. There is a constant repetition of this type of appeal from one length of the country to the other.

Whether you like it or no, the Brethren church people are doing one of two things. Either they stand for the practice of putting the froth of life only before our young people or else they are actively placing real values before them.

We are all aware of the great and far reaching effects of advertised objects. Traveling from coast to coast and from north to south we see the same brand of cigarettes—the same make of soap—and we are brought to the realization that the people of this nation are becoming educated to the use of certain material things throughout the length and breadth of the nation. Consider what our nation-wide advertisers are putting before the youth of the land. Do you recall the number of notices you have seen that called forth any thought except for material welfare, not to mention the baser appeals? Can you give off-hand a half dozen lines taken from present day national advertising that appeals to the spiritual needs of men and women, boys or girls? Are you able to state that you know twelve people who have been reached and turned to better things because of such advertising?

Yet we, as individuals and as a church, are not spending much if anything in even local advertising in an effort to combat the influences of the opposing power. Youth demands that there be some action. Youth wants to have a big objective toward which to strive and likes to work in an organization that is alive and active. When the youth of the Brethren church sees the name of the church in print; when that church or society is recognized for some activity—youth responds and literally speaking, “will work their heads off to put the project over the top.” Why cannot the Brethren churches follow some carefully worked out publicity system?

But if we do nothing more than talk or advertise; if we make no special effort to provide adequate equipment; more interesting programs and more carefully worked out schemes with those young people who are consecrated and willing to assume responsibility and who do have the light of Jesus Christ in their hearts; if we simply go about bemoaning the feeling that the present generation of young people are going straight to the bow-wows; if we keep grasping after the almighty dollar (any way to get it, but get it); if we insist upon the privilege of going to amusements rather than church activities; if we persist in showing more of an interest in everything else than in living the Jesus way of life; then what more can we expect than that the youth of our country will live a superficial life?

Come in closer with me now and let us answer this challenge.

Who is it that is back of nearly all the large “gangs” of vice about which we read so much? Is it YOUTH or AGE? Let me answer. The young follows where the older lead. The young furnish the daring, the recklessness and the heartlessness which recognizes neither life nor limb; but it is the elders who are backing the youth by their examples of lawlessness and strengthening them in the confidence that they can get away without being caught. In crime, age furnishes the MASTER LEADERSHIP—youth CARRIES OUT THE DETAILS. SO:

So Brethren-churchmen, everywhere—answer this challenge, are we so blind that we cannot see the best in the very worst? Will not youth follow STRONG CHRISTIAN LEADERSHIP JUST AS WILLINGLY AS LEADERSHIP FOR VICE? Cannot we find just one strong leader in every single church who has the qualities which when properly cultivated and developed will be able to lead the balance of the young people of that community?

Herein lies the shallows. The church has had too few persons who were trained to lead without themselves being always right in the very midst of the battle. She has had scores of good, honest, sincere and consecrated, loyal and lovely workers who have given their very lives toward the development of young people, but so few of these folk have been really trained young people's workers. There are people who are really sincere in their desire to do work in this particular field but who are untrained, possibly have never even read a book on young people's work and rely wholly upon their own power, experience and personality, and they cannot meet the situation, they cannot possibly develop a strong group of followers who can cope with present day problems. There are many of these folks who if they were properly trained along modern methods of handling young people's work could be very effective.

It is my very earnest conviction that the Brethren church will be a dead issue within two or three generations unless she gets busy with a Young People's Program that will permit more self-expression and self-government on the part of the young people. Our adult leadership must be trained to know when and how to give young people their chance.

We must be willing to permit our young people to exercise their powers in the determining of their belief, because that is what they will do regardless, so why cannot we be broad enough to retain their affiliation with our church even at the cost of some of the things that may not exactly harmonize with our way of thinking? We may guide their thinking but not obstruct it. And our views must be grounded upon fundamental values. If those things that we Brethren feel are actually fundamental to Christian life; are really as fundamental as we think they are, we must prove it by our lives and then all the forces of hell shall not prevail against them and take away their value. We cannot force them upon our young folks arbitrarily.

I would not be misunderstood. Personally, I believe in the Brethren doctrines as a safe guide. I feel that the ordinances as observed in the Brethren church help me to live a finer and better Christian life and that they will do so for any person. And I believe the Brethren church ought to go on teaching and preaching the interpretation of the Bible as she has always done. But let us at least recognize the fact that we must be tolerant with those who do not believe all that we believe, or in exactly the same way we believe it. Perhaps they have some truth that we do not have.

Now let us begin at once in all of our churches to do a little publicity for Christ and his work. Let us show our youth that the Brethren church is a very live and wide-awake organism.

Let us begin to pick out those young persons who are fitted through training and consecration to lead our young folk, and where not trained, let us help them to become trained. Let us now make up our minds to spend a little money for salary, traveling expenses and materials for the BEST TRAINED YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORKER THAT CAN BE FOUND. And further, let us open the doors of every Brethren church and home to that person so that he or she may get into the very vitals of our organizations and know the hearts of the people so as to assist in the locating and training of one or more persons in young people's methods of leadership.

Let us elder folk begin now to boost Christ and Christianity in the estimation of our young folk by living closer to the ideals which we believe are what Jesus has for us. Let us adjust our lives as readily as possible to the present day application of religion in all of our human relationships. Let us prove to our youth that Christ has really meant something in our individual lives. That Jesus is not merely something to talk about, but that he is a force and that his message is a message of weight in the relationships of man to this life and to God. Let us prove to our youth that we are willing to give some of our money and our time in order to be of assistance in helping them to work out the program that they shall propose and that shall be fitted to the meeting of their needs and to the advancement of Christ's kingdom.

Our young people will respond to the best if we will but let them know that we accept their challenges and that we will stand aside and let them accomplish the purpose which they will find Jesus has in his great plan for them. We will stand along their pathway as guide posts to the stranger in a strange land. We will point out to them some of the mistakes which can be made. We will stand aside for youth to develop as Jesus would have them develop. We will lend them a hand. We will pray for them. We will give of our substance to further the program which they build. We will stand ready to "take a loss" if need be in order to have them come into the fullest possible bounty of God's love.

Home Religion

By Wilbur B. Stover

(Elder Stover, who has so generously and graciously contributed this article to "The Evangelist" in the interest of a widespread revival of Home Religion, was for a third of a century a Church of the Brethren missionary to India and since his return has been a prolific writer of missionary and devotional books and magazine articles.)

(Concluded from last week)

I. *"Thy Kingdom come.
Thy will be done on earth as it is in Heaven."*

The first thought in prayer is worship; from it, with majestic sweep, the mind turns to the whole world of people whom God hath made, and prays for them. First we are worshipping the Creator, and second we are praying for the people whom he created; not a part of them, but all of them, the whole world full of them. There is no selfishness, no narrowness, no begging the question against missions "as at present carried on," no sneaking reply: "If they are to be saved, they'll be saved; if to be lost, they'll be lost." The Kingdom to come into the whole world, the divine will to be done in the whole earth, even as it is done throughout the whole heaven, this is our prayer,

"From Greenland's icy mountains, From India's coral strand."

they call us to deliver, and we pray for their deliverance, and that deliverance is possible, from error's chains. And while on our knees praying these words, "Thy Kingdom come," in our imagination we see it coming; hosts of India folk get into the grand procession; whole battalions of folk from China fall into line; Japan, Korea, Uganda; Africa comes singing and swaying as the crowds move forward; the islands of the sea furnish their quota in full. Oh, the joy of praying for the coming of the Kingdom into all lands, and into the hearts of all peoples upon the earth!

"In the beauty of the lilies, Christ was born across the sea, With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me!" and while he was yet praying, he was transfigured before them; Moses, Elias, Jesus—they talked together of the death which was shortly to be accomplished in Jerusalem. If there is a time when the individual approaches the point of transfiguration, it is when he pours out himself in earnest solemn prayer for others. It is then that he walks in the footsteps of his Master, then that he enters into the joys of the Lord.

III. *"Give us this day our daily bread.
And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."*

*And lead us not into temptation,
But deliver us from evil."*

After heartily praying for others, the individual who knows the Lord will not forget to pray for himself. He feels the need. In the divine Presence, he feels keenly his imperfections and limitations. How sadly they miss it who put first their own needs in prayer. How distorted their sense of proportion, either when they put themselves first, or forget altogether that they are needy creatures. Give us, forgive us, lead us; deliver us; what a list of "us's." Rather than a prayer for the individual, it belongs to the family; it takes in the whole group of us. It belongs to the group larger than our family; it is for all God's family, for the church. Those who have a common interest, who are of one type, of one blood will pray for each other in the same breath, and with the same words they pray for themselves. It is a part of the tie that binds, a strong cord in the bond of union.

Now and then some one "discovers" that it is "legalistic" to pray to be forgiven as one is now forgiving, thus "annulling grace" which covers all. The prayer is fully intended to disciples, who are not under law but under grace, and whose grace is sufficient to restrain them from asking for themselves more than they would willingly concede to others. Even under grace it seems there is equity; the love of equity is counted unto us for righteousness. The Lord would have his people everywhere do unto others as they would be done by; no wonder he injects it into the prayer he submits to them for universal use, thereby impelling every one of us to adopt our highest workable standard in social relationships. This is not legal ground.

IV. "For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen."

Mt. Morris, Ill.

First, comes worship; next, prayer for the whole world; third, prayer for ourselves; and fourth, and lastly, a reversion to worship again. The greater part of prayer is worship. "O, worship the Lord, in the beauty of holiness." In our busy world, the great present need is that we find time to worship. Our only excuse for the neglect of worship is that we are too busy. We believe in it, we appreciate it in others, we even rather expect the day to come when we may have worship in our homes. We are like the Jewish restaurant-keeper who told me he had no time to pray now, but when he had made his fortune, he was planning to retire from business activities, and give his attention to religion. Every so-called reason for the neglect of worship is merely a miserable excuse.

It is interesting how strangely many men's minds react to the use of the Lord's Prayer. There are those who say it is based on legal ground, therefore it is best omitted altogether. That is, they love the Lord Jesus who freed them from the law and brought them into grace, but are afraid to pray the prayer he gave them, lest they should slip out of grace and get back under the law again. There are others who say that the words of Jesus, "After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father," etc., become meaningless unless we say the whole prayer whenever we pray. This is most pathetic, for such repeat the prayer in the morning and in the evening, at the breakfast table and everywhere else when they pray, thus using a few words of our Master to set up what he labored diligently to destroy, namely formality. It reminds one of the irony of Buddhistic experience; Buddha taught against idolatry all his life, and immediately after his death, his followers set up his image as an object of worship.

There are many who inject the Lord's Prayer into the worship service, but who do not feel bound to the constant repetition of the words, as by law prescribed. They appreciate the prayer, and value it highly. They use it frequently, perhaps four or five times each week, and it comes to be sort of confession of faith to them, a creed, if you like. These, it would appear, come from the place of prayer day to day justified, rather than the others; and what is more to the point, they live in harmony with the teachings of the Master, and not with any extreme view of those teachings.

After all, what we seek is the unity of the home, the spirituality of the whole group, and the methods that prove successful in passing over to the children the best elements of religious experience in the lives of the parents. That the use of the Lord's Prayer will be an aid to this end, there can be no doubt.

A Powerful Plea for Prayer for Revival

By Dr. R. A. Torrey

"Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?" (Psa. 85:6). "It is time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law" (Psa. 119:126).

One of the most insistent cries that goes up today from the heart of any one who loves the Lord Jesus Christ, and who is at the same time open-eyed as to the condition of affairs in the world today, is the cry of the Psalmist of old, "Wilt thou not revive us again: that thy people may rejoice in thee?" The great need of the hour is revival—a true, God-sent revival; not a revival gotten up by man's machinery, but a revival sent down from God himself in answer to the prayers of people who know and meet the conditions of prevailing prayer.

The condition of the churches throughout our land and other lands today would be appalling if we did not believe in a God who answers prayer—yes, if we did not know that God does answer prayer, and did not know from the Word of God itself and from the experience of the real church throughout the centuries that God especially delights to answer prayer for revival.

As I travel from one end of this land to the other, and have opportunity to see for myself the condition of the churches; as I read the various religious periodicals of the various denominations; as I talk with men and women in positions of influence and power in the church, my heart would be sick, yes nigh unto despair, if I did not know God and did not know that he answers prayer. The gross error that is being taught by many professedly orthodox ministers; the absence of the real, living Gospel from the preaching of many who do not preach error, but who are certainly not preaching the truth in its simplicity, in its fulness, and in the power of the Holy Ghost; the unconcern of apparently the great mass of the membership of our churches regarding the lost at home and abroad; the rapidly growing compromise with the world on the part of a very large proportion of the membership of our churches, the neglect of real prayer and the openly avowed disbelief in prayer on the part of not a few; the inactivity in real soul-winning work on the part of an overwhelming majority of the members of our evangelical churches today, cannot but fill any intelligent and properly instructed Christian with a sorrow that almost breaks the heart.

But while the state of the churches is bad enough, that of the outside world would, of course, be far more discouraging, disheartening and overwhelming if one did not believe in a God who answers prayer. There is no time to go into details, nor do we need to, for the facts are well known, even though so many are deliberately shutting their eyes to them and loudly proclaiming their "optimism"—an optimism that has no basis in fact, but simply in the wishes of those who proclaim it. To mention only one of many things: Conditions in our universities, in our colleges, in our high schools, and our grade schools, not merely the religious conditions, but the moral conditions, are terrible beyond expression. I could not put into print things that have come under my personal observation as to the slump, not only in the modesty, but in the moral decency, not only among our young men and boys, but among our young women and girls. These facts are brought to me wherever I go, east or west, north or south.

But shall we despair, or throw up our hands and say nothing can be done? No, not for one moment. God does answer prayer; that has been demonstrated time and time again, and time and time again throughout the centuries when conditions were in many ways as bad as they are today or worse. God has heard prayer, and he is just the same today. I know that God answers prayer for revival—deep, thorough, widespread, miracle-working revival, as well as I know that I exist. When Mr. Alexander and I started around the world in December, 1901, there were five thousand people who had covenanted to pray for us every day. When we reached Australia, ten thousand took it up and prayed for us every day. When we reached England, forty thousand people had taken it up, AND GOD HEARD. All the way around the world wonders were wrought, not merely through us, but through a large number of others whom God raised up in answer to prayer, and I believe he will do like things, or far greater things, again.

Pray, pray, PRAY! Pray definitely; pray intensely; pray persistently; meet the conditions of prevailing prayer and BE SURE YOU PRAY THROUGH.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Taking Hold of God

By Louis S. Bauman

TEXT: "And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee." Isaiah 64:7.

Isaiah, in his prayer to God, is deploring the praylessness of Israel. All the troubles of that sorrowing people have come to them because they refused to take hold of God. Prayer is absolutely essential to Christian victory. The weakness of the church today lies in the fact that she does not really pray. She has substituted formal, liturgical prayers,—or, rather, a mechanical, lifeless speaking of words, for the primitive and ardent cry of the heart. Nothing can be more obnoxious to God than formalism in prayer,—as though there were virtue in mere repetition of words, after the fashion of the pagan, Mohammedan or Roman Catholic worship. Prayer is the cry of a child of God in need, asking in words of his own for the supply of that need; or, it is the cry of a sinner for divine forgiveness and peace. An old man who had spoken fixed forms of prayer ever since he was three years of age, was converted, and in his old age used to say: "I am the old man who said his prayers for seventy years, and yet in all that time had never prayed at all."

Nothing so grieves the heart of God as the fact that while he has made boundless promises in return for believing prayer, so few of his children avail themselves of the privilege of claiming those promised blessings. Self-trust is eating the very vitals out of our spiritual life; and, as a result, the average Christian church is in a deplorable state,—a sickly, powerless thing, whose existence is little better than downright death. Human instrumentalities alone are failing to accomplish great things for God and his church. O, that the church might be given a vision of what she might be under God! Such a vision would drive her to her knees to claim her inheritance in Christ Jesus! There must be a revival of the praying spirit. There will be no advance without it. Laying hold on God is the starting point of every great movement that has blessed the world. Whenever the church has been aroused and wickedness arrested, some one has laid hold on God with Jacob's grip, and claimed the power in the name of Jesus Christ. No spiritual work of permanence has ever been wrought that was not done in the power of God, through direct answer to prayer. Whenever there has been a decline of spirituality among the churches, it was directly the result of non-attendance upon prayer. The decline of prayer is the decay of piety. No soul has ever been lifted to a higher plane of spiritual life, or moved to a more unselfish or self-denying service except in the closet of prayer. Prayer, and prayer alone, will bring back to the sin-stained soul of man its native purity and power.

It is through prayer that men come to know God. Men may talk about seeing God in the flower, in the earth and in the heavens. But neither in the simple beauty of the flower, nor in the splendid magnificence of the heavens, can we find the real and true God,—the loving heavenly Father. The pagans sought for God there, and did find the Creator; but, they never found the Father. The heavens may declare the glory and the handiwork of God, but they never can reveal the great, loving Father-heart of God. "Enter into thy closet," said the Master. And when we have entered into the closet, and have shut the door, it is there in the stillness that the Father reveals his true self. Unbelief thrives outside the closet of prayer, never within. The closet is the observatory from which we look out and up and see the Eternal. Unbelief lives in the throng. Let men get apart from the throng, and go out into the desert with Moses, or with Paul; let them go into the wilderness with Elijah or with John the Baptist; and let them look up and be still, and they shall know the Father.

It is through prayer that God reveals his ways. How often some soul comes and says: "I do not understand the way of God. Why does God do this? Why does God do that?" It is very significant that God "made known his ways unto Moses, his acts, unto the children of Israel." The children of Israel knew that God did this or that,—Moses knew why he did it. But Moses went up into the mountain close to God. The children of Israel beheld him from afar. Those that spend much time in the closet, coming in close touch with the Eternal, are not those that are ever asking "Why?" "They are the seers who read his secrets; they know his will; they are the meek whom he guides in judgment and teaches his way. They are his prophets, who speak for him to others, and even forecast things to come. They watch the signs of the times and discern his tokens, and his signals."

It is said that George Muller always asked concerning any proposed measure, "Is this the Lord's work?" When that question was settled affirmatively, he then asked, "Is it my work?" And if that was also settled in the affirmative, he then asked, "Is this the Lord's way?" If so, then, last but not least, he asked, "Is this the Lord's time?" These are the all-important questions for a Christian, and only that soul can get the sure answer who dwells in close communion with the Father. There is no reason why God should not speak as decidedly as he spoke to men in the olden time, if only we will come away from the confusing voices of the world, and in the secret of his presence listen for the "still small voice."

It is through prayer that God imparts virtue to us. "Who touched me?" asked Christ on the way to the home of Jairus. "Master," exclaimed Peter, astonished at the question, "the multitude jostle and press against thee. How savest thou then, 'Who touched me?'" "Some one hath touched me," responded Christ; "for, I perceive that virtue is gone out of me." We are sick. Prayer is the hand that touches the divine battery that charges us with spiritual health and power. Many of the physical diseases that cling to the flesh, would trouble us no more if only we knew how to lay hold on God with the determination of the old patriarch who said: "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." It is the mission of the Holy Spirit to quicken and make strong the whole being of man. But "God giveth the Holy Ghost to them that ask him." God waits to be asked.

It is through prayer that God imparts his power. "I will not let thee go except thou bless me," cried Jacob after the lonely night-wrestle. "What is thy name?" Jehovah asked. "And he said, 'Jacob.'" Then said the Lord, "Thy name shall be called no more Jacob, but Israel; for as a prince thou hast power with God and with men, and hast prevailed." It is to God's glory that all his children should have princely power, strong to conquer evil, and mighty to work and war for God.

There is a tremendous show of energy, of endeavor, of resolution, of incessant labor, of hustle and bustle in the church, but there is a tremendous lack of real and permanent accomplishment. There is a tremendous amount of planning, of chopping, sawing, splitting, and pounding going on in the church. But so many of our structures prove to be "wood, hay and stubble." Scheme, plan, organize, work, worry and sweat, but what does it all amount to unless souls are saved and established in the Kingdom of God? The trouble with so much Christian work these days, it is not divinely planned and divinely wrought. The plan was not given in "the mount," nor were the workmen filled with the Spirit of power for the working thereof. Hence, our work so often proves a flimsy failure. The men who have builded well,—the men whose work abides,—the men who have achieved results of the most surprising character, have all been men of ceaseless prayer. Such men as Jonathan Edwards, John Knox, William Carey, Hudson Taylor and George Muller, have ever shut themselves for hours in the closet, and labored fervently in prayer. Martin Luther, when pressed under the weight of many duties and gigantic responsibilities, said: "I have so much to do that I cannot get on without three hours a day of praying." While these men of prayer achieved results and proved that things impossible with men are possible with God, there was a surprising lack of hurry and worry and flurry in their lives. They carried tremendous burdens and were never weary; they faced agonizing crises and were not anxious. They rested in the calm of God. They proved the words of Isaiah, the prophet, true: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; and they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint." They were not blessed above others with talent, tact, and tide. They scaled the highest Alps that ever stood in the way of a conqueror. They faced foes as mighty as ever drew a battle-line. There is but one secret to their remarkable lives,—by waiting upon the Lord they renewed their strength. They laid hold on God and commanded him. It was this fact that made the legions of hell tremble whenever they had these men to face. Mary, Queen of Scotland, said: "I fear John Knox's prayers more than an army of ten thousand men!" Mark you, it was not John Knox she feared, but "John Knox's prayers!"

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

ROOTED IN CHRIST—Col. 2:1-9. "Rooted and built up in him, and established in the faith." The Christian's first duty is to be rooted in Christ by faith and love, by prayer and the study of his Word. Thus shall he grow up in all spiritual grace and power, in outreach and service.

TUESDAY

SHINING LIGHTS—Phil. 2:14-16. "Among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Our lives may be as insignificant and passing as the morning dew, but if like the dew we are filled with the brightness of the Son of Righteousness, and reflect his glory, we shall bless the world with light and refreshing.

WEDNESDAY

BROTHERLY KINDNESS—Rom. 12:9-17. "In love of the brethren be tenderly affectioned one to another, in honor preferring one another." "As I have loved you" is the measure of loving kindness we are to manifest our love for others. It's a hard test and a noble ideal, but nothing less is worthy of the noblest brotherhood of earth.

THURSDAY

IN HIS STEPS—John 20:21-23. "As the Father hath sent me, even so send I you." And what easy-going, carefree lives we live! How our lives would be changed if we were really walking "in his steps!"

FRIDAY

FAITH AND PATIENCE—Heb. 6:9-12. "Who through faith and patience inherit the promises." The hard tasks, the struggles, the burdens and trials of life should only strengthen our faith in the Lord Jesus as we see how he sustains and encourages us through them all.

SATURDAY

OUR TASK—Luke 10:27. "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Whatever the work with which we engage our talents, we must remember that we are servants of God, charged with advancing his kingdom on earth. We must ever keep in mind our relationship to humanity and our obligation to love them and seek their good. That is our task.

SUNDAY

TREASURES IN HEAVEN—Matt. 6:19-21. "But lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven." Sad it is to see how busy we are laying up treasures that corrode and that thieves steal and the seeking of which often empoverishes the soul! How rich are we growing each day in the honor and esteem of our friends because of the service we render? And how much wealth are we accumulating in divine qualities?—G. S. B.

The Cross that Satan Gives

By C. F. Yoder, Rio Cuarto, Argentina

The cross that Satan gives to bear
Grows heavier day by day,
Until at last its bearer sinks
Into the miry way.

It is the cross of law transgressed,
Of conscience prodding sore.
It is the cross of evil wrought
And judgment hanging o'er.

It carries weight of others tears,
Of ruined lives and pain;
It carries weight of wasted years,
Of losses without gain.

It carries weight of worldly ways,
A host of useless things,
Extravagance and luxury,
The lash that cuts and stings.

It carries weight of selfish care
That seeks her own alway,
That never feels the need to share,
Nor yet the need to pray.

It carries weight of heavy chains
That bind the worldly wise,
The fashions, follies, fears of men
From which they cannot rise.

It carries weight of dark despair,
Of doubt and deepening gloom,
It weighs the sinner down to death
With his impending doom.

The Christian faith has been a potent source of light and reason. Some timid people are afraid to use their brains in things religious. They believe in simple, emotional calls and ignorant faith. If our bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost, our brains must be included.—Bishop William B. Lawrence, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts.

Data.—David's outlaw life began in terrible earnest with chapter 20 (1st Samuel); especially when Jonathan with a warning "shot an arrow beyond him," 20:36-42. It is calculated that David was then about 23 years old. The history of his career as a fugitive occupies the 11 concluding chapters of 1st Samuel. As David was 30 years old when he "began to reign," 2 Sa. 5:4, the time-period was about seven years. David, king of Hebron, 1020 B. C. David king in Jerusalem, 1013 B. C. The ark brought to the Tabernacle on Mt. Zion. Rebellion of Absalom, 990 B. C. Accession of Solomon, 900 B. C.—Green.

David as an Outlaw

For nearly seven years David, after being exiled from Saul's court, lived a wandering life in the wilderness,—driven from place to place, hiding in desolate regions and dwelling in caves; but gradually gathering about him a band of men, and always protecting the outlying regions, and maintaining his loyalty to his king and his country.

We can understand the whole story best by gaining a distinct picture of the scene where the various events took place. In Southern Judea was a large and rough wilderness; not in any sense a "desert," but wild and uninhabited, abounding in caves in its numerous hills, and such a place as would serve as a complete protection, unless, as was sometimes the case, David was betrayed by men who themselves were familiar with the country and its hiding places. It was not a barren place, although it is probable that the greater part of the supplies for the band with David came from the farms and estates on the edge of the wilderness, as in the case of Nabal.

One cave especially was large enough and well enough placed to serve as a real stronghold for the band, and it was their rallying place for a large portion of the time,—the Cave of Adullam. This is "now generally identified with a cave in the side of a deep ravine, some five or six miles southwest of Bethlehem, and called Wady Khureitum." The path to it is along a winding shell of rock, having a fearful gorge below and gigantic cliffs above, so that it could easily be defended against all the forces of Saul, and being five hundred and fifty feet in length, could hold a small army of defenders. Being near his boyhood's home, David was probably well acquainted with this cavern, which may account for his using it for such a period as his headquarters.

An Advantage in Exile

David had not chosen his circumstances—he had been thrown into them. He did not rebel against Saul. He had no home. I do not know where a better home could have been provided for him than among these men in distress, in debt, in discontent. If it behooved a ruler to know the hearts of his subjects, their sorrows, their wrongs, their crimes, this was surely as precious a part of his schooling as the solitude of his boyhood, or as any intercourse he had with easy men who had never faced the misery of the world and had never had any motive to quarrel with its laws. He was now among the lowest of those he would have to govern, realizing the influences which were disposing them to evil; and here he was acquiring more real reverence for law and order, more understanding of their nature, than those can ever arrive at who have never known the need of them from the want of them. "He was bringing his wild followers under a loving discipline and government which they had never experienced."

Forgiveness vs. Revenge

Twice at least David had a chance to take Saul's life without risk to himself. One is where Saul came to rest in a cave in the depths of which David and his men were hiding. The second is that in today's lesson.

The Conflicting Motives

The motives which would powerfully influence David to kill Saul were: (1) Self-preservation; (2) desire to escape the persecution which was destroying all comfort in life; (3) he could thus immediately occupy the throne; (4) perhaps revenge for all he had suffered; (5) the knowledge that Saul was rapidly becoming unfit to be king; (6) the opportunity placed in his hands to accomplish that for which he had been anointed; (7) the pressure from his followers, who would not understand David's motives and would consider him very foolish, almost to madness, not to use his opportunity.

Now consider the motives for sparing Saul. To take the lowest motive, it was good policy. David expected to be king, and he would not, with regard to his own future safety, set the example of the assassination of a king. But the matter was on far higher grounds. David still loved Saul, in spite of Saul's cruelty towards him. David believed that the right needs no aid from violence. David believed in God with all his heart, and was glad to leave his cause in God's hands. He would not hurry God.

"There was no resisting such an appeal as David's. Saul had received good for evil; and on a nature in which there is anything worthy, this always makes a powerful impression."

"Once let David, or any other man, begin to taste the heavenly sweetness of true humility over against pride, and over against rebellion, and over against retaliation, and he will become positively enamoured and intoxicated with his humiliations. What once was death and hell to him will now be life and peace and salvation to him."—Alexander Whyte.

"'Would it not be manly to resent it?' said one who had received an insult. 'Yes,' was the reply, 'but it would be Godlike to forgive it.' David did the Godlike thing."—J. R. Miller.

O man, forgive thy mortal foe,
Nor ever strike him blow for blow;
For all the souls on earth that live
To be forgiven must forgive.
Forgive him seventy times and seven;
For all the blessed souls in heaven
Are both forgivers and forgiven.

—Alfred Tennyson.

The large-hearted man will forgive with generous liberality. He will cherish no grudges. He will remember that he is himself forgiven. So he will keep his heavens clear of any clouds of hatred that in clear airs of mercy he may see both himself and his debtor as they really are and find it joyful to forgive."—Hilton Jones.

A REVIVAL IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

A. W. Orwig

With the right kind of teaching, by Holy Spirit-filled teachers, good results ought to be expected more or less all the time. And by good results I mean the real conversion of the scholars. Any teacher who is satisfied with anything less needs himself or herself to be revived. Gospel seed faithfully and prayerfully sown, will bring forth fruit. And that means that not only should head knowledge be imparted, but the hearts of pupils be reached, so that they will be deeply concerned about being truly saved. And that, in turn, will mean a revival in the Sunday school.

Nor should genuine conversions be expected only among the older scholars. They are often harder to reach, through the allurements of the world and more or less practice of sin, than children whose minds are not yet debauched by polluting thoughts, nor their hearts hardened by general quenching of the Holy Spirit. Christ's precious and inspiring words, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not," etc., should rebuke those who are inclined to doubt child piety.

By all means let there be revival fires in the Sunday school. The Holy Ghost can adapt himself to the early years and tender hearts of children. But he desires the cooperation of officers and teachers. They need to be alert and truly prayerful. Some of the children may not be very far from the Kingdom, and just a little wise and gentle leading may bring them into the fold of Jesus. Certainly the pastor and his wife should be deeply solicitous in the matter. And thus a revival in the Sunday school may cause a spiritual conflagration in the church itself. Oh for such a glorious consummation!—Watchword.

I am twenty-five cents. I am not on speaking terms with the butcher. I am too small to buy a quart of ice cream. I am not large enough to purchase a box of candy. I am too small to buy a ticket to a movie. I am hard fit for a tip, but—believe me, when I go to church on Sunday I am considered some money!—The Christian Evangelist.

Some Fresh Plans for Junior Committees

By Rev. R. R. Anderson in "Junior C. E. World"

GOOD LITERATURE

For Good-Literature Committees

First of all, find through the superintendent whether the local hospital would like to have copies of current magazines for patients to read, even if the magazines are a month or so old. If the hospital or people's home can use magazines, then a good-literature committee may place a table (with the permission of the pastor) in the church vestibule. On the table place a large card marked "Magazine Table. Can You Help?" Under this print briefly a request for church members to bring to this table used magazines, and state where the magazines are to be taken. Then the committee will carry the magazines to the institution that wants them.

MISSIONARY FIVE MINUTES

For Missionary Committees

This is a simple plan, but very helpful, as it keeps the work of missions constantly in mind, and gives the Juniors an idea of the missionary field. In every meeting devote five minutes to reading a missionary story, a letter from a missionary, or some facts about missions. Only good readers should read the stories. This missionary time must be made interesting or it will be a failure. The superintendent will help the committee to find the right kind of stories to read. Write to your own foreign or home missionary board, and ask for stories and the titles of suitable missionary books. Stories may also be found in missionary magazines.

A FORENOON MEETING

For Prayer Meeting Committees

This plan is worked most successfully by the society in St. Louis, Missouri. The Juniors attend church in the forenoon. The pastor preaches to them a five-minute sermon, and then they all file into the Junior room for their Junior Christian Endeavor meeting. This is held during the time that church service is going forward. Of course this plan could be tried only in churches that have rooms so situated that the Junior meeting would not interfere with the church service. In the meeting one of the Juniors always reports the message that the pastor has given in his five-minute sermon, and once a month three Juniors of different grades tell in the meeting the Sunday school lesson they liked best that month. If you cannot hold your meeting in this way, you can at least let a Junior report the pastor's five-minute sermon, and let Juniors tell about the Sunday school stories they liked best.

A MUSIC LEADER

For Music Committees

If the church has a choir leader, the Junior music committee may be able to persuade him or her to train the Junior society in singing the hymns as they ought to be sung. This does not call for an extra meeting; the leader could come at the close of the Junior meeting and give fifteen or twenty minutes to training the Juniors. We need to learn many hymns that are never sung, simply because we do not know the tunes. And we do not sing hymns as they should be sung—namely, with understanding and feeling. The Juniors might also once in a while form a Junior choir at one of the evening services of the church. A little later they will become members of the church choir.

A boy who will not obey his parents nor his teachers nor his employers will not get very far along the pathway of success. One must learn to obey and be willing to obey, not only those who are rightfully over him here, but also God, and the laws of the land, then one may hope to succeed like Gideon did.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Giving Others First Chance Genesis 13: 7-12

Lois was a member of a large family of children. There were three brothers and a sister older than Lois and there were four little girls in the family who were younger than Lois. She was a very important member of that family, too. When the little children were unhappy and couldn't find anything to do that would make them happy, Lois would think of some nice game for them and soon they would be contented again. When the older children wanted to have a good time somewhere but knew that they ought to stay at home and do their work, they told Lois and she helped them out. Even mother depended on Lois for help. When there was more work than mother could possibly do alone she called on Lois and Lois hurried very hard to help mother out.

Now you might think that in return for all of these things that Lois was allowed to do anything that she wanted to. You would think that all the other children could have done Lois' work so that she could go away on nice trips. But, with so many depending on her for help she became so important that she just couldn't be spared. Whenever there was a chance to go along with an uncle or some other relative or friend on a trip, Lois would say, "I think that Helen ought to have this trip for she is nearly through with her high school work and she will be having a job soon. She will enjoy the trip."

One time father's sister came for a visit. It was in May that Aunt Ellen came for her visit. She said to Lois' parents as soon as she had a chance, "I am going to take three of the children back to the country with me. I want them to stay for the whole summer and we are going to have a lot of good times together."

All the children were excited. Each one wanted to go. Even the tiniest little girl who was only three years old said, "Can I go?" Of course the small children could not be away from their mother for a whole summer, so it was really left to Lois and the four older children to decide who should go on the trip. As usual, Lois was the very first one to say, "I'll stay home so that one of you may go." It was not so easy to find out which of the other four would stay at home. None of them were used to giving others first choice as Lois was. Aunt Ellen became interested in Lois as soon as she found out that Lois had given up her chance for a trip so willingly. As the days passed Aunt Ellen noticed that whenever there was anything to be divided or anything that must be decided among the children, Lois gave the others first choice.

When the time came for Aunt Ellen to leave, the three boys went with her and Helen and Lois stayed at home. Helen seemed unhappy about not going on the trip but Lois seemed happy just because the other children were having a chance at such a nice trip. Aunt Ellen watched the two girls and as she left she said to herself, "Some day, I am going to do something for Lois. She is the most unselfish child I ever saw and I am going to do something for her to make her happy."

So the time passed. Lois continued making sacrifices for others. The next spring, Aunt Ellen came again. This time, each of the children was wondering, "I wonder if Aunt Ellen is going to take me along with her this summer."

One evening Aunt Ellen called all the family together and she said, "I want to tell all of you something. There is one member of this family that has always been giving the rest of you first choice. Whenever she has a chance to go anywhere or do anything and she realizes that one of the other children wants to do the same thing, she says, 'If you want to go, I'll stay home.' Now that little girl has had one reward all through life. She has been happy because she could make others happy. This evening I am going to give first choice to the little girl who has been giving first choice to others. Lois, I choose you to go with me on a long trip this summer. I want to reward you for your unselfishness."

Lois was so surprised that she hardly knew what to say. In fact she did not get over her surprise before it was time for them to start. Giving others first choice always brings a reward but Lois thought that no one had ever received quite so wonderful a reward as she did, for she and her Aunt Ellen had a wonderful summer together.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

The work of the Lord in Rio Cuarto is moving forward steadily. During the month just ended two more made public confession of Christ and I have ten in the class which meets during the Sunday school hour for Bible studies preparatory to baptism.

The Sunday school in spite of winter weather and no fire, has an attendance of from 120 to 150 and the other meetings are also well attended. The branch Sunday school in Pueblo Alberdi has been changed to the afternoon and the attendance has increased.

Some of the families that were absent working in the corn harvest have returned and are attending again. The Christian Endeavor society is preparing a program for the national holiday the 9th of July.

At our quarterly business meeting last night the church approved the recommendation of the Field Council that our members who are serving as pastors be ordained to the ministry. This will be done at the earliest opportunity.

During the month I also baptized four converts in Alejandro. Brother Anton held a meeting in the Chaco or northern Argentine where he has a sister. There is now a group of believers there but no pastor and they are too far away to care for from here. He is now evangelizing towns to the south of Buenos Aires by means of colportage work.

The work in the new towns of Tancacho and Gallini is growing. We are to have a meeting of the pastors for Bible study for a week in July.

News of Our African Missionaries

42 Rue Pierre Nicole, Paris Vme, France
 July 11th, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Some time has elapsed since I wrote to you. Meanwhile letters are frequently being received from our faithful missionary correspondents which I long to share with you.

From Bassai Miss Myers writes: "Miss Tyson and I have recently had a prosperous trip to Carnot. All are well at present. Brother Kennedy is out itinerating. We have been collecting specimens. Just bottled a snake and it looks beautiful! We have a pet monkey and jackal here."—These items will be of special interest to Marguerite and other children.

Miss Emmert writes from Yaloke April 24th: "How I wish you could have been with us today as the church was dedicated. It is a fine building and we are so thankful for it. The service was very appropriate. The natives are now sheltered from the wind and rain and are seated in orderly rows on real benches. I think they were much impressed with the solemnity and sacredness of the occasion.

"The Fosters are both well and valuable members of our staff. Brother Hathaway has been forced to be absent so much that I don't know how the building could have progressed without Brother Foster. We have a great deal of milk now and also about ten eggs daily."

Mrs. Hathaway writes: "The brick work on the dispensary is about to the top of the windows, so in a few weeks it no doubt will be completed and ready for use."

The latest news from the field was recently received from Miss Tyson of Yaloke, under date of May 1st:

"The school building is completed and Miss Emmert certainly has a very comfortable building. Even the administrator remarked about it. The dispensary is coming along nicely and before many weeks we shall be able to admit patients. We have much for which to praise the Lord."

"We are building a new chicken house, for we have chickens, ducks and pigeons," Today the report from Bassai reached us. Brother Jobson said: "Just five years and six months ago Brother Gribble pitched his tent on Bassai hill." "Then in my mind," Miss Tyson adds, "I began to picture all that has happened in this short time, the permanent houses at Bassai, the buildings at Yaloke, the new station at Bossangoa, the school for the past year at Yaloke, and then I thought of the hundreds of souls who are enjoying the light of the gospel, who might have been sitting in heathen darkness. I thought also of the band of noble men we have as evangelists and my heart was lifted in praise to our heavenly Father."

"To think of all that has been accomplished! Far more than even we know, for we never can tell what the Lord will accomplish through the many hearts that hear the gospel and remain for a time unmoved, but we know that God's Word will not return unto him void. We are sometimes impatient in waiting and think that things happen so slowly, but the Lord has done wondrously! We can only praise him for the faith and the vision he gave to our pioneers, and that he has privileged us to labor for him here.

"I had a lovely time itinerating with Miss Myers. She came down to Yaloke to visit with us but was not content to stay very long. She wanted to leave as soon as possible, but we finally succeeded in keeping her several days. Then we left for Carnot.

"We had a blessed time giving forth the word, and, oh, the crowds. The villages were crowded with people and they listened so attentively and seemed so anxious to hear the gospel.

"When we arrived at Zarasongo, just one day's journey from Carnot, word came, which led us to determine after prayer to go to Bassai. We had intended to go to Doumbe to buy some donkeys, then from there to itinerate by way of Torakau, Garemo and Yaloke, but the Lord changed our plans. We reached Carnot about 6 P. M. and had no sooner arrived at the rest house than there was a heavy downpour of rain. We soon hurried off to bed, being very tired. The next day many of Miss Myers' old friends called, among them being Tibate and Adou, the Hausa chiefs. Tibate was so delighted to see Miss Myers. He grasped her hands, greeting her again and again. When Miss Myers said, "Tibate, you know that Brother Gribble is dead?" he looked up and said, "Yes, Bombo is dead." Then there was silence and deep thought, and again he spoke, this time with uplifted and shining face. "But Bombo is with Jesus Christ." We thought what a statement coming from a Hausa! Even though he did not accept the gospel message, yet deep down in his heart must have existed some degree of belief in that message. So many incidents happened that encouraged us and made us happy that we are in the Lord's service. Nothing else ever gave me quite so much joy as to see the fruits of the early seed sowing of our work. Miss Myers also saw her old personal boy Yama. He told her he prayed every day and still loves the Lord and wants to serve him always.

"From Carnot we went to Bozoum, taking the same route that Brother Gribble took, and all along they never forgot to mention him. How the natives must have loved him! At one place they told Miss Myers concerning herself, "When you were at Carnot you were a little girl, but now 'mo ga kota awe.'" Tibati also said this very same thing ('Ga kota awe' is Sango, meaning 'you are full grown.')

"We had Yama with us and when we came to Zalagme who should rush up to him but Bengbai (the one whom Yama accused of causing the death of his first born by sorcery, and whom the attempt to implicate finally resulted in the tragedy of 1923, culminating in the burning of the mission store house and Yama's imprisonment at Bangui, where occurred his marvelous turning to the Lord, and the infilling of the Spirit who has made Yama such a mighty preacher of the gospel). Yama and Bengbai greeted each other like old friends. What marvelous grace the Lord has given to both!"

The same God is able to continue to make all grace abound toward us in every trial. "May the Lord watch between me and thee while we are absent one from another, and speedily reunite us." So concludes Miss Tyson's cheering letter.

In France also much of interest is occurring. Our Brother DeLozier arrived safely in Paris one month ago and is domiciled at Vitry, meanwhile taking a course at one of Paris' famous universities, the Sorbonne, for the month of July. He will attend the conference of French Christians at Digne in August.

Meanwhile my sister arrived July 3rd, and will sail August 20th with Marguerite for the States.

God seems to have shaped my course for August here in Paris, for it is here that I shall probably witness Marguerite's departure and welcome Brother and Sister Taber. The early days of September bring a farewell missionary conference at Morges, Switzerland. This conference, if the Lord will, I hope to attend, and to depart as soon thereafter as I may be permitted to do. Today Marguerite was transferred from my passport to my sisters, and I hardly dare look now at my own passport, with the cruel word "Cancelled," stamped in duplicate across Marguerite's sweet, brave little face, which has already seen so much of suffering and separation "For the sake of the NAME!" May his name be glorified!

Meanwhile the last preparations for the voyages of separation go steadily forward. Marguerites' ticket will be procured tomorrow. Purchases are being made for the missionaries on the field, our final preparations continue, and all this in the midst of French lessons and teachers.

I have not yet succeeded in getting a typist in Paris to assist me in putting my manuscripts in shape, but I feel sure one will shortly be obtained, perhaps even tomorrow, for our God has promised to supply all our need.

Beloved readers, may God give you a rich, deep blessing this year at National Conference. May it be a year when prayer shall be answered, missionaries thrust forth, the Lord Jesus honored!

For you and I, beloved, would rather bring honor to his name, than to have even the just fame of a Lindbergh, the applause of a Chamberlin, the publicity accorded to Byrd and his companions, or the scrutinizing attention given to Levine and Drouhin as they place themselves in the limelight of the arena of Europe to America aviation. For the sake of the Name let us press forward, true gospel aviators, in all things giving him the preeminence.

Faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

North Manchester, Indiana

This is one of the best known churches in this district and the readers of the Evangelist are familiar with its activities through the reports made. Dr. J. Raymond Schutz is the pastor and is one of the most popular and well known men on the lecture platform in this state. Besides his regular pulpit and pastoral work, he teaches in the North Manchester College, conducts an educational extension course, lectures before educational gatherings, clubs and other organizations. Since last September he has given 140 addresses outside of his regular church and school work. To say he is a busy man is expressing mildly, the strenuous and vigorous schedule he is following.

Brother Schutz is intensely interested in educational work and anxious for the future of our own school and gave me every support he was able in connection with his busy life. While he was not able to make the canvas with me, he provided satisfactory aid.

I found the North Manchester church aggressive, united and lined up with a big working program. While the enlargement of the building was being talked to accommodate their growing school, they have also committed themselves to a church extension program on the foreign field of South America. They are supporting Romanenghi, the son-in-law of Dr. Yoder.

The members of the church were very courteous to me and are interested in the activities of the general interests of the church and many responded in making gifts to the endowment. It was our pleasure to have with us on a Sunday night Judge F. O. Switzer of Wabash, a graduate of Ashland and a member of the Board of Trustees. He gave a personal testimony of the worth of Ashland College and made an appeal for the support of this campaign.

THE THIRD, ONE THOUSAND DOLLAR GIFT OF INDIANA, WAS MADE BY A MEMBER OF THIS CONGREGATION. This campaign must have more large gifts if the goal is reached, that has been set.

There were some handicaps to the campaign in not getting more money. The Church of the Brethren have a college in this place. Naturally the parents prefer to have their children at home while attending school and with a school in their own town they avail themselves of the opportunity. Also many of the young people whose parents are not financially able to send their children away, can do so with a school in their midst. These relationships form ties and with the college drives, some are carrying pledges for the school they graduated from.

This, with their obligation on the foreign mission field and a building schedule in the future did not help the sum total of my campaign. The total gift of this church to the endowment was $2,612.58.

We have not yet heard from the organizations of the congregations and I am sure that with the prospects there in mind, that before this campaign is over the North Manchester church will be crowding the leading churches.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING— SECOND REPORT

The offering is not coming as rapidly as I had hoped, but, no doubt, some of the gifts were in the form of pledges, and the treasurers are waiting for them to be paid.

I can hardly stress sufficiently, the importance to the college, of this offering, for when we make our formal application for entrance into the Association of Colleges, if this offering shall have averaged $2,000 per year for the past five years, it will count as $40,000 of permanent endowment, being the equivalent of 5% on that sum. Of course the offering would have to continue on that basis, and such an amount would work no hardship on any one. The cause is worthy and urgent, so let me beg that it may be sent in. Since my last report, dated June 28, gifts have been sent in as follows:

THREE MONTHS OF SPIRITUAL PROGRESS

The months of April, May and June have been strenuous and prosperous ones in our church life. There have been a few disappointments, but no discouragements. There have been tests, but not trials. The Lord has been very good to us as a people and honored us as we honored his word and his program for the church.

Missionary

April was "Missionary Month." The city of Johnstown is in an industrial slump, not only in the steel industry, but in almost every line. The membership of the church is composed of wage-earners,—90% so! This meant that our Easter Offering was threatened with a slump also. Through the medium of our church calendar, we put on a campaign of dissemination of missionary information for three Sundays preceding Easter. It won for us the third place among the churches in the Easter Offering. Far superior to this, on Easter Sunday morning, five of the splendid young people of our church publicly dedicated themselves for definite and life service for Jesus Christ. Three young men for the ministry and two young women for the missionary field. All of these except one have one more year of high school before they go to Ashland. This was the greatest missionary victory the church has ever won!

Evangelism

Nine have been added unto the church since April 1. These have come largely as a result of the inauguration of a Department of evangelism in the Sunday school with a Directress in charge. Instead of one Decision Day a year, there will be at least four. The city of Johnstown is a difficult field for evangelism. Praise the Lord for these nine souls won during months that are usually very unpromising.

Spiritual Life

The Mid-week service is counted a good test of the spiritual life. During the three months of this report, a series of studies in Prophecy was conducted on Wednesday nights. The attendance was most gratifying. Seldom did it drop below the 75 mark and several times reached the 150. The average was between 90 and 100. In the morning church services, we have given a series of expository studies in the Book of Romans which have deepened the spiritual life of the congregation and maintained most excellent attendance. It has been our frequent observation that nothing draws and holds the people better than the genuine, unadulterated Word of God.

Our communion service was a mountain-top experience. Preceding Communion Sunday Dr. Miller, Dean of our Seminary, gave us a series of Travelogue lectures of his trip to the Holy Land. They were an inspiration to all. Dr. Miller said of our communion, "It was one of the most spiritual and dignified communion services I have ever attended." Just a few less than 400 participated.

Music

Much is made in this church of good devotional music. The Ashland College Girls' Glee Club gave a most excellent concert. The pastor was compelled to be absent owing to the sudden death of his father, but the large audience reported a fine concert. Come again, Girls! A Volunteer Choir of 150 voices under the direction of our church rendered the "Messiah" in the month of May. Between 1100 and 1200 were present. It was a pronounced success and reported to be one of the greatest events in music in the city for the year.

Children's Day

With artistic decorations, arranged by Thomas Hammers, window decorator of the largest store in the city, making our beautiful auditoriums more beautiful, the largest attendance on Children's Day in the history of our school enjoyed the well arranged program rendered. It was a happy occasion. Yes, it rained! but, we beat all previous records in attendance any how. Praise the Lord!

Young People's Work

Our Christian Endeavor Societies continue zealous and prosperous. Inasmuch as we are uniting with 10 other churches of the city in union Sunday evening services during July and August, the Intermediates and Juniors have discontinued services until September 1. But, the Young People are holding theirs on Sunday morning at 8:45. Moreover, they are after the National Prize for the society maintaining the best percent of average attendance during these summer months. SEVEN MEMBERS of the Society attended the International C. E. Convention at Cleveland! We question if this record was duplicated at the Convention,—the President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, Chairman of Quiet Hour, Chairman of Publicity, and Pastor of our Society were present. We are proud of our young people. We have found that holding the standards high, even including 1 Corinthians 11 does not "drive the young people away from the church, but challenges them to scriptural living. If our young people become wishy-washy, shilly-shally, half-hearted, compromising Christians today, it may be the fault of the church lowering the standards.

CHARLES H. ASHMAN, Pastor.

PROF. DELOZIER ON "THE MAJESTIC"

Early on the morning of June 4th I arrived at New York bag and baggage, all prepared to sail on the world's biggest ship, "The Majestic." I went immediately to the deck and saw the funnels of the monster, tower above the buildings along the water front. I took my baggage in and properly tagged it with the number of stateroom and then went out to see New York. I had the day for it, but since Wall Street was to finance my trip, I went there first. But to avoid a lengthy story I come down to Friday evening. I wend my way to pier 59 and to my great surprise I run into a vast throng. I am lost, overwhelmed. But finally I get in touch with my group "Tourist Third Cabin." After awhile I get aboard the great Titan of the seas, which by the way is 20 feet longer than the ill-fated Titanic that struck the ice berg in 1911.

There was much to provoke laughter for the first hour aboard. We were shown our staterooms, but of course there were five stories and many hallways and stairs. After awhile there was a tendency to leave the stateroom and wander up on deck. But alas! Many were not able to find their way back to the proper room. I was lucky in that I was in no hurry to find my room. I wanted to see the fun. I stood in one of the halls where a man passed me four times, falling over a suitcase at last arising in despair. He declared he was lost and would have to give it up. He could not find his room. Other scenes were more humorous still, but I pass them. Naturally I will not tell whether I too got lost.

I spent the rest of time on deck until 2:40 A. M., when the pilot was taken off and the monster put on full speed ahead. A touching scene indeed, that of a ship leaving port. We were 2600 souls aboard. Fully as many were gathered at the dock to wave us off. They sang, they cheered, they jested, and finally at stroke of midnight, the whistles of several husky boats nearly opened up a siren tumult.

I heard a sound of "many waters" as though the ocean were in distress, and lo our four propellers were backing us out of the dock. When we were properly backed and turned, I noticed a little bit later that we were passing pier 59 from which we had backed. It seemed mysterious, but then happened to remember that our ship was 956 feet long and that I was on the rear deck. So I had some wee distance to go in order to get back opposite pier 59. I seemed a bit sad and one almost felt a regret as the skyline of old New York gradually slipped away and dropped imperceptibly below the horizon. Mr. Tiffany of Lancaster, and I decided to see the pilot off the ship, and so we watched the lights, the buoys and everything. After a long while sailing, and terrible commotion in the waters, "We are backing" cries Tiffany. As a matter of fact the ship almost came to a standstill. A mystery! But presently we went on. Finally the propellers ceased to operate. A red light came floating toward us. A lighter hauled up alongside, the boat is put out and with difficulty the long sailor fights his way across the waves. Little boat gets up to the very edge of the ship. Something falls like a meteor into the boat and as it pulls away, there are two men in it. The pilot is on his way back to New York harbor. A sailor on an upper back deck shouts down to my friend and me in Irish brogue, "Full spade (speed) ahead now;" and we retire for a few hours.

At 7:30 A. M. I was up and alas, our beloved U. S. A. had vanished. We were cutting through a fog and the whistle was giving an occasional toot, the usual background note with which every one is familiar who has chanced to make a sea voyage. I got assignment table 23, seat No. 345, second sitting or seating, as they perhaps call it. Friendships are rapidly formed. Games and contests and promenades, anything to pass six days on the briny deep.

Each noontime a bulletin is posted showing our mileage, our exact location. The line is lengthened a wee bit each 24 hours the great turbines roar on day and night we sight an occasional ship, our own continues to throw out a great slimy, foamy ribbon 200 feet wide and finally one afternoon at 3:30 we see a line on the horizon, a mere pencil mark as it were, but the sailors assure us it is land, every one glad to see mother earth, although we knew that we weren't far from land at any time, i. e., by straight down measurement. But the land we saw wasn't our destination. It was the Sicily Islands. A bit later a sailor shows us a light. "The French shore," he assures us. Propellers go on one-half speed, and finally the ship coasts. We retire, but cannot sleep. Having grown accustomed to the vibration we can't sleep when it ceases. About 2 A. M. (for I could not sleep) another red light approaches our ship. Another pilot comes aboard, the propellers begin to move slowly and finally we anchor within the breakwater at Cherbourg, ship too large to land. The piece of metal which is lowered into the water weighs 15 tons and the cable that lowers it weighs 69 tons, because the drum must contain enough for 150 fathoms.

Mystery! Forgot to tell you, we solved Saturday forenoon. Tiffany and I made inquiry and learned that the ship was rubbing bottom when we thought she was backing, and as a matter of fact, was being backed off the sand. Why does the Majestic leave New York at night? Must have high tide to get over Pennsylvania Railroad tunnels. Majestic draws 40 feet of water. My curiosity led me to solicit statistics from chief engineer.

All anchors and cable weigh 170 tons. Steering gear house as large as College chapel. Twin cylinder engines of over 300 horsepower turn the rudder which weighs complete 140 tons.

I had the rare privilege of going through the engine rooms. Pipes that lead steam to turbines are 42 inches in diameter. Each of four propellers is capable of 20,000 horsepower or 80,000 horsepower in all, when ship is doing her best. The ship carries 3,000 tons of fresh water from New York. In addition she carries 3,364 tons for boiler use. She also carries 991 tons for water ballast. The propeller shafts are sixteen and one-half inches in diameter. The ship carries a crew of 1,100 men.

Her tonnage is 56,000. Length, 956 feet, width 100 feet. Height 102 feet. 9 decks, stacks 30 feet in diameter. Accommodations for 4,100 people, speed 26 miles an hour. Four times around the deck is a mile. Yes, it was a thriller to live on that thing six days, but I was very glad to get off, too.

The Lord willing, I shall tell you about the getting off at some later date. Meanwhile I am pursuing courses at the Surbonne in the forenoon and visiting museums in the afternoon. A strenuous life, indeed!

A. L. DELOZIER.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS TITHE?

The obligation of the tithe in the dispensation is quite a problem to many sincere Christians. Not a few persons have written us, asking whether we had anything from our pen on the subject. They wonder whether a man is a legalist who follows the law of the tithe in his giving to the Lord. In reply, we might say, Yes, and No. If a person gives the one-tenth solely because the Law says so, then, without a doubt, he is a legalist. If he gives the one-tenth because of his love for his Lord and for want of a better rule for systematic giving, we would then say, No. For instance, nine of the ten commandments of the decalogue are enforced in the New Testament.

Is a man a legalist because he keeps those nine commandments? By no means. He keeps them, not because the Law of Moses says so, but because Christ and the Apostles say so. But in any event the law of the tithe must never be converted into an iron-clad rule. And if Grace is better than Law, and it is, then Grace ought to lead us to do voluntarily a little more of the Law exacted by compulsion. Beloved, please do not disgrace your profession as a Christian by being guilty of thinking that the believer under Grace should be more selfish than the Jew under Law. And who would be willing to judge the Lord Jesus of lowering the standard of a single grace or virtue, not even the grace of liberality or giving? The very suggestion of such a thing is an absurdity. The New Testament standard is never and in no sense lower than that of the Old Testament standard.—From "King's Business."

NO-TOBACCO LEAGUE AT WINONA

The No-Tobacco League of America will hold its twelfth annual convention at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 15 and 16. It is a nationally incorporated institution devoted to a thorough study of the tobacco problem with the purpose of finding a sane, practical solution of it.

Any one interested in this question is invited to attend the convention and freely participate in its deliberations. Churches, Sunday schools, Young People's Religious Societies, Parent-Teacher Associations, W. C. T. U's, and all organizations standing for human welfare are asked to appoint representatives.

The work of the No-Tobacco League is not primarily one of reformation nor of legislation, but of education. Its motto is: "Let us keep the young folks clean from the blight of nicotine; let us teach the youth the truth about tobacco."

The League is building up a great nationwide organization with subsidiary organizations in every state. States form county organizations to carry the program of education into every school district.

The League prints and distributes hundreds of thousand of pages of literature dealing with the various phases of the tobacco problem.

The League would like to enroll in its membership all those who have a conviction that the tobacco habit is a bad one—particularly for young folks. It is especially anxious to find men and women who are proficient and efficient to take charge of organizational and educational work in various states.

Any one who is interested and desires further information can obtain it by writing Charles M. Fillmore, General Secretary, The No-Tobacco League of America, 821 Occidental Building, Indianapolis, Indiana.

A BEQUEST TO CHURCH INTERESTS

It is with great pleasure that I make the announcement of a gift, left by the late Mrs. Mary Jollif, to the Brethren church. Mrs. Jollif was an active member of the Fairhaven church and was always ready to carry her share of the burden of the work of the church. When she realized that she had only a short time to live she still held the cause of Brethrenism and the advancement of the work of the kingdom upon her heart and made arrangements for a gift of five hundred dollars to be divided as follows:

One hundred to South American missions.
One hundred to African missions.
One hundred to the Brethren Home.
One hundred to General Home missions.
One hundred to Kentucky Missions.

This distribution shows that Mrs. Jollif realizes the meaning of the words of Jesus when he said, "Go ye into all the world." While she could not go to the field in person I am sure that her heart was there with the work, and this gift that she left will do its part in carrying the Word of God even "unto the uttermost parts of the world."

The church greatly feels the loss of Sister Jollif, but the memory of her life and work goes on.

May God so work in the lives of his people that many more as they near the end of life's journey, may remember his bountiful blessings and will do their part that the work of the Kingdom may go on.

May God bless those who mourn the loss of Mrs. Jollif and bring to them comfort and cheer by the fact that she loved and served her Master.

GEORGE C. PONTIUS,
Pastor of Fairhaven Church.

GENERAL CONFERENCE 1927

The General Conference of the Brethren churches of America will assemble at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 22-28, 1927. The first regular meeting will be on Monday night at 7:30 and sessions daily, almost hourly, will continue until the last meeting on Sunday night. The program will appear in the Brethren Evangelist in a short time.

Entertainment

The facilities at Winona for board and lodging are so well known that a word only need be written. The Winona management promises sufficient room for all. The Westminster Hotel offers splendid accommodations at reasonable rates. The Inn is the popular home for many. Cottage rooms are always available and the camp grounds are in good order for camping.

The Program

A strong program has been arranged. With the thought of giving each organization of the church an opportunity of presenting its particular work representative speakers have been assigned timely subjects and real messages will be given.

Delegates and pastors, especially pastors, should attend every session. The habit of some of the pastors standing outside the building or engaging in recreation during conference hours is causing some churches and organizations to wonder, why conference anyhow. The attractions at Winona are numerous and can be fully enjoyed between sessions. The eleven o'clock Bible hour is to be taken by Rev. W. P. White, a noted Bible teacher of the West.

Let many from near and far make this a most successful gathering.

A. V. KIMMELL,
Secretary Executive Committee.

EASTER OFFERING REPORT

Below will be found the final report of the Easter Offering for 1927, to the work of Foreign Missions. Detailed report, giving names of donors according to churches, will appear in the July issue of "The Brethren Missionary." The Treasurer regrets that this year quite a few churches sent their Easter offering reports in too late to be included. As all were advised, the Treasurer's books close on June 30th, and July 1st is too late. The booklet showing the Treasurer's Annual Report of Receipts and Expenditures, will be mailed to each member of the Foreign Missionary Society some time in August.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

A FAMILY AWAKENING

"These biscuits are certainly good, mother," said Hal Evarts, at home from college for his spring vacation.

"Mother's biscuits are always fine," his sister Clarice reminded him.

"That's right," added Mr. Evarts. "Mother is the champion when it comes to making biscuits."

Mrs. Evarts did not smile back at them as she usually smiled when they praised her cooking. "Biscuits!" she exclaimed with a bitterness that was wholly strange in her. "Biscuits! Always biscuits; Hal comes home from college, and the first things he says is, 'Mother, please make some biscuits for breakfast.' Not a word about his college doings, although I was counting on hearing. Clare brings her musical friend home; I love music, and Clare knows it, but instead of hoping I would enjoy her friend she says: 'Won't you please make some of your lovely biscuits for lunch?' Your father telephones he is bringing Professor Mellon home for dinner, 'And won't you have some of your famous biscuits?' I think you had better put on my tombstone, 'We miss her because she made good biscuits!'" She pushed back her chair and hurriedly left the room, leaving a startled and almost frightened family behind her.

"It—it isn't just the biscuits," Clarice said, and her eyes filled. "It's because it's been nothing but biscuits."

Her father nodded. "You've put your finger on the trouble. We're all guilty. We must find some way to make her understand that she is far more to us than just a biscuit-maker."

"Would it be all right for me to go up and tell her about college now?" Hal asked contritely.

"That would be as good a way as any to begin," said his father.

Hal's mother sat up and dried her eyes as he entered her room. "I'm ashamed of the way I exploded—like a spoiled child," she said apologetically.

"You should have exploded long ago," Hal replied. "We didn't mean to make you think you were only our biscuit-maker."

And he told her one college happening after another until he had her laughing.

That afternoon Mr. Evarts telephoned, "Come down town and let's have dinner together and then go to the opera," he said to his wife.

They had an enjoyable evening. Coming home late, Mrs. Evarts found a note from Clarice on her dresser. "I am going to get breakfast," it read. "You are to stay in bed until I call you."

So it went all the week. Clarice insisted on getting breakfast regularly. At first her mother enjoyed it, but after a few days she was aware that something was missing.

The morning before Hal was to go back, Mrs. Evarts overheard him say to his father: "Guess I'll slip out with you and get something to eat. Clare's breakfasts are fluffy—"

"But not filling like mother's biscuits," finished his father.

The next morning Mrs. Evarts was in the kitchen when Clarice appeared. "Mother!" exclaimed the girl reproachfully.

"You're a dear," said her mother, laughing, "but you set the table, and I'll get breakfast. I don't want to forget how."

The family were assembled when she came into the dining room, carrying a plate of fluffy brown biscuits.

"Biscuits!" cried Hal.

"Biscuits!" echoed Mr. Evarts.

And "Oh, biscuits," said Clarice.

Then they all looked guiltily at one another.

"Yes, biscuits," repeated Mrs. Evarts, laughing. "I have concluded that making good biscuits for a good family is a good job. Only—I do get a bit tired of having it all biscuits."

"It's not going to be all biscuits after this!" they assured her tenderly, but emphatically.—The Companion.

Suggestions for General Conference Action

The emphasis here is on "action", and of the kind that is calculated to give inspiration and guidance to congregational activity. Sometimes our Conferences have lacked that practical helpfulness that one has a right to expect from such gatherings because they failed to give the delegates anything tangible in the way of plans and objectives to carry away with them. Bible instruction and inspirational addresses are all very fine, but they should issue in something, they should lead to action, they should inspire us to some higher course of endeavor and result in plans that point the way.

It is an advantage to a congregation to have something definite to work toward, a goal to challenge its effort or a program to guide its activity. It is possible for each congregation to formulate its own program and set its own goal, but that does not result in that denominational unity, that oneness of purpose and aim, and that concerted, cooperative effort that makes for strength. The Evangelist, therefore, believes in the advisability of the formation of a denominational program and offers the following suggestions, not with the thought they are the sum total of essentials to an acceptable program for general church activity, but that they are worthy of consideration in the formation of such a program. And even if no program should be deemed advisable by Conference, it would seem worth while for it to express itself along these lines for the inspiration and guidance of congregational action.

First, there is need of the preparation of a guide, and the adoption of a program urging more widespread, definite and thorough instruction and training of young people in Brethren principles and practices.

Second, Conference should urge a program or offer suggestions calculated to stimulate the ministry to more zealous evangelistic preaching and to enlist laymen more largely and definitely in personal evangelism to the end that greater progress may be made in the saving of souls and the building up of the church.

Third, the grace of giving should in some manner be stressed and the people urged to conscientiously acknowledge the principle of stewardship in both life and substance, and to adopt some definite plan for the recognition of that stewardship, as for example, the giving of a tenth of the income as a minimum of Gospel requirement.

Fourth, the urging of churches to give more thought to the task of interesting, enlisting, training and holding of boys in the life and work of the church.

Fifth, the taking of such steps as will place the Brethren church among the leaders, which is her rightful place, in the promotion of world peace, in the education of her membership and of the public up to the Gospel attitude toward war, and in the marshalling of sentiment against militaristic programs and against national conduct that leads to war.

Sixth, to urge upon our churches and Sunday schools more intensive instruction in temperance and good citizenship, especially as relates to liquor drinking, the drug evil, personal purity, obedience to law and the Christian use of the ballot.

And seventh, that General Conference standing committees, many of which serve only to clutter up Conference Minutes, shall be urged to activity, that provision shall be made for necessary expense, and that written reports shall be required at each annual conference of the work done during the preceding year.

Now we cannot expect that these suggestions will meet the approval of all, and it may be that they would be accepted in their entirety by very few. It may even be that a dozen other prospective delegates would wish to submit each an entirely different program. If so, well and good, if Conference is thereby brought to adopt a comprehensive and vital program, or to challenge the churches to united activity along essential and practical lines.

Papal Rota Nullifies Marriage

The divorce mill is terribly overrun and many a grist is ground out even among Protestant church members that could never be justified in the sight of God or man. This deplorable fact of which we are all duly ashamed is siezed upon by some unfair or uninformed critics of our social order to make unfavorable comparisons between Catholics and Protestants in this regard. Their claim that the Catholic church does not allow divorces is true in name only; it isn't divorce with Catholics, it is nullity of marriage. Separation through nullification of the marriage vow is not so frequent among Catholics as divorce is among Protestants, because for one thing the process is so expensive. The great mass of people cannot afford it, and that doubtless proves a blessing to them. But when Rome is sufficiently interested there has always been found a way out of matrimonial difficulties. The papal rota has recently discovered that the marriage of Signor Marconi had never been valid, though for nearly a quarter of a century it had passed as such. His Protestant wife divorced him in 1924, and now, in order that he may be enabled to marry a countess of the papal aristocracy, it is found that he was never really married at all. The first supposed marriage is declared null, says the Christian Century, because the contracting parties, urged by the bride's mother, agreed in advance that it should be subject to the ordinary civil law with regard to the possibility of divorce, and not absolutely indissoluble as Catholic law requires.

A Doctor on Prohibition

There is so much propaganda and counter propaganda scattered about the country these days concerning prohibition that many people become confused and are inclined to discredit both those who make a business of promoting the policy as well as those who are interested in undermining it. For such, a word from a man who has a scientific mind, whose business is medicine and whose standing and authority is recognized by his fellow-physicians throughout the nation, ought to have a reassuring influence on their faith in the worth and wisdom of the Prohibition policy. These words are all the more significant because they were spoken not to a popular gathering, but to a convention of physicians and surgeons—before the American Medical Association recently assembled in Chicago. A correspondent reported these words to the Christian Index:

"Dr. Arthur Dean Devan, who is chairman of the Council of Medical Education of the Association, declared that the Eighteenth Amendment from the standpoint of personal hygiene and public health is the most important legislation ever passed in America, and that if it were in the power of the nation to legislate out of existence tuberculosis or cancer, such legislation would be passed over night and strictly enforced. He contends that drink did more injury to the people of this country before prohibition than either of these plagues, and that prohibition has accomplished an enormous amount of good already, and that with better enforcement it can accomplish much more for the health and welfare of our people. He states that the medical profession as a whole recognizes that fact and supports the Constitution and the Volstead Act, and that those of the medical profession who were taking advantage of a certain provision of the Volstead Act make up a noisy and active minority that is selling its soul for a mess of pottage. He thinks that the government made the provision for the use of alcohol as a medical agent altogether too liberal. In comparing the present with the past in this regard, he said that honest physicians formerly never prescribed one hundred pints of whiskey in a period of three months, and he holds that ninety-nine out of a hundred prescriptions written for whiskey are bootlegging prescriptions and are a disgrace to the medical profession."

Such words ought to strengthen the moral stamina of doctors as well as reassure the mind of the populace and make for greater respect for Prohibition. It cannot be considered a mere fad of reformers, that has swept the country off its feet, when men of that type count it so fundamental.

Mob Rule Unabated

Progress against mob rule is made very slowly and intermittently, and just now the movement seems to be at a standstill. There were the same number of lynchings during the first six months of this year as occurred during the first six months of each of the last two years. According to the records of the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute there were nine lynchings during the first six months of this year, all of which were of Negroes; two in Arkansas, one in Louisiana, four in Mississippi, one in Missouri and one in Texas.

Discouraging though these figures are, there are signs that justify hope that the not-far-distant future holds in store a brighter day in this regard. Of all the efforts being put forth to discourage mob rule, we look upon the action of a group of the most representative women of the state of Mississippi, met to protest against this very thing, as having the most promise. This state has sinned most flagrantly in outbreaks of mob violence, and it is not surprising that its good women have spoken out strongly against such disgraceful procedure. But the thing that makes their action especially significant is the fact that the usual excuse for such acts is the defense of the honor of womanhood. When the public mind is strongly and widely impressed with the idea that women do not appreciate such protection, and in fact hold in disrepute men who resort to such means, lynchings will not be so frequent. These women expressed themselves as follows:

"We place ourselves on record as unalterably opposed to mob murder. The barbaric practice of lynching arouses unchristian passions, violates the sovereignty of our state, brings Mississippi into disrepute in the eyes of the world, and brutalizes all those who come within its evil influence. As southern women we hold that no circumstances can ever justify mob action and that in no instance is it an exhibition of chivalric consideration for the honor of womanhood."

Eastern Palestine has been visited by a severe earthquake, causing considerable loss of life and property. According to latest reports 670 were killed and at least 3,000 were injured, and property damage is estimated to amount to $2,000,000. The city of Nablus, ancient Shechem, near the site of Jacob's Well, was almost completely demolished, the entire city, with the exception of two streets, being reported in ruins. At Jerusalem the new Hebrew University was damaged to the extent of about $50,000, the library and chemical laboratory suffering most. It is considered significant by orthodox Jews that no casualties have been reported among the Jewish population. The Rabbis of Jerusalem have called upon the people to assemble in their synagogues to offer thanksgiving to God for their deliverance. The Zionist Congress will be appealed to for relief funds.

Beauty is not a matter of surface, but of content and expression, and improvement along this line can be had not with the powder puff but with ennobling thoughts and unselfish service.

"What hast thou, that thou hast not received?" Let the man who boasts of his achievements or possessions or attainments face this question frankly and he will lose some of his conceit.

Character is never an inheritance, nor do men come upon it accidentally; it comes as the result of persistent purpose and aspiration, of struggle and overcoming.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The correspondent from the Hammer church near Franklin, West Virginia, writes of their appreciation of the services of their present pastor, Brother J. I. Hall, and others who have shepherded the flock in the past. Brother Hall, though superannuated, is still preaching the Word where opportunity offers. Those who have spent their lives in this noblest of all callings, find it hard to quit preaching, it seems, even when they reach the age where they can no longer stand the rigors of the regular pastorate. God bless such fathers in Israel.

Our readers will enjoy the interesting letter of Prof. A. L. DeLozier who writes from France, continuing the record of his trip where he left off last week. He tells of his landing at Cherbourg and the subsequent railroad trip to Paris and the scenes and experiences on the way. It is fine of Prof. DeLozier to share with us this much of the pleasures of his trip, but not having even a smattering of the French language, neither the editor nor proof-reader can vouch for the correct reproduction of his French expressions.

The realization of the long-standing ambition of the Elkhart, Indiana, church is within sight when they are able to report the laying of the cornerstone of their new church. Prof. W. I. Duker is the able pastor and has been the leading spirit in the accomplishment thus far. To his leadership the entire membership has rallied in a way that makes for success and the splendid lay leadership on which he has depended has been an arm of strength to him. It is evident that not only was history made by this congregation on this memorable event, but a considerable portion of it was closed and sealed in their cornerstone. However, we dare say the church has a bright future and much history will yet be written. Prof. J. A. Garber, a former pastor, and the present pastor were the speakers of the occasion.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports the offerings of the Roanoke, and Huntington, Indiana, churches to the Ashland College Endowment fund. These churches are not strong either numerically or financially and consequently their gifts were not large. But it is always better for a church to do what it can even though small, than to refuse to do anything because it cannot measure up favorably with other churches. We have found members of a congregation hesitating and even refusing to make pledges for the support of the local work because they felt unable to do what others were doing. If a member is not merely trying to evade doing what he is able and ought to do, he has no reason to be ashamed of the size of his pledge however small it may be. But if one is unwilling to do his part, he has reason to be ashamed. However, to refuse to make a pledge is merely to advertise one's lack of loyalty. Of course we were speaking of churches doing their part in our brotherhood programs but this thought needs to be dropped for the benefit of individuals as well. The same principles apply in both cases. The Roanoke church is without a pastor. The Huntington congregation is being shepherded by Brother O. G. Lewis.

We are glad for the extended report of the Young People's Camp and Bible Conference at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana. We have been a little slow in getting at this sort of thing and we need to make much of it so as to stir our people more widely to an appreciation of its importance. Young People can be interested and their loyalty can be counted on if programs are built to suit their needs. We have often complained about the lack of young people at our various district and national conferences, while the trouble has usually been that we have left them out of consideration in building our programs. The criticism is not so much on what we have put in as on what we have left out from time to time. Whatever be the nature of the gathering, if the presence and active interest of young people are desired, a program should be prepared that appeals to them and speakers and leaders secured who have their viewpoint. We congratulate the Indiana management and the Ashland College professors, Drs. J. A. Garber and R. R. Haun, for the success of this venture. The Bible Conference week was not the success it ought to have been because, as Dr. Rench points out, the advertising was defective. But another year will profit by the mistakes of this.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Shepherding the Flock

By Homer A. Kent

"The elders which are among you I exhort, who am also an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory that shall be revealed: feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock. And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."—1 Peter 5:1-4.

In approaching the subject at hand I want to say that I feel very humble in its presence. When notice came that I was to speak on "Shepherding the Flock", at once I was a bit at a loss to know why I should be called upon to deal with such a subject when there are so many others who have had many more years of experience as shepherd's of God's flock than I have had. It would be a pleasure for me to sit and listen to some one who has been a leader of the flock of God for many years and profit by their experiences. But since that is not mine today I have been thinking very earnestly of this our task as pastors, as ministers of the Gospel. And in this connection let us consider a brief portion of scripture. (Above). With this Scripture before us a challenging truth is evident. Jesus Christ is the One great Shepherd who is over the entire flock of God. Every sheep is his. But he has appointed others who are after his heart to be his under-shepherds to watch after the several portions of the great flock scattered over the whole broad world.

How clearly then can we see that as pastors, and that word comes from shepherd life, we are co-laborers together with Christ. It is ours to care for Christ's flock in his absence. There is no more responsible task in the world than this. There is no task that promises so much. And there is no task on earth that requires more of a man than this.

Therefore we ought to set ourselves to this task. It ought to be the desire of our hearts, the prayer we often make, that God would give to us real shepherd hearts, that he would make of us better care-takers of the flock he has given us to oversee. In thinking of this our task it occurs to me that there are at least three attitudes that each one of us as a shepherd or a pastor should assume.

I. First there is the attitude of learning. We should earnestly seek to know the members of the flock over which we are placed. That Other Shepherd said of himself "I know my sheep." It is characteristic of the really good shepherd that he knows his sheep, and he calls them by name.

Many times at the noon hour in the Holy Land one can see even today the weary shepherds lead their sheep to a spring of water for refreshment and rest. The sheep of the different flocks will intermingle and the shepherds will chat together until it is time to seek the pastures again. Then each shepherd will give his own peculiar call and the sheep will come out from among the mingled crowd and find their own shepherd. Just before going out to the pasture the shepherd will give a last glance to see if all his sheep are present. He can tell in an instant, he knows them so well. And then they are away.

Jesus likened himself to such a shepherd. How well he knew every member of his flock! And knowing each member as he did, he knew how to deal with each one. He knew the elements of Peter's character and he worked upon them to make of him the mighty preacher of Pentecost. He knew what was in the heart of Thomas and he so dealt with him that he became his undying friend, his doubts all chased away. He understood the loving heart of John and so moulded it that he became the great Apostle of love. How perfectly he knew the woman at the well. Her scarlet heart was the occasion for masterful tact. Think how truly he measured the heart of Saul of Tarsus to make out of him Paul the evangel of a new hope. One of the outstanding characteristics of Christ's ministry was his thorough knowledge of the hearts of men and his consequent dealings with those men.

Christ the Great Shepherd, has set the example for his under-shepherds in this respect. As far as it is possible for us to do so we ought to know the hearts of the sheep of our pasture. How much better we could do our work did we know the individuals that make up our congregation. Each one is different. Each one has different capacities and capabilities. Each one has a different outlook. Each one a different setting. Each one a different opportunity. We can never make them all alike. And

WHAT YOUR PASTOR WISHES YOU

From morn till noon, from noon till night,
From night till hours of waking light;
From days to weeks, from weeks to years;
Through rain and shine thro' smiles and tears;
God Bless You!

When friends are nigh to aid and cheer;
When those unkind to you are near;
When all goes well with what you do;
When life is dark and lonely, too;
God Bless You!

When Joy attends your Golden Day;
When Grief walks with you on your way
When Hope your labors doth sustain;
When all your efforts seem in vain;
God Bless You!

When skies are bright where'er you are;
When o'er your way no guiding star;
Where'er your path of life may lead;
Be health and strength your gift or need;
God Bless You!

—Central Christian Advocate.

God never intended they should all be alike. How uninteresting life would be were we all the same! Look now at your flock. Is there a Peter in it? Impetuous, impulsive, impatient? But withal loyal, true, lovable. Is there a John there? Devoted, thoughtful, deep? Is there a Thomas? Doubtful but willing to learn? Is there a Martha there, a Mary, a Hannah? One of the biggest tasks that confronts you and me as true ministers is to learn to know our sheep, to recognize the differences among them, and to deal intelligently with them even as Christ did. Too many of us fail at this point. We lack patience and tact. We lack breadth of consideration. We are too intolerant. And here we use that word advisedly. Some ministers have utterly failed because devoid of all tact in dealing with those who differed with them, who did not see eye to eye with them. Let us pray that God will help us to know our sheep so that we may direct the different talents and personalities into the channels of greatest usefulness in the Master's service. Let us not offend one of Christ's own without cause. First then the attitude of learning.

II. Then there is the attitude of loving. If we are to be good shepherds we must have a great love. We must have a love that is born from above. This love will express itself in its attitude toward God and toward men.

When Jesus talked with Peter on the shores of Galilee after the Resurrection, the question he asked him was, "Lovest thou me?" Then the command was "Feed my sheep." But, Brethren, in the ministry, there is nothing we need more than this, a deep, burning love for Jesus Christ. We are in danger of becoming cold in our love for him. His Word is likely to become commonplace until our hearts no longer burn within us as he talks with us by the way. Let us be much in his presence, let us contemplate much the sufferings of Christ and his purpose, that we in truth may be heralds of a passion, and that passion Christ.

And if our personal relation to Christ is that of a Lover, then the other will follow necessarily, we will have a great love for men for whom Christ died. Unless we do love men how can we expect to win them. One of the outstanding characteristics of the life of Moody was his love for men. It didn't matter much who the men were. He loved them and he couldn't help pouring out his heart to them. In the barber chair, on the street, in the tram car, anywhere, he was always talking to men of their Savior. Because he loved Christ? Yes. But also because he loved men and wished for them the best that life could offer. It is so with every great soul winner. We must love men to the extent that we will be ready to give our lives for them in unselfish service. That was Jesus' love for men. "A good shepherd giveth his life for his sheep." The Palestine shepherd is a lonely man. He separates himself from his fellows. He lives in solitary places. He is always with his sheep, providing for them, protecting them, healing them. He literally gives his life for his sheep. Surely that is the picture of the ideal pastor. He lives for his flock, to help them, to love them, feed them, ever thinking as he serves them of that other Good Shepherd who lay down his life that the whole flock of God might enter the eternal fold.

III. Then we ought, as pastors, to assume the attitude of leading. The true shepherd is a leader. Every morning when we were in Palestine we would see the shepherds leading their flocks out of the folds to the pastures to graze. As shepherds of the flock of God we assume a like relationship to the sheep of our fold. We are leaders by virtue of our calling. In this leadership there is involved tremendous responsibility for where we lead the sheep will surely follow. In what respects are we leaders? By our own personal lives first. In our text Peter tells us that we are to be ensamples to the flock. It is a law of physics that water will rise no higher than its source. So in religion it is like priest, like people. The spiritual life of our church is not likely to rise any higher than the spiritual life of its pastor. So if we would be the spiritual leaders that we ought to be we will take great care to the lives we lead. There is no greater tragedy that can occur within our church than when one of its pastors goes wrong in his moral or spiritual life. There is nothing that casts such reflection upon the church of Jesus Christ as when shame comes upon its ministry. Such deflection causes the sheep to stumble and little wonder is it if the flock is broken up. Let us remember therefore that we are in a very peculiar sense Christ's representatives and examples in the Christian life to those to whom we minister.

We are leaders furthermore in respect to teaching the Word of God and in instruction in the Christian life. "Feed the flock of God" we are commanded. "Preach the Word", Paul told Timothy. Find the green pastures for the flock. The shepherd hunts everywhere for the best pasture for his sheep. On the high moor, in the valley, by the brook. Are we searching the Word of God for the best spiritual food for our people? That is our business. It means that we will need to give ourselves to much study. This ought to be stressed in these days when there are so many calls for the pastor's services. Are we really feeding the flock of God? I heard a man say sometime ago, "I don't care to hear that preacher preach. He says the same thing every Sunday." Knowing the preacher as I did I think I can tell what was the matter. He neglected his study. He read nothing. Consequently he had nothing to give his people. O, let us not fail at this point. The people have a right to expect food for their souls. They need it. We must study the Word that we may build up the saints in the most holy faith.

Finally, pastors are to be leaders of the flock in the matter of warning them of the pitfalls along the way. In these days when there are so many "isms" and false doctrines abroad we ought to be able to lead our people in a clear faith in Jesus Christ as their Savior and sure Refuge. One day when traveling in an automobile along the plains of Moab, we came upon a flock of sheep grazing upon the landscape. Being somewhat frightened at the sound of the motor car the sheep ran quickly and surrounded their shepherd who was not far distant. By his side they felt secure. Pastors should be able in times of danger and perplexity to gather their flocks about them and provide for them that security that they so much need. We can do it if steeped in God's Word and filled with the presence of his Spirit.

To all faithful pastors there is promised a special reward. The crown of glory is meant for the under-shepherds. We can not know all that that reward will bring of glory and satisfaction. But what could be more blessed than at the end of a long and faithful ministry to be able to look back upon a multitude of Christ's sheep that we have been instrumental in leading into the fold? What could bring greater joy than to have come to us over there and tell us we were responsible for their presence in the eternal fold? God grant that this may be true of each of us, then we shall have in some sense at least, fulfilled our task.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Taking Hold of God

By Louis S. Bauman

TEXT: "And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee." Isaiah 64:7.

(Concluded from last week)

Sometimes we hear it said that "the day of miracles has passed." O, no! God is not yet dead! Miracles are just as common today, as men are common who lay hold on God! The man that takes hold on God at eventime, and still clings when "the day breaketh," is working miracles. One time during the Boxer uprising in China, some Boxers set fire to a building near a fort in which some missionaries were defending themselves. The strong wind was blowing the flames directly to the fort, and the refuge of the missionaries was about to burn. The missionaries dropped upon their knees and prayed to God. Before they arose from their knees, the wind suddenly shifted and blew from the opposite direction. Soon it commenced raining, and before the Boxers could attempt another maneuver, the relief army came. If that incident were recorded as having occurred in the first century, it would be considered as a divine interposition,—a miracle. Why is it not even so in the nineteenth century? Prayer will do all today that it has ever done. Prayer has rolled the sea back as a scroll; divided rivers; forced sweet, cool water out of flinty rocks; opened and made fruitful barren wombs; recalled spirits back to bodies again; bursted open iron gates; hanged the wicked on their own gallows; overthrown vast armies; muzzled the mouths of raging lions; quenched the power of the fiercest possible flame; drawn the venom from vipers; bridled the raging passions of men; commanded legions of demons; closed up the heavens and opened them again; yea, has even halted the sun and the moon in their swift races. This, prayer has done, and, if necessary, can do again. And, wonder of wonders, it is our privilege to exercise prayer!

Prayer is neither sentiment nor theory. Prayer will do certain things just as a pen will write, a gun will shoot, or a knife will cut. To lay hold on God is to do very practical things. They have a custom in the villages along the Rhine, of anchoring a grist-mill in the river, where the current is strongest, and making the rapids grind food for the whole community. Through prayer, we can plant ourselves in the mid-stream of God's plans and purposes, and let the currents of divine power sweep over us. One day God said to Hudson Taylor, "Taylor, I purpose to evangelize Inland China. I will do it through you if you will let me." Immediately, Taylor planted himself in the mid-stream of God's plan and purpose. Down on his knees he went, and the currents of divine power began to flow around his life. Prayer, and prayer alone, became the basis of the most remarkable missionary work of the past century. At first, the "practical" men scoffed at the idea. They stigmatized this work as "a wild scheme", "without foundation", "lacking all the elements of stability and permanence",—a work that would get men and women into Inland China and then "leave them there to starve," and all that. But today, the largest force working for God in China is the China Inland Mission, with its hundreds of missionaries, and during all the long years of its existence, not one soul has yet starved to death. No man has been asked for a dollar for that work. The work was the Lord's, and Taylor looked to God alone to supply the funds. At the Mission Home in London, prayer is made without ceasing unto God, and God continues to answer prayer in a marvelous way!

Some time ago, a minister in Scotland suddenly began to preach with wonderful and strange power. The congregation became aroused, and sinners began flocking to Christ. The congregation was amazed at the sudden change, and the preacher himself was at a loss to know just what had happened. The blessing was at last traced to an old woman, who was as deaf as a post. Yet, she came regularly to the church, and while she could not hear a word that the preacher said, she could pray, and she did pray! A stone-deaf old woman had laid hold on God,—and that was all! But that did what all the organizing, and scheming, and planning, and talking had failed to do. She simply exercised the power that lies in every one of us to exercise. Will you lay hold on God? Will you quit your planning; will you wipe the sweat from your brow and be still long enough to give God a chance? We do not say that we must not work, that we must not put forth our hands in the work. But let God plan that work, and let God empower our hands for that work. Nothing can transform a church, wipe out the petty jealousies, remove the dissensions, purify the very atmosphere so that sinners breathe in the breath of life almost as soon as they once enter its doors,—like the spirit of prayer, kept alive by "the faithful few" who know how to lay hold on Jehovah's omnipotence. There need be no fuss nor trumpet blasts. There needs be only a taking hold of God!

There is a great deal of very earnest prayer these days that is not effective. It reaches out like a drowning man,—wildly, vainly grasping, but failing to lay hold. How often do people say: "Why does not God answer my prayer? I have prayed so earnestly! Wherein have I failed?" All prayer must be based upon the will of God. There are some things in which it may be hard for us to determine exactly what the will of the Father is concerning us. In such cases, we should seek very earnestly to know the Father's will, before we attempt to lay hold for the thing itself. However, there are other things that are manifestly according to the will of God, and are promised us. For such things, we ought to lay hold of God and command the blessing beyond the peradventure of a doubt. "But what when we don't receive, even that which is according to promise?" you ask.

Once upon a time, the writer was in Indiana, and his family was in Kansas. He had arranged to meet them at a certain town in Indiana, on a certain train and on a certain date. Accordingly, he went to that town, and when the train rolled into the station, not one of the family appeared. He waited for the next train, and some hours later, and still they did not appear. They had faithfully promised that they would come. What did he know? Just one thing,—he knew that something was wrong somewhere. If God has made you a definite promise, and you have not received the fulfillment of that promise in answer to your prayer, I know just one thing without a doubt, and that is,—something is wrong somewhere. It may be that you are harboring some sin in your heart. The Psalmist said: "If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me."

If you are harboring sin within your heart, you cannot command God. Some years ago, a man walking along one of the streets in New York City was seen to fall. When he was taken to the hospital, the surgeons thought he had a tumor on his brain, because he was quite paralyzed. However, a surgical operation was performed, and it was found that a small spicular bone, not much larger than a pin, caused the paralysis. For years that bone had agitated the nerve centers and had caused a chronic congestion of the brain. When the bone was removed, the man became perfectly well.

Many Christians are in a state of paralysis. They are not dead. They are alive, but paralyzed. They have no strength, no energy, no vigor. They want to do something,—they try to do something,—they do do a little something,—but, O, when we look at the little work they do, and then think that these very people might command the power of God! Paralyzed! And the "bone" that paralyzes most Christians is some known sin or impurity. Paralyzed! And then they come and ask why it is that they cannot lay hold on God. It is simply because they have lost power to raise an arm to grip or lay hold of anything. Cut away that "bone" of tobacco, that "bone" of unholy dress, that "bone" of an ungodly fellowship, that "bone" of sinful amusement, that "bone" of sexual impurity,—cut away all that is marring the purity of your Christian manhood or womanhood. Get right with God. Then go and lay hold of God, and see!

Again, James tells us that, "Ye ask and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your own lusts." A little boy, whose conduct had caused his mother to say that she was afraid he had forgotten to pray, said, "Yes, I do pray; I pray every night that God may make you and pa like my ways better!" There is an immense amount of selfishness in our prayers today. God cannot be deceived. He knows well the real motive of all our prayers. If we pray selfishly, we "ask amiss," and shall receive nothing. Study the lives of the men and women who have prevailed with God in prayer, and you will notice that without exception, they were lives surrendered to the will of God. They sought not their own, but God's glory. All selfishness is sin, and God will certainly not cater to its desires, no matter how much we pray.

Again, our prayers, while they may be according to promise, and while they may not be rooted in selfishness, may not take hold of God because of a lack of faith. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, . . . and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering. For he that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed. For let not that man think that he shall receive anything of the Lord." It was said of the Israelites that "They could not enter in because of unbelief." So many of our prayers do not enter into heaven and lay hold of the power of God because of unbelief. God cannot work where unbelief reigns. When Jesus went to Nazareth, "He did not many mighty works there because of their unbelief." Prayer fails unless it wings its way heavenward by the power of unconquerable faith. Paul's prayers on the shipwrecked boat laid hold of God, because, as he said, "I believe God that it shall be even as it was told me." We believe men,—we believe father and mother, we believe wife, husband, daughter, son father and mother, we believe, wife, husband, daughter, son or friend, when they speak to us, altogether we know that it is possible for every one of them to lie. Can we not believe the God who cannot lie? "I believe God that it shall be done even as it was told me!" Will you pray, and can you believe? Then you can move the arm of God! And he who can move the arm of God can move the mountains, divide the seas, shut the heavens and open them again!

The new education is an education for life. It involves the following three principles, specialization, unification, and spiritualization. Such an education leads to more than mere learning. It leads to the enrichment, the consecration, and the fulfillment of life. This newer conception of education which considers primarily the needs and capacity of the student is becoming more and more widely accepted as the only true education.—Dr. Francis G. Peabody.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

FAULTS DISCOVERED—Mark 9:33-37. A serious fault was discovered among the chosen circle that called for the Master's interference and reprimand. Unholy ambition was their fault and true greatness was their lesson. This rivalry and place-seeking must give way to humility and trustfulness.

TUESDAY

A SUCCESSFUL MINISTRY—Luke 10:1-24. As Lord of the harvest Jesus faithfully informed the seventy with the difficulties and dangers connected with the work they were to undertake, and set before them his plan for increasing the number of laborers. As "lambs" they were to illustrate, enforce and commend the gospel by the beauty and perfection of their own lives.

WEDNESDAY

LOVE'S DEMAND—Luke 10:25-37. The great demand of Almighty Love is love. The Christian's heart must go upward in love for God and outward in love for one's fellowmen. To God there must be given devotion, loyalty and obedience, and to the neighbor kindness and service.

THURSDAY

CHRISTIAN SERVICE—Luke 8:1-3; 9:57-62. Out of sheer gratitude those who have been the recipients of the Lord's saving grace in any manner, ought to render unto him loving service, which may be of the nature of supporting his cause with their money, as did the women of old. And the duty of service to the Lord Jesus comes above every other claim; everything else is secondary.

FRIDAY

PERSISTENCY IN PRAYER—Luke 11:1-13. The weakness of much of our praying is in its lack of repetition. Earnestness and importunity are essential to successful prayer.

SATURDAY

TYPES OF WORLDLINESS—Luke 12:13-21. "Thou shalt not covet." That was at the foundation of the trouble over the property that Jesus was asked to decide. Carelessness is another type of worldliness that tends to deprive Christians of the joy and inheritance that are theirs through the grace of Jesus Christ.

SUNDAY

FAITHFUL SERVANTS—While the disciples were instructed to cast all their care upon God with respect to events and consequences, they were called upon to be attentive to duty. "True devotion naturally follows entire submission and trust." And to be always found in the doing of good works is the best preparation for eternity.—G. S. B.

The house of Obed-edom

Where safe the ark abode,
What time were wars and fightings
On every mountain road,
What time was pitched the battle
In every valley fair,
The house of Obed-edom
Had peace beyond compare.

With famine on the border
And fury in the camp,
With the starving children huddled
In the black tent's shivering damp,
With the mothers crying sadly
And every moan a prayer—
In the house of Obed-edom
Was neither want nor care.

The fields of Obed-edom
No foeman trod them down;
The towers of Obed-edom
Were like a fortified town;
And only grace and gladness
Came speeding on the road
To the house of Obed-edom
Wherein the ark abode.

The line of Obed-edom
Is on the earth today;
In the house of Obed-edom
Still he may safely stay
Who, dearer than all treasure
For which men toil and plod,
Shall prize the covenant-blessing,
The hallowed ark of God.

And never strife nor clamor
Shall break the tranquil spell
In which our Lord's beloved Forever safely dwell.
In the house of Obed-edom,
In sunlight or in dark,
Abides the ceaseless blessing
That rests within the ark.

Introduction

From Ziklag in the Philistine border to Hebron, the distance is not defined, 2 Sa. 2:1-3. David had been king in Hebron over Judah full seven years. He "was 30 years old when he began to reign," 2 Sa. 5:4. Hebron was a beautiful town handsomely located; perhaps the most primitive-looking of all the towns in Palestine. From Hebron to Jerusalem, where David is made over all the united tribes of Israel, 2 Sa. 5:6-10, at the age of 37, the distance is 20 miles. From Jerusalem to Kirjathjearim to bring up the ark of God, is about nine miles. 2 Sa. 6:1-19; 1 Ch. chs. 13-16. The place is now called Kurpet-el-enab.—The Illustrator.

Psalm 65:4

In one of the chapels of Oxford University there is a beautiful stained glass window, the exterior of which is decorated with sacred pictures from the Old Testament, the interior with corresponding pictures from the New, so, that, when the sunlight falls upon the window, the two pictures are blended, and an observer, standing inside of the cathedral, beholds the soft evening light falling upon the picture of Mount Moriah and Abraham's sacrifice of his son, Isaac, and at the same time upon the cross of Calvary, which interprets the Old Testament type; or again, perhaps, upon the brazen serpent as it blends with the great sacrifice of the Son of man. Beautifully does this illustrate the connection between the Old Testament and the New, and the glorious fact that all the scenes of the ancient Scriptures of the figures, whose full meaning must be learned in the light of the gospel and the life and death of Jesus Christ. Of all the Old Testament types of Christ, none is more remarkable than David—born in Bethlehem, as Jesus was, a simple shepherd foreshadowing the great Shepherd, a sufferer and an exile like the Man of Sorrows, he at length became king, and is pre-eminently the type of Christ as our great Deliverer and coming King.—Anon.

David King of Southern Palestine

On hearing of the death of Saul, David, with a large number of adherents who had come to him, went by divine direction to Hebron, and was anointed king over Judah. The ancient city of Hebron had been the home of his ancestor Abraham. In the side of a neighboring "ravine was the cave of Machpelah, where the fathers of the nation slept in God." Near by was the brook Eschol, where grew the luxuriant vine from which the spies, more than four centuries before, had cut down the famous clusters. Says Professor Blackie: "To live in Hebron and not feel faith quickened to new life would have indicated a soul dead to every impulse of patriotism and piety." Here David reigned seven and one-half years (v 5) in a quiet, simple manner, waiting for God's time when he should become king of the whole nation, growing in favor with God and man, and laying the foundations for his great work of reconstructing and elevating the nation.

King David's First Recorded Act

It will be remembered that soon after Saul was anointed king by Samuel the Ammonites besieged the town of Jabesh in Gilead, on the east of the Jordan. The Ammonites threatened to put out the right eyes of all the fighting men in the place, and surrender was becoming necessary when Saul, summoning the Israelites from far and near, drove away the Ammonites, rescuing the people of Jabesh. In gratitude for this deliverance the men of Jabesh-gilead had gone by night and taken the bones of Saul and Jonathan from the wall where the Philistines had exposed them in mockery, and had given them honorable burial. Learning of this, David sent them a message of praise and thanks, at the same time letting them know that he had been made king of Judah.

The Coronation Ceremonies

"The book of Chronicles contains further interesting details about this assembly at Hebron (1 Chron. 12:23-40). The joy was universal, for the fame of David was again on all lips. The homage and fidelity to a new monarch, shown in modern nations on the part of public servants by taking a solemn oath, have been expressed in the East from the earliest ages by gifts presented by the population at large to their new ruler. Vast quantities of the thin, dry bread of the country, loads of meal or flour, of figs pressed into cakes, and of raisins arrived on long trains of asses, camels, mules, and oxen; wine and oil, and cattle and sheep in herds and flocks, filled the Hebron valleys; at once a demonstration of the unanimous election of David and provision for the usual feast of the accession, which was held for three days at Hebron with unprecedented rejoicings."

The Ark

The Ark was a chest made of the beautiful acacia wood, overlaid with gold within and without. It was small, about four feet long and two feet high and wide. Above EVANGELIST ataox 7 its solid gold lid, the "mercy seat," flamed the Shekinah, the visible presence of the Most High. At either end of the mercy seat the golden images of cherubim bent in worship. It contained the two tables of stone bearing the Ten Commandments, a quantity of manna, and Aaron's wonder-working rod. The ark had led the hosts of Israel on their long marches. The tabernacle and the ark were in Shiloh for nearly four centuries. The tabernacle, after the destruction of Shiloh, had been set up at Nob; but Saul, having killed the priests of Nob to punish them for aiding David, had set up the tabernacle at Gibeon, in Benjamin. David left the tabernacle at Gibeon and set up in Jerusalem a new tent for the ark. Of course the old tabernacle had been repaired again and again, and probably little, if any, of the ancient fabric remained.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Reverence

"There is no virtue which we of the twentieth century need to cultivate more than reverence. The cheap jokes on sacred things and places in which our newspapers abound, the flippant allusions to divine matters in the comic poets, the irreverence with which many treat the Word of God and the house of God and the day of God, are all akin to the sin of Uzzah, and are often, so far as we can judge, far worse than the familiarity in which the old Israelite indulged. There was something beautiful and high minded about the ancient Jew who would not tread upon a piece of paper for fear it might contain the name of God, and who would not pronounce the awesome name lest he take it unto unclean lips."—Rev. F. E. Clark, D.D.

There are two kinds of pride—the one born of self-respect and a consciousness of worth; the other the outgrowth of vanity and a foolish regard for what "they" will say.

Does An Exacting Religious Program Interest Young People? Christian Endeavor's Answer Is "Yes"

By Rev. Stanley B. Vandersall, Superintendent of Christian Vocations

At the risk of being termed "old-fashioned," and of being outspeeded in this day of high tension and super-methodology, the young people's society of Christian Endeavor has stayed pretty close to its original tenets of faith and practice. After forty-six years of usefulness and experience it still declares that young people are interested in such important things as conversion, and prayer, and testimony, and service. And the story of success being written by this organization of young people in scores of denominations and in a hundred lands justifies the answer given.

When the first society was organized in that far distant day nearly half a century ago a constitution was presented to the more than fifty young people assembled in their pastor's home. There, in bold statement, were such words as these, "to promote an earnest Christian life among its members, and to make them more useful in the service of God. It is expected that the active members will be present at every meeting unless detained by some absolute necessity, and that each one will take some part, however slight, in every meeting."

The testimony of the founder, written years afterward, was as follows: "He was afraid that its strenuous covenant would not commend it to the young people, that they would be afraid of its strictly religious character, that they would not find enough of the oyster supper and pink tea element in it to win their approval; but, ever since, his weak faith and lack of knowledge of young hearts have been rebuked by their acceptance of this constitution and by the loyal adhesion to it of millions of like-minded youth."

Take the instance of those Intermediate Endeavorers in an Oklahoma church who, when their superintendent was stricken with what appeared to be fatal illness, voluntarily met in a quiet room in the church night after night and prayed earnestly and at length for her recovery. Doctors and friends having given up hope, these believing young people prayed on, and their faith was rewarded by an almost miraculous recovery.

Or consider that part of the pledge which calls for the reading of the Bible every day. It is to be expected that some will treat this section of the covenant lightly, but under the regular operation of the society, there are tens of thousands of young people who read the Bible regularly as a part of their Christian lives and because it is one of the marks of an Endeavorer.

Almost universal testimony is that when it comes to the public meetings of the society, those which make only occasional use of special means of entertainment, such as debate and the open forum method, and place the emphasis on personal testimony and the presentation of religious themes, have far better support from the young people than those in which the emphasis is reversed.

In the major choices in life the tendency is the same. There has never been a time when young people, and especially those bearing the name of Christ, were so concerned as they are today in the serious side of the use of time and talents. High schools and colleges, denominations and other religious organizations are now giving marked attention to the proper placement of young people in life activities. The latest movement of this kind is the establishment of the Department of Christian Vocations in the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Already the requests for assistance on the part of young people who wish to make their lives count, and who have Christian service as their ideal, provide the assurance that in this practical manner Christian Endeavor can perform a great service for young people.

Moreover, young people like to plan and have participation in large undertakings, where success is by no means guaranteed. This explains why no small credit must be given to organized young people's groups for a continuous and whole-hearted support of prohibition, both before and since its achievement as a national blessing. This, too, was in the foreground as young men and women enthusiastically entered the service of their governments when the very existence of civilization was in jeopardy. This explains, too, their eager insistence that the unity of Christian believers is a practical ideal and not a fanciful dream, as their elders have indicated.

Lindbergh, spanning the ocean and the land, courageous, persistent, serious, provides a typical example of modern youth.

Indeed, the very existence of the movement of Christian Endeavor,—its continuous growth in numbers and in influence, its adherence to the foundations of Christian experience, its amazing record of conversions and consecrated service—all these amply testify to the strength and purpose of today's young people.—The Evangelical Messenger.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Hymns Worth Knowing

NOTE—Miss Haun's lesson story for this week failed to arrive when The Evangelist went to press and we supply the following suggestions on the topic from the "Junior Christian Endeavor World." This will not make up for the loss to those who are regular readers of Miss Haun's interesting stories, but it is the best we can do under the circumstances.—Editor).

The Leader's Talk, in Outline

After the siege of Peking by the Boxers the missionaries in the city met in the mysterious Temple of Heaven, where only the empress was allowed to go, and as they stood around the altar they sang the hymn, "In the cross of Christ I glory." (Let the speaker repeat a stanza or two.) It was written by Sir John Bowring, who was born in 1792, and who was at one time British consul at Hong Kong, China. This is a great hymn, because it turns our eyes to the cross of Jesus. We may suffer, as he suffered, but we shall gain the victory, as he did, at last.

Talk on the Scripture Reading

Ps. 96:1-4. We should sing about God. This is what we do in many of our hymns, as, for example, "The God of Abraham praise." And we should sing about Jesus, as we do in "Tell me the old, old story." One little girl in India attended a mission school, and learned to sing the Christian hymns. She was taken back home to another village, but in her home she continued to sing the songs she had learned in the mission, and her own people listened to her and learned the hymns and what they meant. In this way they were led to give themselves to Christ. Sing about Jesus. Somebody may hear it.

A Short Talk

(For a member of the Young People's Society.)

Tell the story of Browning's poem, "Pippa Passes." Show how a girl's singing reached and touched others.

Short Talks for Juniors

Read some of the hymn, "O Love that will not let me go," and tell how God loves us as a mother loves her child, watches over us, holds on to us, guides us, calls us back when we sin, like the prodigal.

"I love thy kingdom, Lord." Read this hymn. It was written by Timothy Dwight, born in 1752. He was at one time president of Yale College. Read Ps. 137, on which it is based. Let the Junior tell why we should love the church, and how we may serve it.

Read part of "Crown Him with many crowns." This was written by Matthew Bridges, who died in 1894. He wrote many other hymns, but this is his best. What do we mean when we "Crown Christ," as this hymn says?

"Onward, Christian Soldiers," was written by an English minister, Rev. Sabine Baring-Gould. The children of his village school were to march to the next village, and he wrote this hymn for them to sing while they marched. Tell how Christians are an army; what enemy they have to fight; how they can gain the victory.

"Speed away! Speed away on your mission of light," was written by Fanny Crosby, a blind woman and a great friend of Christian Endeavor. She wrote hundreds of hymns, many of them favorites like "Rescue the Perishing," "I am thine, O Lord," "Pass me not, O Gentle Savior." What is the message that "Speed away" brings to us?

Luther wrote the great hymn, which we should all learn, "A mighty fortress is our God." As the French soldiers sang "The Marseillaise," so did the Christians of Germany sing this hymn in times of great persecution and danger. How is God a fortress?

Extension of Mohammedanism

Mohammedanism is said to be making itself an aggressive, vital force in Africa today. The missionaries of the Cross are witnessing the extension of the influence of the Crescent in an alarming way. It is a truly forward movement, carefully planned and skillfully organized, spreading propaganda far and wide until it threatens to permeate the "Dark Continent." Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, who possibly knows more about Mohammedanism than any living man, wrote the following in "World Dominion":

Arabic a National Language

"Islam has a carefully prepared educational program for all Africa that has never been investigated by a Phelps-Stokes Commission. In Cairo I often wander in what we call 'Paternoster Row', the booksellers' quarters. Here, piled high, you may see huge parcels of Arabic books addressed to Kordofan, Timbuctu, Cape Town, Zanzibar, Sierra Leone, Mombasa, and Madagascar. Islam pours out literature and extends the area of Arabic-literates every year. Arabic is the most important literary language of Africa. In Senegal, Islam first spread through the favoritism of the French Government; now the Arabic language is taught in schools, and is used for correspondence. In the French Sudan the Arabic language is principally used. In British Nigeria the Arabic language is taught in all Mohammedan schools, and the Arabic character has been adopted for Hausa and Peul. Special teachers of Arabic have come to Bornu from Khartoum. The beginnings of the Islamic university have existed at Nassarawa since 1909, namely, an elementary school for the sons of chiefs, an industrial school and one for manual training. In the Lake Chad district the Arabic language is spreading, and much literature is imported from Cairo. ...

loiaxvtongueo bpauomya cmfwyemfw

"The Cosmopolitan character of the Islamic brotherhood in Africa is emphasized by the use of the same character in writing and the same speech in prayer and public worship. ... Islamic civilization always includes the Arabic speech and letters, which are spreading in Africa today. In Cape Town the Arabic character is used to print a Dutch commentary on the Koran; while in Madagascar and on the Gold Coast, Moslems are proud to write their names or titles in the script that became sacred through the Koran. That book, with all its defects and degrading tendencies, yet serves to introduce the African to Allah (God). ...

Islam a Barrier to Christianity

"That the theism of Islam is lofty and can stand side by side with the philosophy and speculations of Judaism and Christianity on the nature of God, is evident to any student of Ghazali or Jalal-ud-Din. On the other hand, there is the dreadful fact that Islam raises almost insurmountable barriers against all the vital and distinctive teaching of the gospel. ... At the same time religious sanction is given to low standards of ethics, especially as regards sex; and there is a strange tolerance of animistic superstition. Among the Animist peoples Islam is more and more entangled in the meshes of Animism. ... Instead of Islam raising the people, it is itself degraded. Christianity, on the contrary, invites to the narrow road, its ethics are contrary to the flesh, its ideal to worship forbids fetishism and magic."

Africa Without Race Prejudice

"Another distinguishing feature of Islam in Africa is that it has no color bar, or color prejudice, and offers the African entrance into an exclusive cosmopolitan brotherhood, with its pass words, privileges and fanatical superiority-complex. This latter fact is the direct result of the dervish orders. They are found from Fez to Cape Town and from Nigeria to Zanzibar. Islam produces a brotherhood of believers, and recognizes no superior or inferior race. ... Religious pride is the strength of Islam in Africa. Racial pride is the peculiar weakness of Christianity in Africa."

which has the spirit of youth and growth in its heart. The missionary church will see to it that its youth have the opportunity before them to lay on the altar the priceless gift of life. How many glorious open doors at home and over seas beckon our young people today in evangelism, in teaching, in medicine, in industry!—The Presbyterian.

Cutting Down or Adding to the Bible

The story of the origin of Mormonism which its followers believe begins with a slur on the Bible as insufficient, and the system continued with the professed addition of three other books and continuous verbal revelations to the sacred volume. When people have been brought up in such vagaries we can sympathize with them. But it remains for this day to witness an editorial in a nominally Christian journal, to advocate the improvement of the Word of God by omitting certain parts not desired by the writer of the article.

Of course there is no objection to issuing selected portions of the Bible, provided they are stated to be only selections, on a subject, perhaps. But to publish anything as the Bible with parts omitted would be nothing short of great wickedness; as would be any idea of improving the Word of God by any process whatever affecting its actual contents. If God did not know how to give us his Word, surely no one else can do it, and we are like orphan children, lost in the dark and dangerous woodlands of life with chasms to engulf and beasts to devour us, yet having no message to tell us of them or even of the path we must take toward safety. Surely "Our Father who art in heaven" is no such monster as that; he has given us the directions; and they are perfect and sufficient; pointing out the Edens of life for spiritual refreshment, the places for hard service, the lairs of temptation, the way through the dark shadows, the Light of the World, the Delectable Mountains with visions of heaven afar, and the constant leadership of Christ and the Word and the Spirit, till after the darkness and tribulations the gates of glory-land open for our saved souls, if we follow the directions! We would be as bad as the heathen were it not for this precious Book?

And what is the need for so many "new translations" of the Old Book? We fear that through them a greater evil than they seek to cure will come; that many will lose all recollection of the divine words, since they appear in so many different forms these days. The King James version is enough for the ordinary student; adding the American Revised for any further light gives almost all that is necessary. But of all things let all keep familiarity with the usual forms of its expression so that they will recall them by the Spirit in times of need, and can take them instantly to other hungry souls. The most wonderful English is that of the King James' Bible. No other version is so good in this respect; let us treasure its sacred words, though comparing others for shades of meaning as much as may be necessary.—Light on Mormonism.

Youth and Missions

By Rev. William B. Cooke

Maturity and age donate money: youth gives life. Both are needed, each helping the other. A few weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Charles O'Hara Craigie of New York endowed the Craigie Memorial Fund with Long Island real estate worth now 250,000 for the use of the United Society of Christian Endeavor which on February 7, begins its forty-seventh year of service to the young people of the world. No income will be available for some time, but this generous gift of accumulated wealth shows that Christian Endeavor is growing up and acquiring the power and fixed status of maturity. Youth is helped by age. As Cicero says:

"As I approve of a youth that has something of the old man in him, so I am no less pleased with an old man who has something of the youth left in him."

Like the multitudinous sea or the innumerable leaves of the forest, youth is always the same and always changing. How different the tragic Children's Crusade of 1212, from the tragedy of the homeless hordes of Russian children today, and how unlike the various aspects of the Youth Movement among the students of Germany and among the dancing butterflies of America; and yet in them all are certain underlying motives, such as the instinct for growth and expansion, the thirst for new contacts, the expression of self-determination. Much of actual evil appears, with the need of wise, quiet guidance; but this expansion is a mark of life. Happy the young land like America which has room to expand, and the religion like Christianity

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Two More Small Indiana Churches Get Back of Endowment

ROANOKE, INDIANA

This church is located between Huntington and Fort Wayne and has been without a regular pastor for some time. Temporarily they are having the pulpit filled by one of the students of North Manchester College, who is giving satisfactory service. They have a good Sunday school and are holding regular services. The membership is small, but have a promising Sunday school. Brother Lewis of Huntington kindly consented to aid me here, as he was acquainted with the people, having held them a successful revival the preceding winter. He was of great help.

The total gift from this place was $167.00.

Huntington

This is a mission church and has had a hard struggle and many discouragements. They have a good field and a fine church building and there is a real need for a church in this place, as it is surrounded by other churches of our faith and many of our people will sooner or later locate here.

The work has not progressed as it should, which has been largely due to a lack of unity of its members and the pulling together on a united program. If the church is to be saved and we are to have a future work here, the State Mission Board will have to deal more vigorously with the situation.

Brother O. G. Lewis is the pastor and I found him a fine, earnest and consecrated worker. Even under the handicap he has been adding to the membership and school and with a fair chance, I believe he would be able to lead this work to growth and success.

The total gift from here was $122.00.

W. S. BELL.

FRANKLIN, WEST VIRGINIA

The Hammer Church

Since there has been nothing written from this congregation for some time, it may be some of the Evangelist readers would feel an interest in hearing from this congregation in the West Virginia hills, or mountains.

Brother J. I. Hall is our pastor. We all appreciate very much having him back with us again, for he was our faithful pastor for seventeen years when he lived in Virginia in his young ministerial days. He cared for the work of our church here before he moved to Indiana and then to the West. Naturally we all welcome him back in his older years. He now lives in Harrisonburg, Virginia, and each month fills our pulpit at the Hammer church, preaching three good sermons each trip, and the trip across the mountains from there is forty-three miles and some rough road to come over.

Our church services are better attended this year than for a long while.

Brother Key of the Church of the Brethren has been preaching for us once each month for a couple of years. He is a very promising young man and has a great future before him. We regret very much to see him leave our community. The two churches work together in harmony and we feel he has been a great help to our community. The membership of our Sunday school has doubled since last year. Some of the little children from homes that are not church people have been privileged to come to church and Sunday school. We had a special treat in our Sunday school for three Sundays when Aunt Kit Trimble of Monterey, Virginia, 90 years old and entirely blind for eight years, came to Sunday school and preaching and enjoyed the blessed privilege of coming to God's house for worship where she always loved so much to go in her childhood days. And another treat we have enjoyed with Sister Lucy Hall of Harrisonburg, Virginia and her two nieces, Misses Marie and Nellie Dowell, with us in church services and to visit us in our homes. They gave us a special musical program Saturday night at the Hammer church and we all enjoyed very much to hear their sweet singing and instrumental music.

Sister Lucy Hall has many friends here, as she has been here different times to help in church services. She is a model Christian woman whom we all admire. Her first trip here was with Brother E. B. Shaver and Uncle Lee Hammer and wife when they drove a one horse vehicle and all four came across the mountains, 43 miles—a whole day's drive—to Hammer church to hold meetings and establish the Brethren faith and doctrine in our community, November 20th, 1893.

We have had many struggles in all these years to keep the Brethren doctrine established and yet in these years we have had many blessings. For about twelve years Brother Fogle of Washington, D. C., was our faithful pastor here. It was one hundred and fifty miles travel for him and in the last few years he was in failing health. He had with him one trip our lamented Brother Gribble from Africa who gave us a treat with his lectures. One trip Brother R. I. Garber was with him and helped in the song services. Four were baptized on another occasion. Our Brother E. B. Shaver, father of our mission, was here and preached part of the sermons for the meeting, and seven were added to the church. Brother Arthur Snider and two daughters from Matthias, West Virginia, came for an all-day meeting by an invitation from Brother Fogle and gave us a treat in special songs by their quartet. For all these showers of blessings we praise the Lord.

LINNIE HAMMER,
Church Secretary.

LAY RECORD BOX OF NEW CHURCH AT ELKHART, INDIANA

Brethren Congregation in Impressive Ceremony at Cornerstone Rites

With impressive ceremonies, witnessed by about 350 persons, the cornerstone of the new $70,000 edifice of the First Brethren church on Middlebury street, Elkhart, Indiana, was laid Sunday. The ceremony proper was preceded by short talks by the Rev. W. I. Duker, pastor of the church, and the Rev. J. A. Garber of Ashland (Ohio) college, a former pastor. The stone was placed by W. J. Sigerfoos, chairman of the building committee, assisted by Jacob F. Fields, Rollo S. Love and Nicholas Mast. members of the building committee and trustees of the church.

In the box were the following articles:

New Testament; church history; constitution and by-laws of church; names of church officers and pastor; official board, deacons and deaconesses; building committee; church membership; notice to public of ground breaking service; names of Sunday school officers, teachers and students; copy of class letters of the various classes; booklet of Men's Bible class, naming officers, committees and membership; picture of present pastor, Rev. W. I. Duker; list of members of the Women's Missionary society; picture of first pastor, Rev.: L. S. Swihart; picture of Rev. J. A. Garber, former pastor of Elkhart church, now a member of the faculty of the Brethren college of Ashland, Ohio; picture of 7-year-old Dean Hill, who was killed by an automobile at Goshen, Easter Sunday, April 17, 1927; picture of 7-year-old Robert Dale Wood, who died April 24, 1927. Both the Hill and Wood children were members of the same Sunday school class; picture of the Goshen avenue church surrounded by membership; a card naming the youngest member of the church, who is Phillis Jean Leighton, July 13, 1927, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Millard Leighton; copy of the Elkhart Truth; copy of the Evangelist, official Brethren church paper.

The name of Mrs. Amanda Leonard appears on the membership as the only surviving charter member who was present at the time of organization at the home of David Garver Dunlap, October 28, 1874.

Organization of the Church

The church in Michigan, southern, and Indiana, northern, known as the Congregational Brethren, was organized October 28, 1874, under the instructions of Elder F. A. Hendricks of Missouri, at the residence of David Garver at Dunlap, Indiana, with the following members present: F. A. Hendricks, Richard Leonard, Amanda Leonard, Sarah Kirkpatrick, Jacob Cripe, Mary A. Cripe, Marcella Cripe, Alice Murphy, David Garver, Susan Garver, David Stutsman, Susan Stutsman, James Webber, John Bennett, Joel Barnhart, Levi Black, Harriet Black, Anna Black, Jacob Warner, Mary Wagner, Mary E. Roadgap, Barbara Stutsman, David Stutsman.

The organization of the above named date consisted in ordaining an elder and three deacons, J. C. Cripe, elder, and J. Barnhart, C. Black and D. Stutsman, deacons.

No further organization was necessary until December 19, 1874, when it was found expedient to organize more fully and divide the district which had hitherto no definite boundary. Accordingly it was decided that the west line of Jefferson township would suffice for the western and the Indiana and Michigan line for the northern boundary, and all residing south and east of this demarkation should be included in what is termed the Lake district. The organization is completed for the present by ordaining Brother Jacob Wagner, deacon, Brother John Sigerfoos, treasurer, and Mary E. Roadgap, clerk, the two latter for one year.

The First Brethren church of Elkhart was organized by the Rev. J. H. Swihart in 1889 with a membership of 33. They bought the old church from the United Brethren and worshipped in that until it grew too small, and then remodeled the building as it is now. And again the congregation has outgrown the building.

When the first Brethren church was organized David Leonard, Hiram Baer and Henry Landis were ordained deacons; Hiram Baer, Henry Landis and Mr. Cable, trustees; and Samuel Mountjoy, secretary. The latter was the first Sunday school superintendent.

The following have served as pastors: J. H. Swihart, J. Allen Miller, Sala Neff, Albert S. Menaugh, Mr. Marks, Allen H. Bemenderfer, P. Irwin, Jacob Cripe, I. N. Miller, W. W. Summers, J. A. Garber, J. L. Kimmel, W. H. Miller, H. H. Wolford, Bryan Stoffer and W. I. Duker.

The pastors for a long time acted as moderators of the church until under Rev. Wolford's pastorate it was decided to elect one from the laity and Peter Pontius was chosen. He served seven or eight years.

The present officers of the church are: Moderator, William J. Sigerfoos; secretary, Walter Weybright; treasurer, Charles Sigerfoos; benevolence treasurer, Naomi Wilson; chorister, I. S. Pippinger; pianist, Fern Gilbert; deacons and deaconesses Peter Pontius, Charles Stephey, W. J. Hall, George Crum, M. A. Forry, Mrs. Stephey, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Anna Foltz and Mrs. Emma Herman; trustees, Clarence Cripe, Rollo Love and Jacob Fields; Sunday school superintendent, M. A. Forrey; assistant superintendent, Floyd Hoagland; secretary, Donald Archer; treasurer, Charles Sigerfoos; chorister, I. S. Pippinger; pianist, Florence Weybright; president of Woman's Missionary society, Mrs. Bertha Gibson; president of Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, Miss Louise Harding; patroness of Sisterhood of Mary and Martha, Mrs. Bertha Hall; president of Christian Endeavor, Donald Archer.—The Elkhart Truth.

NACH PARIS

This was the German cry of 1914 and it was our cry in the morning of June 10th. The Majestic poured out of her interior the wherewith to load down three special trains for Paris. I have seen excitement and hustle and bustle, but never before like it was at the customs tables at Cherbourg.

I finally got off the landing boat and rushed nervously into the "douane" and did as I had read it should be done. I threw my grips wide open. I had wrinkled a few things en route, fearful that they would call forth an argument.

The official came down the line and began to unroll his series: "Avez-vous des allumettes, du tabac"? etc. I kept shaking my head and added: "Je n'ai que ce dont j'ai besoin pour mon séjour a Paris." He quickly said as only a Frenchman can say it: "Bon!" and drew a big chalk mark across each piece of baggage and turned me loose in the Great Country which the Northmen used to pillage and in which they later settled and of which they have made a land flowing with milk and honey.

Now came a trial at using French money. I bought my ticket for Paris: "Un billet, troisième, Paris!"—"Soixante-dixhuit, dix" = 78.10 and I threw down my first 110 franc note and got my pile of change.

Now to the peculiar looking coach with side doors, we install ourselves; there are just enough of us to fill one compartment. (for I had on ship made the acquaintance of Rev. and Mrs. Barnhouse, Mr. Tiffany, and Prof. Clark all of Philadelphia). Presently we are moving and then we are moving faster, and then still faster! I felt a bit afraid in the wee wooden coach, but Mr. Barnhouse assured me it was safe. But ere long the wheels were screaming on the rails. I never had a smoother ride. Starting and stopping I found to be far less jerky than in U. S. A. Mr. Tiffany who is a machinist, soon declared that French coaches must run on ball bearings. I can't say whether his guess is right, but I'll vouch that they do run smoothly.

We passed through the very rich and beautiful Normandie, Brix, the cradle of the Bruces who gave to Scotland its Robert Bruce, through little towns and cities having famous castles and churches dating from Roman times to Renaissance and later, through countryside where exist farms that were once chateaux, through places made famous by two century old battles with the English, through one of the greatest dairy regions in the world, as the French put it, "desprairies marecageuses celebres par la beaute de leur race bovine." We pass a gothic dome, the only one left in France, next a chapel of St. Louis, dating from the 12th century, now through Lithaire near which town are the ruins of a Roman camp, now through Carentan with its historic and age-old elms, through Commes which boasts an underground river which both disappears and emerges near the town. Versurmer with its Roman tower of the 12th century, and finally the wheels of the diminutive third class coaches shriek into Bayeux, the town made famous by Normandy "beurre sale"—salted butter. First stop, Cden. We buy a lunch put up in a pasteboard carton, a bottle of wine with each lunch, yes our introduction to the inevitable "vin" which in French rimes with "pain", so that earning one's living becomes in French, not bread and butter as with us, but "Vin et pain"—Wine and bread. Alas, we soon found ourselves unable to conform to the customs, for the "vin" seemed as vinegar. So we threw our five bottles out to the section men along the route. (Detour—I don't want any theorizing or moralizing on this, for I didn't throw them.) I may state here that we passed through several tunnels. The French do not permit landscape to be tampered with by large "cuts" as in the U. S. A., hence more tunnels. On we shriek to Bernay where at the "foire fleurie" on Holy Week there are sold the most beautiful horses of Normandy and where the "foire dux laines" is held on July 8th. Here also is a statue to Jacques Daviel, inventor of the operation for cataract.

We pass La Londe, a station in the heart of a vast and picturesque forest. May I say also that many of these towns have worthwhile museums. Now comes Evreux, a city of 19,000 inhabitants and rich in relics of the past. Finally we pass out of Normandy and approach something that makes us feel that we must be back in the old U. S. A. We had seen only 2 automobiles in 381 kilometers and now we see them a plenty. Train slows down and stops and we "pile out" the side door and we are at the Gare Saint Lazare, in Paris. We guard baggage while Mr. Barnhouse goes to price hotel accommodations.

The scene in the depot is novel. Now our American friends are the foreigners. They gesticulate, they feign would articulate, but much in vain. But the Franc can talk and our compatriots see into have the francs and so they buy their way. Taxis roar, tin horns blow (for in Paris there are no Klaxons. Horns are blown by squeezing a bulb as in the early Ford period with us, only in Paris the noise is emitted both on the exhale and the inhale of the horn. Barnhouse returns with the verdict 10 francs a piece per night, and we file into the Hotel de la Poste on Rue Budapest.

Young People's Summer Camp, Shipshewana Lake, Indiana

By Prof. J. A. Garber

This initial training camp for and with Brethren young people is now a part of history. Some of the Brethren averred repeatedly that history was being made while we were together by the pretty lake. At any rate about fifty persons will ever enjoy the distinction of being charter members in this happy enterprise.

The program, previously announced, was carried out as completely as possible within the limitations of the enrollment. Instead of eight or ten courses as originally planned we had to content ourselves with seven, as follows: The Life of Christ by J. A. Garber (double period); Principles of Teaching by W. I. Duker (double period); Church School Administration and Training the Devotional Life by G. H. Jones (both double periods); Life Work Guidance by R. R. Haun; Christian Endeavor Principles by E. M. Riddle; Brethren Church History by J. A. Garber.

Others took part in the chapel period: Harold D. Fry, registrar, spoke on Jesus Christ; S. M. Whetstone, business manager, on the Holy Spirit; N. V. Leatherman on Prayer. In each case the speaker presented the Christian teaching with regard to his topic. Still others assisted in the evening vespers by the lake; Dr. M. D. Price, camp physician, discussed Health; Dr. G. W. Rensch presented the claims of the Christian Ministry. Herman Roscoe was to have talked about the Christian in Business, but we missed him through a hike for a woodland service.

Recreational activities, consisting of various games, boating and swimming were greatly enjoyed. This part of the program was directed by Prof. Haun, ably assisted by Helen Price, dean of girls, Catherine Teeter, pianist and G. H. Jones, life saver. Charlotte Price was the bugler who awoke us with reveille and put us to sleep with taps. Brother and Sister Brower, with their helpers, provided "good eats."

Thus every day was full of food, fun and faith, beauty, joy and goodness, desire, devotion and determination. There was not the slightest discord. The heartiest cooperation prevailed. God was always near. Friends were constantly present and friendships became increasingly precious.

Our only regret was that so few, comparatively, had come to learn and to live as Jesus would have us live. If other ministers will follow the noteworthy example of Jones and Fry they will bring a machine load next year, and so help to increase the number twice, thrice or four times. Yes, that is exactly what young and old predicted and pledged themselves to work for. Why not? Such a program of training is essential to the church's larger growth. The camp ground with its increasing beauty and utility awaits the coming of those who will enjoy and use it. The facilities are surprisingly convenient and commodious. In fact it appears little short of a sin to have such grounds and conveniences dedicated to the glory of God and the upbuilding of the church and then permit them to go unused throughout the year with the exception of a single week. Instead of one week's occupancy and use they should be occupied and used repeatedly and cumulatively during the summer by various groups of church workers. Think, Brethren, upon these observations.

Ashland, Ohio.

CHURCHES REPRESENTED

By Harold D. Fry

The Young People's Camp, now past, bids the neighboring brotherhood look ahead to 1928. Besides the faculty and staff, with their wives, there are some forty determined and enthusiastic advertisers returning to their various homes and churches, full of practical information, deeper spiritual knowledge, and bubbling over with zeal for a "bigger, better Shipshewana Camp next year."

These splendid young people, who registered in the courses, played in the games and fellowshiped with each other and their Lord in Quiet, Chapel Period and Evening Vespers, represented the following churches: Seven from Ardmore; seven from Goshen, five from Oakville, four from Muncie; three from Elkhart; three from Nappanee, including the two Price sisters summing at the Lake; two each from Mexico, North Liberty and Flora; one each from Ashland and Dayton and one from Chicago. Others were present only for part time, but enjoyed the days spent in study, worship and directed recreation.

BRETHREN RETREAT AND THE BIBLE CONFERENCE

By Dr. G. W. Rensch

The Conference opened on schedule time, July 10. Because of the Young People's Camp taking the second week, it was necessarily different. Although the attendance on the opening Sunday was the smallest in its history, after this day there were more ministers present each day than ever before. Dr. Miller's addresses were of the same high order, and there was real enthusiasm in his studies on the Seven Churches of Asia as set forth in Revelation. It was difficult to stop at the end of the hour. The church at Elkhart deserves special mention because so many were present at the night sessions. On account of the second Sunday being set apart as "the big day" by action of the district conference, most people waited until that day, when there were more than a thousand people in attendance. The conference committee, Rev. C. C. Grisso, G. L. Maus, and C. A. Stewart, had charge of the services. These brethren had previously advertised their day in a very creditable manner, and the results were very apparent. The lack of proper publicity in this year's activities is the one outstanding weakness. We can do better, and we should.

The Young People's school was a delightful experience. Ashland College sent her Profs. Garber, Haun, and even little Bobby was an outstanding figure. These teachers were backed up by our own Profs. W. I. Duker, and G. H. Jones. A fine student body was in attendance throughout the week. Chapel, and vesper hour was largely attended. Prof. Garber impressed his thorough training for just such work upon all. No one can forget Prof. Haun in guiding the recreation of the young people every afternoon. That was worth going miles to have part in. Well, the whole week was different, that's all. It was a great start. Far away churches like Oakville, and Muncie had a number of young people present, which only shows again what pastors who are in real sympathy with a plan to tie the youth to the church of their choice can do. As one of the older ministers, my hat is off to Ashland College for heading a movement like this, and here's to the ministers who really helped to make Brethren Retreat do for the Brethren church what other churches are doing for their constituents.

This is boys' week. Rev. Jones of Muncie is leading a fine group of boys in recreational activities. The cries of young life is music in the camp.

STUNT NIGHT AT SHIPSHEWANA

By W. I. Duker

One can scarcely appreciate the difficulty that is found in an attempt at describing the fun and enjoyment that "Stunt nite" gave to those who were privileged to attend. The very elements seemed to be in league with the young people and their assistants, for just as preparations were under way the lights "went out" and preparations went forward in darkness. Then when all were ready and with bated breath the audience watched for the first "stunt" the welcome lights came on again.

Upon the platform of the tabernacle appeared the most unusual automobile that was ever seen. It would be impossible to describe in detail this strange machine but suffice to say that Brother Riddle, hidden away in its "innards", acted very splendidly as engine and headlight. While Prof. Haun busied himself with his auto and passengers, first quieting the crying baby and then attempting to use his road map, the right hind wheel was equally busy in giving an imitation of a "slow-leak."

While this extremely difficult task was under way, the "spare" whispered to the "slow-leak", "for pity sake, hurry up with your blow out." If you can imagine Brother Garber imitating a "spare" you will understand the need of a blow-out. After all was going nicely again and all were happy (save the tires) out came the small town "Constable" and the ride was over.

Next came a family of cats and what they had to say was as interesting as is usual for cats. These cats were of the "Jones" variety and we must admit that the girls in the group seemed to have had previous experience.

A brief demonstration was then given of the effect of Shipshewana air and environment upon the girls who came "weak" and went away "strong." Then came the important "operation" of the evening. A young father and his "brood" entered. The father was evidently suffering many ailments, but by the time that Dr. Duke and Nurse Price finished with him he was a "new Man." That was the only stunt that interfered with breakfast the next morning.

The audience now being a nervous wreck it became necessary that Prof. H. Price appear with his newly arranged anthropophone. This new device will undoubtedly be heard of many times in the future, and for its originator we bespeak great fame.

The audience was now ready for anything, and as the beautiful notes of "O Promise Me" fell upon the air, tears were seen to start and many were overcome. The soloist "Teetering" from note to note was at times unable to proceed, but after the hearers implored her to go on, in fact some dared her to go on, the song came to its usual end. The garb of the participants and the wedding march defy description. From convulsions of laughter to serious thought, reports the changed mood of the audience when, with a special ceremony, including a double exchange of rings (?) Prof. Garber solemnized the marriage of Chief Shishewana with his bride (the young people of the brotherhood).

With plighted faith the contracting parties and entire audience burst forth in singing the following song which had been arranged by Prof. Haun:

On to Shishewana
The dearest lake in Indian.
We're the Brethren young folks,
We tell you old folks.
We'll work and we'll play
While we're here, every day.
And back in the old home town,
We'll tell the young folks all around

To come along
And join the song
Shishewana's our cry!
It is needless to observe that this write-up fails to give our young people who were not there a definite idea of the evening's fun. Just remember some things cannot be described; they must be experienced.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

FENCE-POST SOLDIERS

When I go trav'ling on a train,
I press my face against the pane
To watch, betwixt me and the sky,
The fence-post soldiers marching by.

It seems so very strange that they Must always march the other way,
Now don't you wonder where they go?
And why they always hurry so?

THE TEA PARTY

By Emma Gary Wallace

"May I go?" pleaded Clarice as her mother came out of the house all dressed for a walk. "I'll be just as good as anything, an' I'll not bover a single little bit."

Mrs. Adams smiled lovingly at her small daughter.

"Indeed I know you wouldn't bother," she smiled, "and I should like to take you along, but it is not possible today, besides I want you to do something for me. Nora is busy in the kitchen and so I cannot trouble her, but you are playing here on the lawn, and I wish you would watch for Mr. Jenks, the postman, and give him this letter, and ask him to take care of it for me as soon as he can, for it is very important."

"But, Mummy," pouted Clarice, "if I can't go with you, I want to go over and play with Janet Clark. She has a new doll's tea-set and we can have a make-believe party, she said."

"No, dear," Mrs. Adams replied, "not this morning. I happen to know that Mrs. Clark has a headache, and I'm afraid you children might disturb her. Remain here, watch for the postman, and do not go out of our yard."

Clarice couldn't see what harm it would do, just to run over to Janet's and tell her she couldn't come, so she went slowly down the walk which led from the front steps.

Then something inside of her seemed to say, "Oh, Clarice—Clarice!" and the little girl turned and walked even more slowly back toward the porch steps. She sat down on the lowest one and began to think.

What was it, that her Daddy said just the other night, about it not being right to do things when we feel guilty and do not want to be caught? And there was something about God watching us especially, at such times, and feeling very, very sorry, if we keep on and do what we should not.

Clarice couldn't remember just what the rest of it was, but it was suddenly very clear. It would be wrong to go to Janet's even for just a few minutes.

It seemed as if the postman would never come, so Clarice thought she would take her own little broom and brush off the porch and straighten the rugs and make it very neat. That would help Nora and her mother, too.

Clarice began to feel happier—and why, what was this?

Something caught the light of the sun and sent out a little fan of golden rays.

Clarice moved the big chairs, although it took all her strength, but there, back of it and caught in a wide crack, was her lovely little locket which she had lost some time ago and felt so badly about.

She worked the locket out of the crevice gently, so as not to mar it and was delighted to see it wasn't injured at all. And there was Mr. Jenks at last, and he took the letter and message and went on quickly.

Just then someone came through the hedge. It was Janet.

"I've come to play tea party," she cried. "Muvver said I could."

"And Nora is baking cookies," exclaimed Clarice, "and she'll give us some."

That night when Clarice went to bed, she was very thoughtful and quiet.

"A penny for your thoughts, daughter," laughed her mother.

"I thought I was having an awful hard time," dimpled Clarice "when I couldn't go with you or to Janet's house, either, but Mummy, I had the nicest time after all and found my locket, too."

"That's sure to be the way," Mrs. Adams nodded. "Much greater happiness comes through doing right than can ever come through selfishness or wrongdoing."

"An' God is happy, too," added Clarice.

"Yes," smiled her mother, "and that's why we are happy—because we are working with him and doing as he wants us to."

Clarice's eyes were shining.

"I understand now what Daddy meant," she exclaimed—"an' I'm glad!"

"So am I," replied her mother as she gave Clarice a good-night kiss.—The Presbyterian Advance.

The Spirit of Truth

The Holy Spirit's presence in human lives is one of the most precious and vital truths of Christian teaching and experience. That Jesus taught it no one who has read John 14 can doubt. The Master said to his drooping-hearted disciples, "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever, even the Spirit of truth: whom the world cannot receive; because it beareth him not, neither knoweth him: ye know him for he abideth with you and shall be in you." Again in the 20th chapter and 22nd verse we are told that Jesus breathed upon them and said, "Receive ye the Holy Spirit." That this promised Holy Spirit is a fact in human experience is demonstrated by the marvelous exhibition of divine power on the day of Pentecost, by his guidance of Philip to the place where he baptized the eunuch, by his coming upon the Samaritans when Peter and John had laid hands upon them, by Paul's experiences on numerous occasions and by his frequent teachings and declarations. Twice in one epistle (1 Cor. 3:16, 17; 6:19), Paul declares in the most emphatic manner possible that the Spirit has his abiding within us. And down through the Christian centuries thousands of transformed, empowered and zealous souls have borne eloquent testimony to this fact.

It is not our purpose here to make an extended discussion of the various functions of the Holy Spirit. We are content to note one important function to which Jesus repeatedly directed attention. It is expressed in the title, "The Spirit of Truth." He is to be the bearer and mediator of the truth which Jesus embodied in his revealing, saving work. For the unsaved soul, God's redemptive action is the first great work to be taught and wrought. But for the regenerate child of God he contemplates the translation of the motives and principles which reigned in the life of Christ into his conduct and character. That is the work he seeks to do, the truth he endeavors to impart; that is what he is trying to bring about in our lives, collectively and individually, at this very moment. His great purpose is to extend his inspiring, sanctifying, spiritual presence into every life, and into the life of every church, in such a way that "love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness and self-control" shall everywhere prevail, and characterize God's children in all their relations and conduct. He desires that these shall be the everyday qualities and not merely virtues to be exemplified on special occasions. These plainest virtues are the things that ennoble the human heart; they are the finest elements that enter into the lives of men. To develop these virtues within us is his aim and mission.

How well he is succeeding in his high endeavor, only God can tell. And yet as by their fruits we may judge trees, so we may presume to judge men's spiritual growth by the presence or absence of the "fruit of the Spirit." And it is to be noted that such fruit consists not primarily in the extraordinary or miraculous elements of life, but of those which cover the common duties, such as patience, sympathy, generosity, helpfulness, tolerance, kindness, magnanimity, mutual trust, harmony and the like. Opposing characteristics, if found in our lives, individually or as a church, would indicate that the Spirit is being hindered and his influence made ineffectual. If we are inclined to be extremely sensitive, or irritable, or intolerant of differing opinions, or impatient of criticism, the Spirit is finding it hard to do his work within us. A peevish soul is inconducive to strength of character and makes an incongenial dwelling place for the Holy Spirit's presence. Unbrotherliness and lack of love, mutual suspicion and ungracious murmurings one about the other, these disqualify us as effective instruments in God's hands, they make the operation of the Spirit most difficult and incomplete. Unless we give place to love in our attitudes toward others, in our treatment of them and in our words about them, we are poor vessels for the Spirit's indwelling. God's highest attribute is love, and so distinctly characteristic is it of him that the disciple nearest the heart of our Lord declared without qualification, "God is love." And he prefaced this definition with the declaration that "He that loveth not knoweth not God." The Holy Spirit can make no compromise; he must be true to the character of God, for he is the Spirit of truth. Where love is refused, and bitterness and intolerance prevail, he can perform no work of grace and cannot there abide. And without his loving presence life is stripped of all that is noblest and most permanent of all that is most useful and best. May we not grieve the Holy Spirit, nor drive him from our lives by an untoward disposition.

The Growing Cost of Education

The cost of education is mounting along with everything else in our modern life, and we seem to be able to meet it up to a certain point without much mental disturbance. So long as the cost is being met by the government, we do not seem to mind it, though the government is continually demanding a considerable portion of our individual incomes to pay these costs. But when it comes to maintaining higher educational institutions, such as church colleges, by direct personal outlay, we soon begin to complain and declare the costs of higher education are going too high. Just consider what we are doing in the way of public school education without scarcely feeling it!

We are told by the National Industrial Conference of New York that more than $2,000,000,000 or more than one-fourth of the total net of all public expenditures in the United States during the year 1925 was spent on education as given in the public schools and the state universities. Education, they say, absorb in fact a greater portion of public funds than do all other governmental functions combined.

The "true" cost of education in our public school system in 1925, the Conference Board finds, was 69.4 per cent or more than two-thirds greater than it was in 1890 per pupil for each school day actually attended when the changed purchasing value of the dollar is taken into consideration. With the price factor and the increase in population and school enrollment thus accounted for, this 69.4 per cent increase in expenditures per pupil, in the view of the board represents the real cost of whatever progress we have achieved in education efficiency during the 35-year period.

"True" expenditures, as measured in dollars of constant purchasing power, per child per school day attended, taking into account also the higher cost of high school education, is adopted in the board's study as the most accurate measure of school costs. The "true" expenditure per child per school day attended in 1890 was $0.16, in 1910, $0.20, and in 1925, $0.28. During the twenty years 1890-1910, the increase in expenditures on this basis was 23.5 per cent, between 1910 and 1925 it was 37.1 per cent and for the whole period of 1890-1925, 69.4 per cent, or an annual average increase of less than 2 per cent annually.

There has been some little complaint about the growing cost of public education, due mainly to some extravagant local expenditures on equipment here and there, but in the large we meet the bill with good grace and ease. But we do a lot of talking about the increasing cost of maintaining our denominational educational institutions. And some of those who are talking the loudest are those who have most to give. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., said last spring that the demands of higher education in the way of endowment were mounting too high, and declared that in his judgment we should solve the problem by charging students the full cost of education. That would naturally eliminate a large portion of them, relieve the congestion of our colleges and save the trouble of securing larger endowments. Such a solution would be neither right nor wise, and we doubt if the masses would ever submit to it.

Such a policy with regard to higher education would mean the education of the moneyed class and the denial of higher education to the poorer and unprivileged class. America would then no longer be a land of equal opportunity to all, and without equality of opportunity, it would more and more become the land of the privileged few, in all the desirable avenues of life. Democracy would be headed for the rocks with higher education restricted to the well-to-do and the rich, and we would soon have lost the priceless heritage bequeathed to us by our fore-fathers. And from that policy it would be only a step to the limiting of educational opportunities in secondary education, and who can tell where the end might be.

The limiting of higher educational opportunities to those who can pay the full cost of their education, would mean a loss to society of many of its most worthy potential servants and contributors to advancement. It is well known that in the past many of the world's greatest benefactors have risen from the lower strata and, seizing the educational advantages that society held out, they went forward to achieve and to serve. By far the larger percent of those now enjoying the larger vision and contributing the larger service made possible by higher education would never have been thus privileged, had they been compelled to pay entirely their own way. Society cannot afford to resort to any such method of easing up the strain of higher education.

And suppose that state universities should find it possible to maintain the same educational privileges as at present offered, and to enlarge their equipment sufficiently to take care of all who might seek a higher education, the limiting of educational privileges by our church colleges would mean the driving of our church's young people to state universities where education may or may not be Christian, and often is not only not Christian, but anti-Christian, and where militarism and materialism flourish. Neither the church nor the Christian home could afford to stand for that sort of policy, and in the long run, the state itself would suffer from it.

But Mr. Rockefeller proposes that loans could be made to students enabling the poorer students to pay their own way, such loans to be paid back within a reasonable period after graduation. But education is so expensive now that the average student must borrow with the privilege of repaying after graduation, and to add to his burden would discourage many from ever attempting an education and others would be forced to adopt a materialistic view of life, with his eye upon the dollar mark after graduation, selling his talents to the highest bidder regardless of the chances of service. The feeling of obligation to society which now obtains very extensively would largely be lost, for he could say, "I paid my way. I owe society nothing." The motive of service could not be pressed upon the fortunate young graduate with the same force as now, for he would reply, "I must make money in order to pay," and when he had paid he would feel free of any obligation. As a result every profession that demands sacrifice and offers little material advantage would suffer from lack of recruits. The church cannot afford to be silent in the face of such a recommendation. And with the steadily mounting cost of education, the church must set itself to see that such a policy is not ultimately adopted by bravely and adequately meeting the cost of higher Christian education.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother W. R. Deeter, pastor at Portis, Kansas, informs us that he closed his Daily Vacation Bible School there on July 29th and is busy packing up preparing to come east, having resigned his pastorate.

Mrs. Anna S. Arnolds of Parsons, Kansas, daughter of Mrs. Salie Flickinger Arnold of Harrisburg, Pa., gave the Publishing House a call recently and paid her subscription renewal to the Evangelist. We always appreciate having our friends in the brotherhood stop off in their travels through here.

The address by Brother John F. Locke, published in this issue, was delivered at the Maryland-Virginia district conference, recently held at Linwood, Maryland. This note was inadvertently omitted from the heading of the article, as is our custom to indicate.

The Evangelist stated two weeks ago that Dr. Bame would begin a revival at Mathias, West Virginia, the last Sunday in August, but we should have said the last Sunday in July. He is now on the job with Brother Arthur Snider, the pastor at Mathias, and "it is raining again," so Brother Bame reports.

Professor A. L. DeLozier very kindly supplies us with his third report of travel experiences in France, and it is both informing and interesting. We are only sorry he finds it impossible to give us more installments until his return to America. We shall hope to press his pen into action again at that time, however.

We are glad to receive news of a growing interest on the part of the good people at Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, where Brother H. C. Hammond, a recent graduate of Ashland College, is serving as pastor. Several marks of commendable interest are the special programs, such as Easter and Children's Day, the Vacation Bible School and the redecoration of the church building, the latter of which is arranged for but is not completed.

There will be no paper published on September 3, the week immediately following National Conference. Any one having a notice or other copy that should be published in the issue of August 27th, the issue that is mailed during General Conference, should have such copy in the hands of the Editor not later than August 19th. He will leave town on the 20th and then it will be too late. Send that program or news letter or announcement NOW and avoid disappointment.

A program has been arranged for the Laymen's sessions at General Conference, though it did not appear in the published program. It was arranged later and we are informed by the secretary that it will be worthy of the presence of every lay-member who attends Conference. And the laymen ought to attend in large numbers. The more laymen we have at conference the better informed our church membership becomes and the better the work of the local church goes. Winona is a most beautiful place, as every one knows who has been there, and there is no place better to go for a vacation. Make your delegation large.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, writes of the importance of giving financial aid to the new mission point at Harrah, Washington, near Sunnyside. He stresses the need of a larger financial response to the call of Home Missions this year, not only that Harrah may be taken care of, but that other fields also. The time has come in the history of our church when the further advancement of practically every other interest of our church waits on the extension of the "home base." Nothing is more important than that our membership should be awakened to this fact.

Dr. W. S. Bell tells us the results of his canvass for College Endowment among the members of the Mexico church in Indiana. These loyal folks, who have done so much for the Brethren cause in many ways, make a gift of $1,036, which brings the total of the present campaign up to $116,614.52. This church has been served by Brother O. G. Lewis, but Brother C. A. Stawart is soon to become its pastor. It is not always the size of the church that determines the amount of the gift. Sometimes it depends, and very often does, on the size of their interest. Mexico's interest in the college is big and keen. She has representatives on the faculty as Dr. Bell reminds us, and has had many students in the school in the years past. Let the churches send their young people to Ashland to be educated and they will later send their funds there to enlarge the usefulness of that school. In some way we must tie the interest of our people up to Ashland College. They have money for that in which they have interest. Their slowness at times in giving is not primarily due to financial circumstances. It is primarily a problem of interest.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The What, Why, How, When and Where of Religious Education

By John F. Locke

Note: The subject of this address was assigned the writer by the executive committee of the conference. Admittedly it is a colossal subject and but for the fact that a general discussion from the floor of the conference was scheduled to follow the address, the writer would have hesitated to undertake to speak on the subject assigned. J. F. L.)

A few years ago the world witnessed the most horrible, the most devastating, the most stupendous demonstration in its history of the failure of intellectualism and materialism and the failure of a civilization to achieve without the teachings of the lowly Carpenter. Some one has laid the blame of the war to the failure of the school teachers to inculcate the right moral sentiments and ideals. "Education," according to an eminent teacher of mine, is "the introduction of control into experience." Religious Education, then, is the introduction of control into experience in terms of God. Education is more than mere instruction. It is the whole process of the developing of a life into the fulness of its powers for appreciation, realization, and the rendering of efficient service to humanity. Such education must develop and train the powers of thought, feeling and doing. Religious Education seeks to give the person a religious, spiritual interpretation of the world and of life. If man lives by the Spirit, by the Spirit he should also walk, said St. Paul.

One religious educator has said, "Religious education means the training of persons to live the religious life and to do their work in the world as religious persons." It must mean, then, the development of character; it includes the aim to bring the child up to the measure of the stature and fulness of Christ. It is evident that such a task is greater, yet more beautiful and natural, than mere formal instruction in Bible verses or catechism; that it cannot be accomplished in some set hour or single period, but it is continuous through all the days, and that it pervades the actions, organizations and the very atmosphere of the home, the school and society."

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon who wrote that interesting little book, "In His Steps" comments on the situation that is to be found today, here and now. He says, "The more I think upon the emptiness of our educational courses in their failure to teach the greatest subject of all life, the more I feel like proclaiming the paganism of letters. And I do not wonder at the fact of our annual bill for crime, counting all the expenses, amounts to more than the entire amount owed us by all the Allies for the cost of the War. It is a wonder it is not a good deal more. Our stupidity in the school room is equalled only by our guilty silences in the home. We let our children grow Up without growing OUT or IN. And all the time we are living with youth at its most impressionable years and starving it at the time of its most divine hunger." The Secularization of education in America, due to our policy of the absolute separation of church and state, an extremist doctrine which teaches infidelity and atheism by the exclusion of all religious instruction, or exercises from the public school; the progress of rank atheism fostered and promulgated by the long-haired radical and the machine which calls itself the American Association for the Advancement of Atheism; and the bald and blatant materialism of our age makes the work of religious education at once the most important, the most difficult and the most severely needed thing of our civilization. Without it men are unable to see a way out of the present debacle. Dean Inge says we are witnessing the suicide of our social order. George Santayana says, "Civilization is approaching one of those long winters that overtake it from time to time." Professor MacDougal of Harvard laments, "As I watch the American nation speeding gaily with invincible optimism, down the road to destruction, I seem to be contemplating the greatest tragedy in the history of mankind."

A man educated in intellect and not in morals and religion is a menace to society. Today the "three R's" and all their progeny that fill the public school curriculum, the best the world has known, does not seem to stay the hand of destruction. We have not put first things first. The importance of Caesar Crossing the Rubicon is stressed in the child's mind as being of far greater importance than that decision of Jesus' which caused him to set his face toward Jerusalem. Algebra, Physics, Agriculture, what not, on to infinity, take up the time of the public school, while the rugged virtues and the religious beliefs that caused our forefathers to establish schools, are left unheeded. This situation suits the Catholic population of our country as well as the Jewish Atheistic forces. The Protestant church seems to be satisfied to let things as they are. The first schools in America were founded in order that a person trying to serve God to the best of his ability might read his Bible. Harvard University has written on its gates the inscription to the effect that the University was founded in order that an Educated Ministry might not pass from the colonies. Today 9 Unitarian students comprise its divinity school enrollment.

Where today is religious education, as defined, to be found? The answer is, IN THE CHURCH. The whole task of the church is educational. It exists to show us the way that is right, to help us appreciate what is right and to help us do that which is right because we have acquired the necessary energy, skill and self control to make desire pass into action.

The reasons why a church should establish and maintain a school are the same as the reason for the establishment and maintenance of schools generally. There is much to learn in religion as in other things and always more and more as experience widens and deepens. There are the same needs for gradation of materials that they may be adapted to the pupil's needs and abilities and that they may lead him on in sound progression of development to the ordered knowledge of human life and destiny, the right affections and right motives and standards of conduct which are the goals of religion. Thus education in religion as in secular subjects passes partly beyond the time and ability of the parents and it becomes the duty of the church to maintain schools for the teaching of religion which schools must be as competent in their own field as we expect the public schools to be in the field that belongs to them.

The church is a failure which is simply an association of the contented, who gather at stated times and seasons for the mere repetition in sermon, ritual or experience meeting of matters long since familiar. The ideas of discovery, learning or growth in knowledge and power are fundamental in the Christian conception of life. When a church's members cease to learn and grow it is in danger of losing the Holy Spirit who came to teach us all things. When is the time for religious education? ALL THE TIME, is the answer. The teaching of the church in matters of religion should be prophylactic. The church should meet each stage of the unfolding career of the child with the ideal of Christ so that he will habitually think and will righteousness. The church should seek to Christianize public opinion. The religious press as well as the daily press should carry the stamp of Christian thinking. Christ's people should move forward in solid phalanxes in battle array against the forces of evil.

All of the teaching forces of the church must be organized and piloted to the greatest advantage. First of all the worship services of the church should be educative to the emotions. The preaching should be teaching as well, for if we do not learn from the sermon we have not been very lastingly benefitted. The Sunday school must be graded with consecutive lessons to suit all ages. The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor should provide for the expressional side. The study of missions should not be neglected in the church. A special course in missionary education ought to be conducted every year. The pastor's class for those of the Sunday school who are about to unite with the church would secure a steady influx of youth into the church from the children of those who aid the Sunday school by home instruction and encouragement. The adult class in the church that takes its teaching work seriously would have a variety of functions and duties which could best be attended to by the adult membership of the church. Training classes for teachers with the most thorough and careful methods of teaching and material would make sure that a supply of trained teachers would never be wanting in the church. Lastly the whole church itself should be a training school developing men and women by the responsibilities that it lays upon them to be good citizens in the Coming Kingdom. All the membership ought to be trained to do something.

There are other educative agencies which the church can use in its work of religious education. It can use the local Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. organizations to a great advantage. It can give its boys and girls recreation and clean fun and play by means of Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts organizations. It can use the public library to get its members to reading better books and less of the newspaper which is written in a hurry and should be read in a hurry and used to make fire with in a hurry. And the Movies! Should the Children of Light give to the devil this excellent educative agency? What goes in one of a child's ears may go out the other, but there are no holes in the back of his head. The movie is a potential force for the development of character and education. It may be used for good as well as portraying crime and commonness.

Last of all, the church should do its part in utilizing the public school system. Where it is possible for the church to cooperate with the public school in religious instruction or in other ways it should be done. Let the school children get the impression, now so sadly lacking, that religion is an important matter even if we cannot teach the most important thing in the world in schools erected by God-fearing people in a land settled in order that freedom of conscience in religious matters might go untrammelled. The State says that all should go to school. The church ought to see that all are equally educated in religion. Spiritual illiteracy is as dangerous to the state as lack of formal education. It is far more dangerous to Christ's Kingdom. In many public school systems the churches are allowed to offer courses of Biblical history and the like which receive credit toward graduation.

I have said nothing about the Vacation Bible school. I have saved this for last since it almost goes without saying that by all means every church community ought to have one. I have seen the good work done by Brother Rohart at Winchester, Virginia in a single summer and marvel at it. The children love the school and certainly learn more rapidly and a great deal more than they can in the brief Sunday school hour, even at its best.

Brethren, I might say a great deal more and still be on the subject. Wiser and more experienced men will follow me in the discussion as scheduled. I close with this statement—RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IS THE MOST IMPORTANT BUSINESS OF THE CHURCH, FOR TAKEN IN ITS BROADEST TERMS IT INCLUDES THE WHOLE WORK OF THE CHURCH ... DOING THE WILL OF GOD ON EARTH MUST FOLLOW WHEN THE CHURCH HAS DONE ITS DUTY IN "TEACHING THEM TO OBSERVE ALL THINGS" AS HE, WHO LONG AGO TAUGHT BESIDE THE SYRIAN SEA, COMMANDED.

Some By-products of Modern University Education

By Q. O.

One December evening I was invited to attend a meeting of the (let us say) Paw Paw University graduates and students in a certain city. I accepted the invitation, and on arriving at the meeting, was introduced to the members of the group. They were an interesting collection: some half-dozen fashionable women, and perhaps twenty men, most professional, but others of various non-descript types.

The grandiloquent speech of the chairman of the evening extolled the university as something unique and different from the college as such, and exhorted those present to persuade others to attend this particular university, though from the speaker's nebulous effervescence it was difficult to discover just what superiority he claimed for his particular "U." His most significant remark was that, while he deprecated the dominating influence of athletics in university life, he had nevertheless driven on an average of sixty miles each week during the fall to attend an athletic event.

The prepared address by the president of the university, read during the evening, was true to type. There was no appeal to the graduates to help in law enforcement; no call to high and disinterested service in church and state; no suggestion that they promote higher political ideals; no persuasion that they extend the privileges of the culture they had enjoyed to those less fortunate; no exhortation that they make some sacrificial return to society for what society had lavished upon them. However, the address did dilate eloquently upon the largeness and expansion of the University: the students mounted into thousands; there were hundreds of professors; buildings were completing; the grounds were enlarging, guaranteeing further expansion; certainly the University is and is becoming a B-I-G thing.

The activities of the evening were not out of harmony with the selfish material tone of the two addresses. There were speculations and plans, but a conspicuous absence of moral elevation and refinement. There were smokes, cards, and dancing. Cigarettes stigmatized most physiognomies, and smoking, ladies or no ladies, was the chief occupation of these flowers of our educational system. One banker vouchsafed to me the information that a professor of this university indulged in the cut that inebriates so frequently as to seriously interfere with his work as a teacher, while another called to my mind a couplet familiar on the campus: "We love our gray-eyed . . . ; Cigarettes he smokes so many." The evening waned. I passed the cards, the smokes, the dancing, and went out into the night to reflect.

As phenomena of our civilization, I was interested in these products of a university; and collected information respecting their efficiency and life attitudes. Most of them are proficient in a professional and business way, though Judge Weight is styled "weak" as well as "vulgar." Dr. Palauver and Dr. Frency are considered professionally proficient, especially in collecting large fees. Sidney Grafter in a short time accumulated illegal funds sufficient to eliminate him from a county office. Among the company, however, one would search in vain for a leader in any great reform or humanitarian activity. To them, sacrifice, fine sympathies, elevated enjoyments, aspirations to noble service, are apparently an unknown language.

Such university products Ex-Secretary Hughes probably had in mind when he said, "If I could get the dishonest college men out of politics, the republic would have a new era." Such educational products give point to a minister's assertion before a teacher's institute: "There are a sufficient number of finely educated people in Sing Sing prison to furnish a university faculty."

What are the by-products of a university? Conspicuous among them are these:

A preponderating interest in doubtful or semi-vicious entertainment or activities;

Liberal indulgence in the popular vices;

A certain apathy toward religion and morals;

A certain deadness toward the finer and more elevated things of life;

A certain willingness to sacrifice ideals, principles, sympathy, morals, life itself, on the altar of the gingerbread, swinish, Goddess of Material Success.

Do these represent your ideals of twentieth-century education? How long will you vote and pay tax for this sort of state education?

Prayer That Prevails

By E. J. Rohart

(A Message Delivered at the Recent Maryland-Virginia Conference at Linwood, Maryland)

This is a day of communication from the very crudest form up to wireless telegraph, radio and aeroplanes. Men no longer dispute the reality of these great inventions and the world as a whole is glorying more in these things than they are in him who is the Creator of all things. It is true that there are many things about these inventions which fascinates the human mind and heart, even though much there is that which still remains mysterious. Men's minds are exploring unknown realms, and finding out new facts. They delight themselves in these things, gaining intellectual satisfaction but very little profit to one's spiritual growth.

To revel in these things the way the present age is doing, is not of the highest importance. The greatest delight of life in God today is to know that God himself through Christ has made possible for everyone a communication between heaven and earth over his own heavenly radio. The beauty to man's heart of this royal telephone is expressed in the words of this hymn:

Central never busy. Always on the line,
We may hear from heaven, almost any time,
'Tis a royal service, free for one and all;
When you get in trouble, give this royal line a call.

There will be no charges. Telephone is free.
It was built for service just for you and me,
There will be no waiting on this royal line;
Telephone to glory, always answers just on time.

Fail to get the answer? Satan's crossed your wire,
By some strong strong delusion or some base desire.
Take away obstruction, God's on the throne,
And you'll get the answer o'er this royal telephone.

If your line is grounded and connections true
Has been lost with Jesus, tell you what to do,
Prayer and faith and promise mend the broken wire,
Till your soul is burning with the Pentecostal fire.

Carnal combinations cannot get control
Of this line to Glory anchored in the soul.
Storm and trial cannot disconnect this line,
Held in constant keeping by the Father's hand Divine.

Telephone to Glory. O! what joy divine,
I can feel the current moving on the line.
Built by God the Father for his loved and own;
We may talk to Jesus on this royal telephone.

Our Lord tells us in his word that the greatest work we can do is to pray. In John 14:12, 13 we read: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall ye do: because I go unto my Father and whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do that the Father may be glorified in the son." And John 15:7, "If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you."

We find in these Scriptures some definite points of emphasis which serve as a foundation for prevailing prayer.

First—Its Basis.

Second—Its Objective.

Third—Its Governing Principle.

Fourth—Its Condition.

The basis or source of true prayer is a vital union with Christ Jesus, which union takes place at his cross where the evil nature is crucified, and the soul begins to live a new life in union with the Son of God.

This vital union is absolutely essential to an established prayer life. The old nature is one of the greatest hindrances to prayer, and until it is brought to the place of death, it will continue to exercise a deadening influence.

Prayer is the pulse of the Christian life. You can tell the other state of your spiritual health by your prayer life not by your knowledge of divine things, not even by the amount of Christian work you do, for while you may be very busily engaged in work yet you may be very sickly spiritually. In union With Jesus Christ the soul is brought into the very atmosphere of prayer for he himself ever liveth to make intercession, and as we abide in him by a living faith, we too catch the same spirit.

Communion with Christ springs from union with Christ. Spiritual union with Christ establishes a deep sense of intimacy, which finds its expression is spiritual communion. It is thus that the foundations of the prayer life are laid for the soul learns to take the Lord into the whole of his life. Every desire, every burden, every aspiration of the soul is expressed to him. Any break with Christ will mean a break in prayer. Prayer is to the spiritual man what breathing is to the natural man. The spiritual men can no more exist without prayer, than the natural man without breathing. It is through prayer that he takes in and gives out the life of God. There comes a time in the Christian's life when he realizes that the most vital thing of all is prayer. He puts it first in importance.

Secondly, its objective—the glory of God. "That the Father may be glorified in the Son" (John 14:13). The glory of God should ever be the objective of the praying soul for any lower motive hinders the Holy Spirit's co-operation.

It is most essential to spiritual growth in prayer that the soul be freed from all evil self-interest and this can only be done as the glory of God is kept steadily in view. Many souls make but little progress in the prayer life, because of the intrusion of self, which causes a spiritual deterioration, and the dying up of the true spirit of prayer.

Thirdly—Its governing principle on our part, asking: on God's part doing. "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name that will I do" John 14:13). James says, chapter 4, verse 2, ye have not because ye ask not."

The principle that governs prayer is one of cooperation with God in work. When this is clearly understood by the child of God, he begins to enter into the practical side of prayer. He sees that God's doing is regulated by his asking; and he realizes in some degree the profound importance of prayer as a part of his spiritual work. To cease praying is to hinder God, but a continual stream of intercessory prayer creates material upon which God can work, and keeps the line of communication open between heaven and earth. Someone has said that "prayer is the railroad along which God conveys his blessings."

Fourth—Its condition, abiding: "If ye abide, ye shall ask and it shall be done" (John 15:7). This scripture has a very close connection with John 14:11, 12, where Jesus Christ speaks of going to the Father, to carry out the greater works through his disciples. He makes it clear to them that the necessary condition for harmonious cooperation will be that they abide in him. As they fulfill this condition they will share his spirit, enter fully into his purposes and ask according to his will; thus enabling him to do the greater works through them. Abiding in him implies the need of the cross, in order that the old self-hood should be kept nailed to the stake. Abiding in him also means the continual choice of God's will and Christ's glory. The moment the soul begins to rest in his own experience stagnation sets in, and he ceases to live and labor for Christ, his prayers become self-centered and he loses his universal vision. Whenever the soul thus leaves the path of the cross, Christ is hindered from working; for his life is one continual life of sacrifice, and it is only as the soul abides in him that a universal life and service can be maintained. Christ wants disciples on earth who will cooperate with him in the great universal work which he is doing at the right hand of the Father. It is only as they are vitally united to him that this can be accomplished. Prayer therefore is working for and with Christ as his ambassadors down here; loyal and obedient to him in all things, the will so attuned to him that his promise can be fulfilled. If ye abide in me and my works abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you.

I have a house inside of me,
A house which people cannot see.
It has a door through which none pass,
And windows too, but they're not of glass.

"Where do you live?" ask folks I meet.
And then I say, "On such a street."
But still I know what's really me,
Lives in a house folks never see.

Ofttimes I like to go inside,
And hide and hide and hide and hide.
And doctor up my wounded pride,
When I've been treated rough outside.

And then sometimes when I've been to blame,
I'd go indoors and blush for shame,
And get my mind in better frame,
And get my tongue and temper tame.

And after I have been made strong,
And have things right that were all wrong,
I come outside where I belong,
And sing a new and happy song.

Then I can hear the people say,
You're bright and bonnie and good and gay,
But it's because I feel that way,
But they don't know the price I pay.

You have a house inside of you,
Where Christ will fight your battles, too,
God's spirit will tell you what to do,
And make your heart clean, kind and true.

HOW TO BANISH TROUBLE

Hannah Whitall Smith once knew a woman who carried a heavy burden that was driving sleep away and undermining her health. She has told the following of how it was banished:

"One day, when it seemed especially heavy, she noticed lying near on the table a little tract called 'Hannah's Faith.' Attracted by the title, she picked it up and began to read it, little knowing that it was to create a revolution in her whole experience.

"The story was of a poor woman who had been carried triumphantly through a life of unusual sorrow. She was giving the history of her life to a kind visitor on one occasion, and at the close the visitor said, feelingly, 'Oh, Hannah, I do not see how you could bear so much sorrow!'

"'I did not bear it,' was the quick reply; 'the Lord bore it for me.'

"'Yes,' said the visitor, 'that is the right way. We must take our troubles to the Lord.'

"'Yes,' replied Hannah, 'we must do more than that; we must leave them there. Most people,' she continued, 'do take their burdens to him, but they bring them away again, and are just as worried and unhappy as ever. But I take mine and I leave them with him, and I come away and forget them. If the worry comes back, I take it to him again; and I do this over and over until at last I just forget that I have any worries and am at perfect rest.'"

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

From Vision to Service

By Thoburn C. Lyon

(Closing sermon before the Maryland—Virginia District Conference)

In a very few minutes more, this conference shall have passed into history, and we are glad to remember what another has said: that Jesus did not say, "Abide at a conference," but "Abide in me!" Another speaker once said that conference might be summed up in the one word, rations: rations, o-rations, inspi-ration,—and evapo-ration; my message tonight is aimed to prevent—or at least to hinder—the process of evaporation; if there is one thing that is worse than no vision at all, it is to have had a vision and to have failed to live up to it, or to follow on. In Romans 1:21, we read of those who failed to live up to their vision with the result that God gave them up.

For our lesson tonight I have chosen the story of a man who had a great vision, and of how that vision led to service: Isaiah 6:1-3. As we look more closely at this passage, we find that this great vision really consists of four distinct parts, or four separate visions; and since these four visions constitute the necessary steps by which any individual may pass from vision to service, we shall briefly consider each of them.

First (v. 1), was a Vision of God. We are not here concerned with any mystic interpretation of the symbolism of this vision; we notice simply that Isaiah had a vision of God in his glory, and that it immediately arrested his full attention and changed the course of his life. In fact, this Vision of God has been at the beginning of every life that has ever been greatly used of him. Yet even preachers often forget this fact: we get concerned and preach about the sins of our people, try to arouse them with a call to service, when we should be endeavoring somehow, by life and precept, to give them this basic vision of God in his glory. Just as one other familiar example of its influence upon life, consider Saul of Tarsus: zealously religious, he was yet casting his whole influence directly against the cause of Christ, until that day when, on the Damascus Road, he caught a glimpse of God in his glory; everything then appeared in so different a light that we hear him crying out almost at once, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to DO?"

Following this Vision of God, as the most natural result in the world, came a Vision of Sin (v. 5). When a soul once glimpses the immaculate purity and holiness of the Lord of hosts, the most natural thing in the world is to contrast with it his own unworthiness and uncleanness. John, the beloved disciple, had familiarly reclined upon Jesus' bosom at the Last Supper; but when he saw him in his glory (Rev. 1), he fell at his feet as dead. So with Isaiah here: he had but to see God, high and lifted up, and he cried out at once, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts."

Instead of this Vision of God, too many of us have a false vision of our own importance. When Saladin entertained King Richard and his knights, each strove to surpass the other in feats of arms. Saladin, his curved scimitar inverted, placed a small piece of filmy veil upon its keen upper edge; as he quickly withdrew the scimitar, so keen was the blade that the veil fell to the floor divided into two pieces by its own weight. Richard then had two of his soldiers to hold in position an iron bar more than an inch in diameter and, with his great two handed sword, he crashed cleanly through it. The Sultan marvelled that so ordinary looking a blade should have performed such great feats, and Richard answered "It isn't the blade, Saladin; it's the arm." Let us learn from his answer that we are at best but poor blades in the hand of the Master; if we seem to have accomplished anything worthy of note, it is because of his strength and skill, not because of any good qualities inherent in ourselves.

Following the Vision of Sin, there cannot help but come the desire for cleansing; here, as elsewhere, "He that seeketh findeth," and God honors such a heart-felt cry with the Vision of Salvation: "Lo, this hath touched thine

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

CHRIST'S KINGDOM—Luke 13:18-25. Looking out across time, the Master viewed the end of his glorious kingdom and foreshadowed its growth from very small beginnings. The mustard seed portrayed its strangely rapid growth, and the heaven the inward transformation it effects in the hearts of men.

TUESDAY

AGAINST SELF-EXALTATION — Luke 14:7-11. After observing the confusion at the feast, caused by certain guests seeking the most honorable places, Jesus points out the folly of it and urges a self-discipline that is wholesome and beneficial. He insists that humility is essential to true and abiding promotion and that pride is fatal in its consequences.

WEDNESDAY

GENUINE HOSPITALITY—Luke 14:12-14. Penetrating the motive of his host in preparing the feast, Jesus failed to find true hospitality and friendship and he laid bare the selfish indulgence and extravagance of it.

THURSDAY

REFUSING THE KINGDOM—Luke 14:15-24. Jesus pointed out that, blessed as it would be to partake of the heavenly feast, those for whom it was prepared would spurn the privilege. That warning was not to his immediate hearers only, but to all the world, for many there are who shut themselves away from the gospel feast by refusing its invitation.

FRIDAY

COST OF DISCIPLESHIP—Luke 14:25-35. The multitudes flock to hear Jesus, but they failed to catch the spirit and purpose of his teaching, he therefore points out the necessity of self-surrender and what it means. There must be a strong and settled resolution to bear one's cross, if he is to be a disciple of the Lord Jesus, for only so is character developed and strengthened.

SATURDAY

ACHIEVE BY PERSONAL DEVOTION—2 Cor. 6:1-10.

"Heaven is not reached by a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

SUNDAY

SEEKING THE LOST—Luke 15:1-10. "This man receiveth sinners." These words were meant to convey a false and malicious calumny, but it proved to be the highest of tributes. It expresses the intensity of his interest in the souls of men, the depth of his tenderness and the measure of his divine power in their behalf.—G. S. B.

lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged." Cornelius (Acts 10), was a devout man who feared God and earnestly desired salvation, and to him was given the vision that led to salvation, through the message of Peter. So does God honor those who SEEK salvation.

And following salvation, as we realize the great benefits from the cleansing we have received, there cannot help but come the Vision of Service. It was then that Isaiah heard the voice of one saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" And he was prompt to answer, "Here Am I; send me." Too many of us are like the little Jap on the West Coast who was trying to find a position as house boy. One woman to whom he applied told him she really hadn't enough work to keep a boy busy. "But madam," he replied: "you'd be surprised how little work it takes to keep me busy." Where Christians have this attitude, there can be but one explanation: they lack any adequate vision of salvation because they have never had the vision of sin; and they lack the vision of sin because they have never had any true vision of God in his glory.

The Vision of Service is in itself a call to separation; it was for Isaiah, and must be so for us if we would be true to the vision. I am glad to be able to say that from the beginning of her history, the Brethren church has, in theory at least, stood for this doctrine of Separation. This was the original meaning of the peculiar dress worn by our Dunkard forbears. We have come to feel that the outward symbol of dress is non-essential: let us see to it that we do not drop the doctrine with its symbol.

We hear much today about the church as a divine institution, an organism rather than an organization,—and rightly so. But let us heed this warning from a recent article by Margaret Slattery: "It is folly to suppose that a vague, indefinite something known as the church can reach any higher, be any more generous, touch any more deeply the source of spiritual power than its membership does. This we find is very easy to forget. Christendom within the church neglects or refuses to measure up to the demand of its Christ." Let us, as individuals and as an organization, reconsecrate ourselves to this doctrine of separated service.

Several times from this platform you have heard the statement, attributed to a minister of another denomination, that the Brethren church was the only one in a whole county in Virginia that seemed in any real sense alive; if that statement be true, there can be but one explanation: the members of the Brethren church in that county have somehow had a Vision of God that has led them in turn to a Vision of Sin, a Vision of Salvation, and a Vision of Service. And that is why they have neither neglected nor refused to "measure up to the demands of their Christ."

Oh that we might all, somehow, have such a vision of God as would cause us to realize fully our own shortcomings, causing us to cry out in agony of heart, "Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am unclean!" Then should we have, as the prophet of old, a Vision of Salvation, with its companion Vision of Separated Service. If we take back with us from this conference but this one thing, we shall take with us that which shall lead us on from Vision to Service.

The Believer's Judgement

By Samuel Kiehl

When we read the word of God in the Bible, or the same word in any book, or in any religious or secular paper, we should read slowly, and think the thoughts of God while reading (Psa. 139:17). Hastily reading the word as a sixteen year old girl reads a modern, sensational novel leaves no spiritual impression upon the soul. The word of God which is quick and powerful, . . . and is a discernor of the thoughts and intents of the heart (Heb. 4:12), should be read prayerfully. The Lord enable us so to read his Holy Word.

The future judgment of believers is taught in Matthew 12:36, Romans 14:10, and 2 Cor. 5:10. In the mouth of two or three witnesses every word shall be established (Matt. 18:16). It is written, He that hearth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life (John 5:24). There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit (Rom. 8:1). No condemnation to those fulfilling the preceding conditions, but they are not exempt from death, and the subsequent judgment.

Hebrews 9:27 reads thus, It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment. Jesus saith, Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment (Matt. 12:36). Paul, to the members of the church of Rome, congratulating the faithful among all nations for their obedience to the faith, says, Among whom are ye (Romans) also the called of Jesus Christ, beloved of God, called? . . . saints (Rom. 1:5-7). To these saints, including himself, Paul says, We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God. So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God (Rom. 14:10, 12). To the members of the church at Corinth, "that are sanctified in Christ Jesus, called . . . saints," Paul, including himself, says, We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad (2 Cor. 5:10). Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap (Gal. 6:7). He that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done; and there is no respect of persons (Col. 3:25). "It is a solemn thought that, though Christ bore our sins in his own body on the tree, and God has entered into covenant with us to remember them no more (Heb. 10:17), every work must come into judgment."—C. I. Scofield.

According to Romans 14:10, We shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ; who was ordained of God to be the judge of the quick and dead (Acts 10:42). Our heavenly Father enable us to so believe in his only begotten Son, and to so obey him in this life, that in the life beyond, appearing in the presence of our God-ordained judge, our ascended Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, may he, through grace in our behalf, including all for whom he gave his life a ransom (Mark 10:45), have the pleasure of saying to every one, Well done, thou good and faithful servant; . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord (Matt. 25:21). Through grace and mercy, be it so, according to the will of God our Savior; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth (1 Tim. 2:3, 4). We ask in Jesus' name; who saith, Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full (John 16:24). Praise the Lord! In his presence is fulness of joy for the faithful; both here, and hereafter. Do you and the writer belong to that class? Let us examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith (2 Cor. 13:5).

LESSON LIGHTS

Lesson Poem

Still higher as onward I journey,
My will rises up toward thine own;
For God has accepted a sinner
And I have accepted a throne.

There never was soul so unworthy
To meet with compassion like thine
That I should be heir to a kingdom,
And God the eternal be mine.

—The Truth.

Introduction

Though the ark is now in Jerusalem, yet no suitable house has been found for it. David would have built one but is restrained. Through the prophet Nathan, God reminds him how he had been chosen "to be ruler over my people Israel," promises him a settled kingdom, a sure house, a son who shall "build an house for my name," and ends with the assurance: "Thy house shall be established for ever." The prophet's message calls forth a wondrous thanksgiving prayer from David. The parallel account is in 2 Sa. 7:1-16. Both Nathan and Gad were David's prophets, 2 Sa. 7:17; 24:18. See also 2 Sa. 6:7-9.—The Illustrator.

It argues ill for a people when the private dwellings are rich and the house of God poor. It argues ill for them still more when the people are so busy with their own affairs as to neglect the spiritual temple God is building in this world.

Applying It to Our Day

A church or a Sunday school can be very successful in a barn, or cave, or log hut, if that is the best place they can have; but not if men put every convenience in their homes and use them in their business, and then leave their church work to be done amid the greatest disadvantages. Nebuchadnezzar and Alexander conquered the world with arrows and spears. But any civilized nation that should undertake to go to war in that way now would be a nation of idiots. Those conquerors used the best they had. The wise man today uses the best he can find.

It was "a moral anomaly, if not a species of dishonesty, that he should look so well after his own personal comfort and regal dignity, while yet the house of God was but a tent. In proportion as we increase our expenditure upon ourselves for the comforts and the elegancies of life, we ought to increase our offerings to God for the carrying on of works of faith and labors of love among our fellowmen."

God does not blame David for his cedar palace. He does not wish us to go back to the cold, bare, comfortless houses of a century ago. He rejoices in our comfort, but he does want us to give proportionately more for others, and for the progress of the gospel. Every new thing for ourselves is a new call to do more for him.—Condensed from W. M. Taylor.

Ruskins' Words

Ruskin rightly argues that in a true Christian community, the public buildings for the use of all should be the noblest, the most expensive, most commanding in the town or city. This idea is growing in our modern towns; the capitols, the courthouses, the churches, the schoolhouses, the libraries, the hospitals, are the noblest. Still his words are needed today. "The question is not between God's house and his poor. It is between God's house and ours. ... I do not understand the feeling which would arch our own gates and pave our own thresholds, and leave the church with its narrow door and footworn sill; the feeling which enriches our own chambers with all manner of costliness, and endures the bare wall and mean compass of the temple. ...

God's Promises

God's promises are often being fulfilled without realizing it. "Ruskin said he had never known anything of what was most seriously happening to him till afterwards. Is not that true of all in a measure? What you called an accident has become the ruling factor in your lot; what you called a chance meeting has deposited the most permanent influence in your life; what you intended perhaps for your success has turned out a hindrance; what you thought was going to crush you into a final defeat has been the greatest blessing to you."

D. L. Moody told about a poor old Scottish widow who complained that her son in Australia, thought he was doing well and wrote her once a month, never sent her any money, but only little pictures. Her visitor asked to see one of those "little pictures" and found that it was a fifty-dollar bank-note. So God sends us many a "great and precious promise" which we, in our ignorance and heedlessness, toss aside as waste paper.

How God Answers Prayer

God's way of answering our prayers. God often answers our prayers in the way he answered David's desire to build the temple; when it is not best to grant the exact thing we desire he gives us something better in its place. So the child asks for the beautifully colored poison flower and receives a rose. When the little son of a ministerial friend read "Tim, the Scissors-Grinder," his great desire in life was to be a scissors-grinder, but his father sent him to college instead.

To each his task. David should leave some glorious occupation to his successor. There is always a reason, an ample reason, and often more than one reason, for the heavenly denials.

"Some day we shall understand that God has a reason in every 'No' which he speaks through the slow movement of life. He would reveal it to us if we could bear it, but it is better not to pry into the mystery of his providence."—F. B. Meyer.

Trusting God is better than understanding God or receiving gifts from God.

Establishing the Kingdom

David had many sons, but by a providential course of events the Lord turned the succession away from those who would have abused the great opportunity and toward the wise Solomon, and the long succession of his descendants who sat on the throne of David, many of them being well worthy of their glorious ancestry. It is difficult not to see in this entire message of Nathan's to David a rich Messianic prophecy; for, except in Christ and through the kingdom of heaven which he established on earth, these words at last fell to the ground. Who can point to David's literal descendants, either on thrones or off of them? But in Christ, the Prince of the House of David, the King of kings and Lord of lords, David's kingdom is actually established, and year by year draws nearer to universal sway. Thus, evidently, Luke understood this passage, and wrote of it in Acts 2:29, 30.—From "Illustrated Quarterly."

CEYLON—THE LAND OF SPICY BREEZES

Mr. J. Vincent Mendis, the General Secretary of the Ceylon Sunday School Union, in his report to the World's Sunday School Association, tells interestingly of his work as follows:

"Ceylon is mainly a Buddhist country and the majority of the children are taught to worship the image of the Buddha in the temples every full moon day. They recognize no God and believe they should do good in order to gather "merit" which would stand them in good stead when they are reborn a hundred times and more and help them to finally cease to exist altogether.

"The recent revival in Buddhism has resulted among other things in their adopting several of the methods that have been found successful in the Christian church. One of these is the wide establishment of Buddhist Sunday schools in the country. There are temples in every village and the Buddhist Sunday school is generally timed to be held at the very hour of our Sunday school, and the temple bell calls the children away. One result is the thinning down of the attendance in our village Sunday schools where most of the children are Buddhist, Hindu or Mohammedan and whose parents would in most cases insist on their children obeying the call of the temple. Our workers in some places have had cause for much discouragement but we have stressed the opportunity as one of special advantage to do more intensive work among the few available. In some places the Buddhist Sunday school has not had a long lease of life with the result that our workers have had the joy of greeting back the scholars who had been kept away from them for a little time.

"There are 8,000 villages (the total number of villages in Ceylon is about 12,000) where the name of Jesus had never been spoken, and how we wish it were possible that the growing generation should all know him, who is the Light and Life."

Select Committee Plans

A MISSIONARY SCRAP-BOOK

For Missionary Committees

Juniors can do much more than make scrap-books with funny pictures and jokes. They can do a very helpful job for the society by making a missionary scrap-book, or several scrap-books. The missionary committee may do the work, but all the Juniors will be expected to help by gathering material for the scrap-book. The missionary scrap-book will contain pictures of scenes from mission lands (cut from magazines), missionary hymns, facts about missions, stories from the mission field, and so forth. Paste in plans for conducting missionary meetings as well. Use also suggestions for things to do for missions. This book will be the property of the missionary committee, and will be kept by the chairman. When chairmen are changed, the book goes to the new chairman.

A SECRET MEETING

For Lookout Committees

Advertise this meeting as a secret session, admission to be by ticket. See that every member gets a ticket. Also get the superintendent to find the names of Intermediates or young people, or even members of the church, who at one time were members of a Junior society. Give tickets to these also, and a special invitation to attend this meeting. Tell them that the success of the meeting depends on them.

In the meeting the Juniors will take their usual parts, but make the service short and snappy, and show the visitors or guests some of your best Bible-drills. Now have a Junior hang on the wall a large sheet of paper on which the words have been previously printed, "WHAT HAVE YOU DONE FOR JUNIOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SINCE YOU LEFT THE SOCIETY?" Then hang up another sheet with the words, "HOW CAN YOU HELP THE SOCIETY TODAY?"

Ask the guests to answer these questions and to speak to the Juniors. At the close take the names of all the guests and tell them that you are making them honorary members of the society, and that you will love to have their help to make the society larger and better.

A SHADOW EVENING

For Social Committees

Did you ever try a shadow show? It is fine for a social, but may also be used at home. First, get two pieces of wood one inch thick, two inches broad, and six feet long. Nail these together to make a frame. Then get two strips of wood one inch thick, one inch wide, and three feet long, and two other strips of the same size, but only one foot long. Nail these neatly into a frame. Now fasten the smaller frame to the larger one about twelve inches from the top of the larger frame.

Nail or glue black paper or cloth over the larger frame, leaving the space in front of the smaller frame open. Over this space nail white muslin. It is on this that the shadow pictures will be shown.

Cut figures and scenery from magazines, paste them on cardboard below the bottom of the picture for the operator to hold the figure by.

Across the bottom of the lower frame, behind, and close to the frame, fasten a piece of tape. When you place the figures inside this tape, it will hold them erect. The cardboard that sticks down below the figure enables the operator to slide the figure back and forth along the tape.

A small hole will mark the eye of a figure, or, better still, a small glass bead fastened in place by a thread.

The operator may read the speeches of the characters of the story that he presents. Or the show may be a pantomime. Funny pictures may be shown. Some joint the figures with wire, using very thin thread to pull up and down the arms and legs.

Our Helpers the Animals

Job 12:7-10

There was the usual crowd at that evening barnyard meeting. Dick and Knight were the horses that were present. Woolsey and Fuzzy and Fleecy were the sheep. Bess and Jerse were representatives of the cow family. Oi-Oi and Ugh were big black pigs. All these were in the barnyard itself, while on the fence stood, Gobble-Gobble, the turkey, and so many chickens that their mother couldn't name them so they were all called Chick-Chick.

As soon as all the animals were in their regular places, Knight, the big grey horse called out, "We will now have a report of the day from each of you. Have you done your work properly and have you all been happy animals?"

"Well," spoke Bess and Jerse, "We, cows put in our usual day's labor. We gave Bobby and his parents a big bucket of milk for their breakfast. Then we went off to the field and hunted grass all day in order that we might have a nice big bucket full of milk for them this evening again."

All the other reports were quite similar to the report of Bess and Jerse. The sheep had wandered about over the big pasture, getting food and making nice long hairs on their backs to be sheared for wool. The horses had pulled a big wagon all day for the farmer to bring in his hay. The pigs had been eating and wallowing in the mud, and the chickens had been laying eggs.

When all the reports were in Dick said, "I think that we have all done our work very well today and I am glad that we have. I think that every animal should do his duty toward man. However there is one thing that worries me. I don't think that our owners realize how helpful we are."

Immediately Jerse had her say, "Well, I'm sure that Bobby does not realize how much I help him when I give him so much milk."

Each animal in turn spoke on the topic at hand and all agreed that their helpfulness was not appreciated.

"I'll tell you what I think that we might do that Bobby and his parents would see how helpful we are," said Knight. "Let's all take tomorrow off. We'll pretend that we are sick. Then maybe they will see how helpful we have been."

"That is a great idea," said one of the others and soon it was agreed that on the next day they would refuse to help their owners.

The next morning, Bobby and his father came out to milk, but Bess and Jerse would not give them a bit of milk. They got out the feed for all the different animals, but none of them would eat. Bobby wondered what was the matter and he saw that his father looked pretty worried. Nevertheless they went in to breakfast. After breakfast Bobby went along with his daddy to hitch up the team, but Knight and Dick would not even stand up long enough for them to put their bridles and harnesses on them. When Bobby saw that, he said, "Daddy, are all the animals sick?"

Daddy said, "I am afraid that they are. I'll have to call a doctor."

When the doctor came he examined first one animal and then another, but he couldn't find anything wrong. He finally said, "I do not seem to be able to find anything wrong with the animals. I believe that they are really in pretty good health."

When the doctor had gone, Bobby and his daddy sat down on a rail, right there in the barnyard among the animals. They both looked pretty dejected.

Daddy said, "I don't know what to do. I can't work without the help of my horses."

And Bobby said, "And we can't eat without the help of our cows and chickens."

Daddy added, "How'll we get along this winter without the help of those pigs for ham and how'll we keep warm without the wool from our sheep?"

"Where will our big Thanksgiving be without the help of our turkeys?" said Bobby and gave a long sigh.

The animals began to look at each other and in a few minutes they had reached a decision. They decided the lesson had been taught. The horses neighed and went over and put their noses right against daddy's shoulder. Then the chickens began flying about and cackling. The cows mooed, the pigs grunted and the old turkey gobbled from his post. The animals returned to their helpful selves and everyone was happy.

New Field for Brethren

Harrah, Washington

Our Brother J. C. Beal has been doing splendid work for some months past, at this point, and they are now calling for financial help from the National Mission Board. Judging by the very encouraging reports received from that field, it would be very unwise indeed to refuse help if funds are available. We have great confidence in Elder Beal's ability to promote the further interests of this new and rapidly growing congregation. According to his last report, the Bible school has grown to approximately 150 pupils, and the members are optimistic as to the future growth provided proper aid can be given. Your Secretary had the privilege of visiting our Spokane and Sunnyside, Washington, churches in 1920, and was impressed with this great Northwest section of our beloved country and really believes we should and could have more Brethren churches up there as well as in other sections, IF.

There is that little, big word in the way again. Why not remove it next year and see what will happen? We read just recently that, according to statistics relating to many of our large denominations, there has been a great reduction in membership during the past year or two. As believers in the Whole Gospel and in its publicity, we surely do not want to witness a reduction in our numbers. If not, it behooves every loyal member of our brotherhood to earnestly boost in every possible way for a real, whole-hearted, substantial growth,—not merely for the sake of numbers, but for the sake of a more beneficent more righteous and more law abiding citizenship, not only in America, but also in all other nations.

There are other places too, besides Harrah, Washington, where your National Mission Board will be very glad to give financial aid just as soon as funds are available.

Our books close on this day, July 30th and we shall begin posting for the new year. We are very grateful for the loyalty of our large list of faithful Home Mission supporters, and we find that the total offerings for the year just closed, is slightly above the average total for the past five years. We shall have a goodly number of annual report booklets printed for distribution at our annual Conference. Those who do not attend the Conference can secure one at Thanksgiving time, when extra copies are sent to the pastors along with tracts, envelopes, etc., pertaining to the annual Thanksgiving Offering for our National Home Mission Work. Pray, Pay, Plan, and boost all you can for a bigger and better Brethren church.

WM. A. GEARHART,
 Home Mission Secretary.

The Crisis in the Chinese Church

Mr. T. Z. Koo, one of the brilliant young men of the New China, addressed a meeting of missionaries at Shanghai, on February 10. Mr. Koo (who was one of the contributors to the book, "China Through Chinese Eyes") is a leading member of the National Christian Council of China. The subject of the address was "The Christian Church and the Present Crisis." He said in part:

"What, after all, is our aim in China? We are today in the process of nation making. China as a nation does not exist today; she is merely a collection of families. The unit is the family, not the nation; loyalty to a family is much more real than loyalty to a nation. The conception must be broadened from family to nation. The revolution of 1911 was just a change of political laurels. By contrast the revolution of 1927 is a mental process, a thinking through educative processes of particular manifestations. If any group of people are suspected of being in the way of the onward progress of this Nationalistic movement they will have their usefulness and even their very existence endangered. God is leading China today as he led the children of Israel through the wilderness into the Promised Land. We, too, have our wilderness to go through—our temptations; we, too, make false friends; but we shall get through to our Promised Land, or our children will."

Turning to the relation of the Christian church to the present crisis, Mr. Koo said that this was an even more difficult matter to face than the political phenomena. "I want to dig into the intellectual problem created for the church," he said. "I myself have been trying to grasp the spiritual significance of this movement. May I ask that we probe into our hearts? Have we heard God's voice? God is testing the church in its capacity to love—'Lovest thou Me?' If we can answer 'Yes,' then who can take away from us that commission, 'Feed my Sheep?' Some missionaries have been forced to leave their work; doubtless many are full of anxiety. Do we realize the spiritual significance of what is happening? Do we love Jesus—love him more than anything else? Then, 'Tend my Flock.' Where is his flock right now? We have given thought to our mission finances and to our property. Are we taking thought for his flock? If we are prepared to answer that question in the affirmative—good! God is testing the church in the inward things; but we are thinking of property. The church has in China property running into millions of dollars. We have great mission equipment—schools and hospitals. All have been created with the idea of foreign leadership. We are so possessed with an idea of our own importance that when the breath of criticism blows we fear, and immediately want to close down this or that piece of work. This is to say that you come out not because you are interested in the people, but rather that you are interested in running a particular institution. Now that the conditions in which we find ourselves render our institutions useless, and cause us physical dangers and sufferings, we should be brought to realize that our task is a spiritual task—the task of saving souls, a task that was lost to us in the midst of our institutions.

"God is testing us in our capacity to identify ourselves with the life of the common people. The attitude of the philanthropist is resented; it recoils on ourselves. To identify ourselves with the life of the common people would find practical expression in opposition to social abuses. There is a desire to swing ourselves into the popular current. But when we try as a Christian church to ally ourselves with the popular movements, simply because they are popular, we make a great mistake. God will use the Communists as an instrument; he will use the Kuomintang. Instruments go forth blindly and often go forward to their own destruction; but while useful they will be used by God. Alexander and Napoleon were instruments used by God, but they were destroyed. The church here is God's divine instrument; it is indestructible, and should not desire to be merely the tool of any lesser instrument."—From the Methodist Times of London.

THE INDIAN'S TWENTY-THIRD PSALM

The Indian language is not easily subject to translation, and in their intercourse with one another the various tribes use a sign language, more or less universal, which they have evolved. The following is a translation of the twenty-third Psalm, which can easily be interpreted by this sign language: "The Great Father above is a Shepherd Chief. I am his, and with him I want not. "He throws out to me a rope, and the name of the rope is love, and he draws me, and he draws me to where the grass is green and the water not dangerous, and I eat and lie down satisfied.

"Sometimes my heart is very weak and falls down, but he lifts it up again and draws me into a good road. His name is Wonderful.

"Sometime, it may be very soon, it may be longer, it may be a long, long time, he will draw me into a place between mountains. It is dark there, but I'll draw back not. I'll be afraid not, for it is in there between these mountains that the Shepherd Chief will meet me, and the hunger I have felt in my heart all through this life will be satisfied. Sometimes he makes the love rope into a whip, but afterwards he gives me a staff to lean on.

"He spreads a table before me with all kinds of food. He puts his hands upon my head, and all the 'tired' is gone. My cup he fills till it runs over.

"What I tell you is true; I lie not. These roads that are 'away ahead' will stay with me through this life, and afterwards I will go to live in the 'big tepee' and sit down with the Shepherd Chief forever."—Missionary Review of the World.

*"Labor" had been to me a phrase;
 But now, through all my length of days,
 It means no mere "commodity,"
 Who live and love and plan and hope
 For greater things. And if they grope
 In dull blind fashion, crudely planned,
 I shall not fail to understand.*

—Berton Braley.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

MEXICO, INDIANA CHURCH

This church is located north of Peru in a small town and the membership is made up of rural people. This is the home of Professor Black and of the wife of Professor Anspach. It is needless to say that we found the congregation interested in the College.

This is also the home of our dear lamented Brother Fisher and Brother Ditch. The congregation is made up of staunch loyal Brethren which have been a big factor in the growth of our work in Indiana and contributors to all the interests of the church. They have contributed largely in means and members to building up the work in Denver and Peru.

The membership is not large, but are one hundred percent Brethren and it was a pleasure to meet them and labor in their midst.

Brother Lewis has been their pastor for the past two years and is held in esteem. He was of great aid to me in the canvas. He has been carrying a heavy load caring for this church in connection with the work in Huntington. He has resigned his work to give full time to Huntington, or to get another church nearer the Huntington work.

Brother Clarence Stewart will take charge of the work here after National conference and divide his time between Mexico and College Corner.

This section of Indiana bears some very interesting names, Peru, Chili, Mexico, Denver, Corinth and Bunker Hill. So in name one can cover a great deal of geography in a short time.

If all our churches took the same interest and were willing to give for the building up of our work, as Mexico, we would make better headway. The gift of this small congregation to the college was $1,036.00.

W. S. BELL.

LUTETIA

Paris was originally but one of the crude villages that the Gauls established on the islands of large rivers. The first mention of the city is by Caesar. In 53 B. C. he speaks of the City as Lutetia and of the inhabitants as Parisii.

So the Latin student may cheer up. When you get to Paris there is one reference in Caesar that is practical. No doubt the city remained confined to the island for many years and then gradually spread out into what is now known as the Latin quarter. The original section on what is called "L'Ile de la Cite" is very interesting. It has a sort of oval shape, and from the Eiffel tower looks like a mammoth boat riding the Seine. But its tonnage would be very great, were it a boat, for on the island are Notre Dame, Hotel Dieu, Prefecture de Police, Sainte Chapelle, Palais de Justice, Statue of Henry IV, of Charlemagne and of Roland and Oliver. Especially Notre Dame and La Sainte Chapelle are famous. But I cannot burden you with detailed descriptions here.

It is the Paris of today with which we are concerned. Paris is a foreign city. The Americans take the city by storm every summer. In one day last summer 20,000

Americans entered Paris. On our way from Cherbourg June 10th we heard along the way the shout "Vive les Americains!"

Well, if the Americans take the city over for the summer, the Russians, Italians and others hold it the year round. In the Restaurant du Lycee in the Latin Quarter where I eat dinner every day, one hears spoken almost every language in the calendar.

The first peculiar experience upon arriving in Paris is the sound of the taxi horns.

The Klaxons have not invaded Paris yet. The old time rubber bulb horn is the order of the day, and these send forth their shrieks both on the intake and exhale of the bulb. If the horns had more of a bass note they would resemble the braying of a donkey. Well, Paris is one constant unending hubbub of horns. It sounds like perpetual Christmas.

Next to the splendid taxi service, the almost miracle of Paris is the metro system of tube cars as we would call them. Here the system is like a spider web. Yet it is made "fool proof." You can go most anywhere in the city for 60 centimes or less than three cents.

Paris is a city of great churches, great schools, great museums, great gardens.

No doubt the greatest Cathedral is that of Notre Dame; the Greatest Museum is the Louvre, although the Cluny museum is great because of its antiquity; the Greatest School is the Surbonne, and as to gardens, I am not so sure, but perhaps the Luxembourg would take the prize. I have spent 5 major parts of days in the Louvre and feel that I am only beginning.

As for churches, I may mention Saint Germain-L'Auxerrois. Its beauty was marred for me when I heard the bell in its tower toll 6 P. M. of the afternoon I was there. For on August 24th, 1572 that same bell gave the signal for the "Sainte-Barthelemy" as the French call the great massacre which witnessed the very cowardly killing of many Protestants. I was glad that in my case the 6 taps didn't mean for a Protestant what the taps of that unfortunate night meant.

The important thing about the Cathedrals is that they reproduce for us in statuary and bas relief the Gospel Story. People in that far-off day were not able to read the printed page and so the cathedral tells the story. I have gone back to Notre Dame three times to read its messages and there is still something to learn.

But religiously speaking, I have been more blessed in the simple services of a few missions that I have attended. I found the Bible Institute at Nogent to be a great and mighty center, no doubt one of the most potent forces for truth in all France. I was pleased to hear the testimonies of a large group of splendid young people who are going out as missionaries. Pastor Sailens seems as a sort of patriarch among the young people, and I use the word in its original sense of pater—a father. He is a father to them and seems to be leading them well.

I have gotten some insight into the political situation here and have gotten many other angles. I read several French dailies and find them very efficient in keeping one posted. I am pursuing courses at the Surbonne during full forenoon and so just as Dr. Miller found his Palestine trip, so I find my sojourn here—very strenuous.

I plan to go to Digne August 1st and hope to drink in the fine addresses of the Bible convention and then pass on over into Italy and Spain.

Inasmuch as my talent is not that of writer, I make no more promises of articles, at least until I may reach the good old U. S. A. once more.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Before entering upon my vacation I will give you a brief report of the work at Carleton.

The work of 1926 was brought to a close with the presentation of a White Gift Service—the best in many years. Not only were there gifts of Substance and Service but also those of Self. Two came forward and accepted Jesus as their King and Savior.

The new year was entered with a program planned to reach its climax at Easter. Although sickness interfered with the carrying out of this program in its entirety, five were added to the church by baptism.

Since then, as well as during that time, the Special Days were given recognition and offerings lifted. On account of rain, which was much appreciated for its own good, our Children's Day program was postponed and merged with the Parents' Day, at which time we had with us as the speaker of the morning, Mr. R. T. Atwood, President of the Thayer County Sunday School Association. The following Sunday it was the writer's privilege to make the return visit and address to the Chester M. E. Sunday school, of which Mr. Atwood is superintendent, and witness their children present "Gretchen's Dream."

The sickness referred to above was a prolonged siege of whooping cough among the children of the Sunday school and town, which curtailed our attendance. And a three weeks' sojourn of Mrs. Koontz in the Blue Valley Hospital. Since then she has had a third operation while I was undergoing the removal of a growth from each eye. This coupled with the passing of my father has given us experiences hitherto unknown. One of these I would like to mention in passing, namely, the considerateness and helpfulness of the Christian people during our time of sickness and need.

In a financial way our folks may not have measured up to past records but this is accounted in part for by short crops. However this year so far is better. Crops are better and we are laying our plans now for a busy fall and winter. Thus while we have not performed the spectacular we have tried to be busy in the Lord's work.

C. R. KOONTZ.

NORTH VANDERGRIFT BRETHREN

The work of the church here is bravely pressing forward, regardless of her limited resources to finance the work as she would gladly do. Here we have some whole-souled men and women who are content to stick by the church in all kinds of weather. Thus they are as lone sentinels standing on the walls of Zion.

Our work started here in the beginning of the month of March. Here we have been ever since rejoicing in the work of the Kingdom. We have had many reasons for being thankful that our lot was cast with these people. As soon as we were pleasantly situated the good Brethren surprised my wife and me with a shower of groceries. Words were insufficient to express our spirit of thankfulness, so that we all stood and sang: "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Every pastor anxiously waits to see what his people can do, and if nothing is done the pastor out of necessity must do some pruning. The first visible evidence of their potential strength was revealed in their Easter service. Here every one played their part splendidly. No shirkers were there to be seen. Each one did their utmost to press home the meaning of Easter. Glory be, no one was satisfied in the Easter service when they actually saw what can be accomplished when each one puts himself to the task. Plans for Children's Day service were almost immediately begun. When all the practices were over and the day had at last dawned there was a crowded house to greet the efforts of the children.

The union of the churches here has made possible a number of good things. The first of these was the Vacation Bible School. This was being financed by each church school. None of the churches were hard pressed in meeting its apportionment. The good that was accomplished could never be estimated in dollars and cents. Our young people as well as the young people of the churches bespeak a time well spent. Then through our union meetings the community as well as the churches are receiving a great amount of good. Each church seeks to bring in her most representative man.

There is much joy in the hearts of our young people that the little church we worship in from Sunday to Sunday is to receive a coat of paint both outside and inside. It will no doubt cause a number of us to part with a few dollars. I hope it doesn't cause us any "inward pain when we asunder part." The position of our church will no doubt be benefited by a cement street that is to go by in front of our church. Our church has a bright future ahead. A young congregation means a growing congregation. Pray for us as we take our place in the line of battle against sin and Satan.

H. C. HAMMOND.

THE LAYMEN ON THE JOB

The laymen of the Brethren church are not dead, as may be supposed, and some of them are not even sleeping. Circumstances have made it impossible for us to get out the laymen's conference program in time to get it in the Evangelist with the rest of the program; but there really is to be a laymen's conference. Good speakers have been secured, and plans have been made for interesting sessions. For several years, interest in the laymen's conference has been very poor. Delegates lie abed in the morning or visit with one another on the grounds, while important business meetings are being held by twelve or fifteen laymen. Space on the general conference program cannot be granted to all those desiring to render special music; but no one can be found who will lead the music or even play the piano for the laymen's conference. Are you guilty, brother layman? Churches sending delegates should be careful to choose those men and women who will be conscientious about attending the laymen's sessions. Pastors should urge their people to attend. Delegates should be required to give full report of each laymen's session upon their return to their churches. Let us, each one, be on the job this year at every session.

A GREAT TEMPERANCE LEADER

By J. H. Larimore

Westerville, Ohio, July 27.—quarter of a century ago, when even county local option seemed to the temperance forces of the United States not an immediate goal but one to strive for, there came into the temperance reform field, for life enlistment, a young newspaper editor, Ernest H. Cherrington, whose pencil pushings each week were recording local events for the small town, Kingston, Ohio, Tribune.

This story is not a biography, nor chronicle of temperance events, hence it will not record either the progress of prohibition legislation nor set down the steps by which this young newspaper editor became a leader in the Anti-Saloon League of America, and as such helped to bring about the adoption and ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment and the necessary supporting legislation in Congress.

But it is a story of an insatiable longing to see not only America, but the entire world rid of the beverage liquor traffic. It is the story of a man stretching ahead of the immediate object in view to try to attain one much farther distant.

In 1916 there were many thousands of persons in the United States, both wet and dry, who had no idea whatever that less than four years later America would be under constitutional prohibition. Why, it was even doubtful if the next session of Congress would be sufficiently dry to submit to the states the necessary amendment.

The Anti-Saloon League was meeting in biennial convention in Indianapolis in mid-summer. It had, but three years before, at Columbus, reached the point where it felt the time was ripe for declaring for National Prohibition. Ernest H. Cherrington made an address on "The World Movement Toward the Prohibition of the Liquor Traffic." At the close of the address, Rev. Father J. J. Curran, of Wilkes Barre, Pennsylvania, Catholic pastor and one of the vice-presidents of the Anti-Saloon League of America, in pursuance of the idea set forth by Dr. Cherrington, rose in the convention and presented the following resolution:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this convention that the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America be requested to take such action as it may deem necessary to bring representatives of the nations of the civilized world to confer simultaneously in the same city with the peace envoys of the countries now at war, at the close of hostilities, with a view of bringing about world-wide and universal sobriety among the peoples of the earth."

It is known that Cherrington himself was the author of the text introduced by Father Curran.

Bishop Luther B. Wilson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who was then President of the Anti-Saloon League of America, spoke strongly in favor of supporting the resolution and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

On November 19-22, 1918, there was held in Columbus, a special convention called by the board of directors of the Anti-Saloon League of America for the purpose of launching a movement for world-wide prohibition. Many strong addresses were made not only by Americans but by visitors from abroad. Many of those who could not be present from foreign countries sent messages indicating their great interest in the movement for a dry world.

Resolutions looking toward the inaugurating of a program for a world-wide prohibition were adopted at that time by the board of directors and the executive committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America and then by the special convention in its regular session.

Preceding the nineteenth national convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America, held at Washington, June 3-6, 1919, a large number of persons from foreign countries visited the United States and Canada, studying the progress and methods of the prohibition movement. Conferences were held in New York City, Ottawa, Toronto, Detroit and Chicago, called together by Dr. Cherrington.

At Chicago the delegations divided into groups, each group making a separate tour of various cities in all parts of the United States, the groups finally converging at Washington, D. C., for the national convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America. During the pre-convention tours scores of public meetings were held, and at the same time the foreign visitors were given opportunity to meet public officials and to investigate the actual workings of prohibition, wherever it had been adopted.

At Washington the conferences of the international delegates were resumed, with the result that on Thursday, June 5, in the evening, a constitution was agreed upon and on Saturday, June 7, at noon, in the presence of a large number of friends of the cause, authorized members of the international committee signed the constitution of the World League Against Alcoholism on behalf of their representative organizations.

Cherrington was made general secretary. As such he has since become known as the first apostle of a dry world.

MEMORIAL

Elder P. W. Wisman

It is our sad duty to report the death of Elder P. W. Wisman of Saint Luke, Virginia, who departed this life on the 11th of July, after an illness of a year or more. Brother Wisman was one of our best men. He entered into the ministry of the Gospel more than fifty years ago. He and Brother George A. Copp began at a time when pioneering for "The Gospel only as the Creed of the Church" was so much needed. They stood firm without wavering for the truth once delivered unto the saints, stood firm, and faithfully performed their duty. Brother Wisman was always happier when doing something for others, and was loved by all who knew him. He was loyal to the church and to the people whom he served. He was always ready to give a reason for the faith that was in him, that faith he held so dear in the Lord and in the Master's work. He loved to work for his Lord and never grew weary in well-doing.

The writer chose for this sad funeral occasion the following text: "He being dead yet speaketh." He was assisted by Elders E. L. Miller and George A. Copp.

E. B. SHAVER, Maurertown, Virginia.

A HOSPITAL PATIENT'S PRAYER

A Canadian Baptist missionary writes of a village Christian who went into a government hospital for an operation:

He was a very ordinary sort of fellow whose attendance at prayers was very infrequent. Yet just before he was to go under the anaesthetic he asked the district surgeon for time to pray and this was his prayer: "Lord Jesus, thou didst die on the cross for me; if I live it is thy will, and if I die take me." The surgeon and the attendants, all Hindus, were amazed at such a testimony coming in such a way from such an unexpected source. The operation was successful and instead of being placed in the ordinary ward he was placed with some caste people and given every possible attention and special care. The caste people were most kind to him, and Abraham, the name of the Christian, was soon the friend of all. This has been a lesson to me and also a source of great encouragement. We look to the educated people for a fuller interpretation of Christ sometimes, and are liable to forget the lowest of the low.—Missionary Review.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

A Boy's Question

*What keeps the stars from falling?
What makes the world go 'round?*

*How can flies walk on the ceiling
Just like they do on the ground?*

*Why don't it snow in summer?
Don't the fishes ever get drowned?
Did you ever see any fairies?
Who lost the knife I found?*

*How many weeks till vacation?
It ought to be here pretty soon.
How many fives in a hundred?
How far away is the moon?*

*Where do the bees get honey?
Who finds balloons that are lost?
What makes people bald-headed?
How much do elephants cost?*

*What makes you tired this evening?
There's a gray hair in your head.
Wonder what makes me sleepy?
Good night; I'm going to bed.

His Picture

By Mina McEuen Meyer

On one of the hills above the town in which Jesus grew to manhood stands a low building, surrounded by fields and fir trees. This building is the home of more than a hundred boys from twelve to fourteen years of age—orphans of the great war or survivors of the deportations from Turkey. From their home on the hill they may look out over the valley of Esdraelon, through which, centuries ago, great kings with their legions marched to conquest or to defeat. It was on this plain that

"The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold,

His cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold."

Over it Egyptians passed with their war chariots and their horsemen, and the armies of many nations followed until, last of all, Allenby, in the year 1917, marched into Palestine, and drove out of the land its Turkish oppressors. To the west stands Carmel, a long low range, on which Elijah met the priests of Baal.

In the valley, a little to the south and west of Nazareth, stands the village of Dothan where Joseph went to see his brothers as they cared for their father's flocks. It was there the brothers took Joseph and sold him to some merchants passing by on their way to Egypt. The boys of the Nazareth orphanage watch the shepherds leading their flocks to pasture and the merchants with their camel caravans pass along the road, just as they did in the days of long ago. The events of the Bible stories are so real to them that they have dramatized the story of Joseph, and often act it for visitors from America who visit Nazareth.

In a shop down in the village of Nazareth, and across the street from the place where it is supposed stood the carpenter shop of another Joseph a large group of boys from the orphanage are learning the trade that Jesus learned when he was a boy. From the wood of olive trees cut down during the war because of the heavy tax on orchards, the boys make furniture for the people of Nazareth, and souvenirs, such as rulers, book-ends and fancy boxes, for American visitors who like to take such souvenirs back to their homes. The boys are interested in their work and try to do it well.

One evening some one entering the large room where at night the boys sleep, spreading their pallets on the floor, heard a lad of twelve close his evening prayer with the words, "and make me a good carpenter."

The orphanage buildings, though clean and tidy, are very plain, and the white-washed walls are bare, except for three pictures. Two of these are framed pictures of Lincoln and of Roosevelt. They were a gift from some American friends. The boys are familiar with the words and deeds of these great men which caused others to love them and honor their memory. The third picture is a new one that was recently placed between the other two. It is the gift of Dr. Blatchford, the Near East Director for Palestine. After several years of strenuous work, Mr. Blatchford was planning a vacation trip to England. Before sailing he went to say goodbye to the boys of the orphanage and they asked for his picture for their hall.

"Who am I that my picture should be placed beside the pictures of those two illustrious men?" asked Mr. Blatchford, modestly. But the boys urged and finally he consented to bring them a picture on his return.

His vacation over, the Director was again welcomed to the orphanage. "I have brought my picture, as I promised," he said, and opening a package held up to the boys' astonished gaze a photograph of that famous statue by Thowaldson, showing a man wrestling for his life in the coils of a huge serpent.

"That is a picture of me," said Mr. Blatchford. "All my life I have wrestled daily with an old serpent, which is called by such names as my lower self, my temper and my temptations. And so must every man or boy wrestle who would win the victory over himself."

Mr. Blatchford's picture was placed on the wall between the pictures of Lincoln and of Roosevelt, and evenings when the day's work is done, the boys gather in groups before it. One evening a teacher heard a boy say to a friend who stood beside him: "Have you had a fight with the serpent today?"

"Yes, I have," replied the other boy, "and I strangled him, too."

IN THE SHADOW

TROXELL—Sarah Troxell of Wabash, Indiana, departed this earthly life on July the 22nd at the age of twenty-two years. Sister Troxell with other members of the family united with the Center Chapel Brethren church seventeen years ago during the ministry of the writer, and has remained true to her church and her Savior all these years. Funeral services were held in the Center Chapel church, in charge of the undersigned, assisted by Rev. Porter of the M. E. church of Wabash. C. C. GRISSO.

HEETER—B. F. Heeter died at his Winona Lake home on July 22nd at sixty-eight years of age. Brother Heeter was for a long time a member of the North Manchester Brethren church and the last rites were held in that church, conducted by Brother J. R. Schutz and the writer. C. C. GRISSO.

GRIMES—Grace Hart Grimes, daughter of Brother and Sister Iliam Hart of near Princeton, Indiana, died in Mexico, July 27th at the age of thirty-seven years. In her going she leaves a husband, and three small children. Sister Grimes united with the Brethren church in Warsaw, under the ministry of Elder G. C. Carpenter. Funeral services were conducted by the writer on August first in the old Washington Center church, near Princeton, assisted by Elder T. H. Plev. C. C. GRISSO.

Herrin—John T. Herrin died at his home in Warsaw at the age of seventy-three years. He was a member of the Brethren church here for more than twenty years. Funeral services were held in the Brethren church in Warsaw on August first, in charge of the family pastor. May the Lord in his mercy comfort all those who mourn, and peace to their ashes until the dead in Christ shall come forth. C. C. GRISSO.

GARRETT—Emma B. Garrett, wife of Frank P. Garrett, was born in West Bethlehem Township, Washington County, Pa., Oct. 31, 1850, and departed this life July 16, 1927.

She was a devout member of the Highland Brethren church of Marianna, Pa. This congregation will miss this loyal sister who for the past forty years has rendered service to her Lord and church of her choice. She loved her church and was faithful in attendance until being hindered by her illness which first began Dec. 21, 1925. This illness was of long duration and carried with it much suffering. During the time this sister suffered at least five strokes her patience was wonderful. Never once did she falter in her trust of God. She longed to be at rest in her Lord and was ready at any time he should call her home. The Lord was gracious to her on Saturday evening, July 16, at six o'clock, and took her to be with himself.

She leaves behind, her husband, an only daughter and son-in-law. These dear ones need the prayers of all the saints that grace may be given them in this hour of affliction.

Services were conducted at the Highland church by the writer. BENJ. F. OWEN.

HIMELRIGHT—Laura Frances Himelright, wife of Brother Branson Himelright, went to her eternal rest, June 8, 1927, at her home in McLean, Virginia, at the age of 47 years, 7 months and 27 days. She was the daughter of Brother and Sister Silas Little of Mount Zion church, Reliance, Va. She followed her parents' footsteps, taking Jesus as her Savior early in life, and was faithful to the Mount Zion church until death. Her funeral was in charge of the writer, who had known and respected her for her fine Christian character for over twenty years. The service was in the Himelright home, ten miles out of Washington, D. C. The railroad company for which her husband worked sent with their superintendent the largest wreath I ever saw, besides there were many other floral offerings. She was laid to rest in the Reliance cemetery. S. P. FOGLE.

KELLAR—Mrs. Mary Ida Kellar died at the home of her only daughter, Mrs. Jesse F. Bly, with whom she made her abode for the past four years. She was 62 years of age. The "First Church" of Winchester surely notes this great loss to them, and of course deeply regrets it, yet she realizes it is a great gain for her to be on the other side.

The opening and establishing of this church was largely due to the personal work and efforts of this faithful follower of the Lord, who may be called the pioneer of this work. Because of her loyalty and devotion to Christ and his church, there were others who caught the vision she had, and became interested and their united efforts brought to fruition the present church.

Mrs. Kellar was admired and loved by all who knew her, simply because she was just old fashioned enough to believe, teach and practice in her everyday life the teachings of our Lord. For thirty years she was a loyal adherent of the Brethren Faith.

God give us more old fashioned mothers of this type, and grant that we who remain may go forth to serve the Christ as never before. The church extends her sympathy, love and prayers to the bereaved loved ones.

COUNTRY CHURCH NUMBER

The Original "Little Brown Church"

at Nassau, Iowa

That inspired Dr. William S. Pitts to write the following widely popular hymn

THE CHURCH IN THE WILDWOOD

There's a church in the valley by the wildwood,
No lovelier spot in the dale;
No place is so dear to my childhood
As the little brown church in the vale.

Oh, come to the church in the wildwood,
To the trees where the wild flowers bloom;
Where the parting hymn will be chanted,
We will weep by the side of the tomb.

How sweet on a clear, Sabbath morning
To list to the clear ringing bell;
Its tones so sweetly are calling,
Oh, come to the church in the vale.

From the church in the valley by the wildwood,
When day fades away into night,
I would fain from this spot of my childhood
Wing my way to the mansions of light.

CHORUS

Come to the church in the wildwood,
Oh, come to the church in the vale;
No spot is so dear to my childhood
As the little brown church in the vale.

The Country Church Problem

The country church problem knocks for solution at the door of every fraternity, but with increasing insistence at the door of Dunker peoples. We have been and still are a rural people to a very large extent, though we are going city-ward quite rapidly in our secular pursuits and also in our church efforts and interests. But there is such a large percent of Brethren people in rural communities that to ignore their religious problems and to be indifferent to their possible future, as we have too long been, is suicidal to our denominational life. Some individuals amongst us have given serious thought and effort to this problem, but as a whole and officially we have not even recognized its existence. What is true of our church is true in a large measure of practically every other denomination, in that very few have done more than merely scratch the surface at working out a solution as yet. It is a source of considerable encouragement however when a people takes cognizance of a problem and sets itself seriously to attempt a solution. We have not really done that, and that is our first task. We have featured the rural church in this issue with a view to introducing the problem to those who have been blind to it, and of stirring up the minds again of those who have given it thought.

The Evangelist office was favored with a call recently by a Brethren minister who has been laboring with country churches, and he was deeply depressed over the situation in certain quarters. He pointed to a country church that was all but deserted, and to another that was fast dwindling, and to others that were suffering heavy loss by the moving of members toward the centers of industry. We have some churches that are apparently flourishing in rural communities, but they seem to be the exceptions that prove the rule that the country church is on the decline. Over in a certain county is a splendid country church building that once was the scene of an enthusiastic and extensive ministry in that community, but now it opens its doors for preaching only on funeral occasions, and it shelters a little handful of irregular Sunday school attendants. A little more than ten years ago it had a membership of nearly a hundred, a third of which were worthy and ambitious young folks ready for the choices of life. They had a pastor and a choir, regular services and revival meetings, and the future seemed as full of promise as the present was of activity and enjoyment. But those young folks went to the surrounding towns for employment and for careers and some to remoter regions, and soon the older folks followed their lead and the exodus continued for one reason or another until today the community has almost completely changed in its personnel, in its ideals and standards, and in its religious affiliations, insofar as it has any. The result is practically an empty church, an emblem of better days, a monument of outgrown usefulness. And that church is but typical of many that have experienced or are experiencing similar changes, for one cause or another, or for many. Consequently vast numbers of our country communities are being denied or are denying themselves of any religious services. It is said that twenty million of the thirty-three million rural folk in our land are without privileges of regular church worship. Such neglect of the religious needs of the rural people cannot long be continued without serious consequences.

Moreover the average churchman stands for an awakening regarding the moral condition of the country community. Contrary to the general impression, the average rural community is on a lower moral and spiritual plane than the city, according to the Rev. Dr. S. Parkes Cadman. There he believes lies the church's greatest unaccepted challenge and unseized opportunity. On numerous occasions Dr. Cadman has characterized the spiritual life of the rural districts as "cold", "and", he says, "I am fairly well acquainted with the rural communities because I have traveled over the greater part of the United States within the last thirty years, and have spent a certain period as a rural pastor." At this point our ministerial friend with whom we recently conversed on this subject pointed out conditions existing in certain rural communities of our brotherhood that would be shocking if we could recite them. The laxness of morals common among young people of certain sections and the indifference of older folks regarding it would astonish those who are unacquainted with rural conditions. And his observations were made concerning a community that was not denied church privileges, but where minds and hearts had not yet become imbued with Christian ideals and standards.

According to a survey made by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor in collaboration with the U. S. Public Health Service, in a backward rural county in an eastern state a few years ago, there were 192 feeble-minded children discovered, whose condition was related to poverty, drunkenness and delinquency. Schools were inadequate in that community, home training and discipline amounted to little or nothing. Such cases border on the extreme, and yet they are to be found in rural communities in every state in the Union, and illustrate the great need of the rural community for a vital and functioning church. In a county in another eastern state, where the country churches had experienced a sharp decline and a number had been abandoned; a survey was made by the town and city churches of the moral conditions, and immorality, drinking and unwholesome recreations were found to be on the increase.

The first rural county conference of churches in Pennsylvania met at Montrose, Susquehanna county a few years ago, and resulted finally in a survey being made of the county with the following observations pointing to a decline in interest in rural religion. The report found:

- (1) That it is not the lack of social activities in the country that calls for attention, but a constructive healthful and recreational direction of these activities is needed.
- (2) That there is great selfishness on the part of parents who have established lodges and granges for themselves but have left out the boys and girls under 21.
- (3) That the church buildings have an average seating capacity of 250 with an average attendance of 57.
- (4) That 80 per cent of the people have no interest in the church.
- (5) That 84 per cent of church members are over 21.
- (6) That unsystematic church financial records are one of the greatest drawbacks in extending Christian influence.

These weaknesses of the country church point out how great is the community's need of the church, and emphasize the church's obligation to the community. And in the meeting of this obligation and in the rendering of this service, the church will be saving its own life, and will be growing more vigorous and strong. In quite full accord with a correspondent in "The Reformed Church Messenger", we point out that:

The church owes the community the best building it can possibly afford. This adds greatly to its prestige and possible influence on the life of the community, as well as to the efficiency of its service.

The church owes the community a well-manned church school, and activities. The people are bound to meet in a social way, and if the church does not direct these activities, some other agency or influence will. If the young people especially are kept satisfied with wholesome social activities, they will be greatly shielded from temptation.

The church should provide wholesome physical entertainment for its community. People like to play, old and young alike, and if the church supplies, or at least is able to keep a controlling hand on, the kind of games that are played, it will be saved much effort combatting the wrong kind of activity.

The church owes the community the best music possible. The successful attendance of its services and special programs largely depends on this.

The church owes the community a well-manned church school, that does not fail to keep in mind the supreme object of Christian instruction, namely, leading the soul to an acknowledgment of the Lord Jesus as personal Savior, subsequently to grow in grace and in service. The school has a great responsibility to the boys and girls of the community in this day of neglect of home training.

The church owes the community a faithful upholding of the Word of God, both by pulpit instruction and by exemplary conduct. The servants of the church are to be true exponents of divine truth both by word and life.

These elements doubtless enter largely into the success of the city as well as the rural church, but because of the widely prevailing false notion that almost anything will do for a country church, we do well to emphasize them. We are prone to think the country church can get along very well on weak leadership, while the big city church must have the strongest talent obtainable. And that has been one of the secrets of our failure. The fact is that the call of the country church is for the most capable, the most thoroughly equipped men we can supply. The problems there to be faced demand such men. Dr. Kenyon L. Butterfield, in "The Country Church and the Rural Problem", says:

The countryside is calling, calling for men. The country church wants men of vision, who see through the incidental, the small, the transient, to the fundamental, the large, the abiding issues that the country man must face and conquer.

She wants practical men, who seek the mountain top by the obscure and steep paths of daily toil and real living, men who can bring things to pass, secure tangible results.

She wants original men, who can enter a human field poorly tilled, much grown to brush, some of it diminished fertility, and by new methods can again secure a harvest that will gladden the heart of the great Husbandman.

She wants aggressive and trained men, who come to their work with knowledge and with power, who have thought long and deeply upon the problems of rural life, who have hammered out a plan for an active campaign for the rural church.

She wants enthusiastic and persistent men who will stand by their task amid the mysterious calls from undiscovered lands, the siren voices of ambition and ease, the withering storms of winters of discontent.

She wants constructive men, who can transmute visions into wood and stone, dreams into live institutions, hopes into fruitage.

She wants heroic men, men who possess a "tart, cathartic virtue," men who love adventure and difficulty, men who can work alone with God and suffer no sense of loneliness.

This call from the country parish is one that may well give pause to men who seek to serve their country and mankind.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

A number of our friends have been calling at the Publishing House on their way to General Conference and we have greatly appreciated their calls, and hope many more will from time to time stop and see us, though we cannot make mention of you all.

We have not heard from members of the Laymen's organization regarding the special offering, privilege of lift which on the second Sunday in September was granted at last conference. The time was too short then to make satisfactory publicity, but the churches ought to know it in time this year. They ask for the observance of the day by means of a special program and the lifting of an offering to go to the Sturents' Aid Fund, a most worthy cause.

Brother G. E. Drushal of Lost Creek, Kentucky, writes that they have dug their way out of the mud in which they were incased as a result of the flood, and that the attendance at the Sunday school and church services are getting back nearly to normal. The school has opened up with a good attendance and a splendid faculty, two new members of which were recently added from Ashland College graduates—Misses Austin and Richards.

President E. E. Jacobs and family are home from their cross-country trip, during which time Dr. Jacobs gave a series of lectures at the Southern California Bible Conference to the great delight of the Conference. He also spoke in a number of our churches and before a group of ministers. He reports a most enjoyable visit, and we are sure that his many friends and the friends of the college will be glad to hear from him again.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Field Secretary of the Endowment Campaign, writes that he has recently been with the churches at Peru and College Corner, Indiana, the former contributing $285 and the latter $339, making a total of $624 to be added to the Fund this week, bringing it up to $117,238.42. Peru is a mission church and is working away courageously and sacrificially under the leadership of Brother G. L. Maus, to pay off its indebtedness, yet they were willing to do what they could for the college. The College Corner church with Brother C. A. Stewart as pastor, is going forward in numbers and service.

The First church of Philadelphia is not reporting "summer slumps", but progress, especially in the matter of religious education, as they recently closed their Daily Vacation Bible School. The Pastor, Brother R. Paul Miller, was superintendent and he was faithfully assisted by a splendid corps of teachers from his church. The Christian Endeavor society is maintaining its interest during the summer months, and in some of its activities is proving its effectiveness in soul-saving. They did a really sacrificial act in making their Easter offering for foreign missions, their gift being second to the largest in the brotherhood.

Brother Fred V. Kinzie, who is in charge of our mission at Krypton, Kentucky, writes that they escaped the severe devastation from the flood that many suffered, because of the high elevation of the buildings. The time for the opening of school again find them with their basement school room considerably improved, and the old pupils back and new ones to the number that their quarters are crowded. With their increased duties they rejoice to have with them to help in the school work a product of Riverside Institute, Miss Thetus Hadden. Even so, Brother and Sister Kinzie are kept very busy.

Of course you are making plans to go to Winona Lake for General Conference, August 22 to 28, or possibly you are already on your way. But if you should be among those who are denied the privilege of attending, you may help to make Conference a success by praying for it, and thus you will be preparing your own heart for a larger enjoyment of the reports that your delegates bring home. By the way, you have a right to insist on a report. No delegate ought to possess himself of such a privilege and refuse to share the blessing with others upon his return. That is one of the duties of delegates—to bring back as much of the conference to the home folks as possible.

We have an interesting letter from Harrah, Washington, where the prospects are bright for the establishing of a new Brethren church. In fact, an organization was effected with Dr. J. C. Beal of Sunnyside in charge. Brother Beal has been preaching for them and it has been largely through his guidance that this work has progressed thus far. If this work is to be a success, it will have to have help from the National Mission Board, and if that Board is to be able to help this mission church and also help the other churches that are appealing so earnestly for help, the churches will have to come across with a larger Thanksgiving offering this year than ever before. When we understand the great urgency of funds for such work, we would like to have hold of the purse strings of the brotherhood and open them wide and let the Lord's money escape from its stuffy confines into those avenues where it would immediately bear abundant fruit in souls born into the Kingdom. May God help us to loosen up and make a great work possible.

Some Elements of a Successful Country Church

By C. A. Stewart

We are not so sure that we are qualified to write upon this subject. But we shall endeavor to do so at the request of the editor. We are inclined to believe that the things which make a city or small town church successful, will in a measure make a country church successful, because they have practically the same problems that must be solved. Counter attractions have the same pulling power upon the country church in these days of rapid transit as they have upon the city. The success of a country church depends largely upon the pastor who is looked upon as the leader of all the activities of the church, and who has the ability to instill into the hearts of his people a desire to be of larger service to the community. He must use the same tactics here as elsewhere. He must study the people with whom he is to work and adapt himself to the work and field. If a preacher is to be of the greatest use in any church he must become acquainted with his people and acquire some knowledge of the line of business in which they are engaged, know some of their problems and be able to converse with them in an intelligent way about such problems, sympathize with them in their reverses and rejoice with them in their successes. It is impossible to be a leader and hold himself aloof from the people he is to lead. We find this is true with the country church. We have known some good men who were not able to interest their flock because they did not find the proper way of approach.

The country preacher must keep in mind at all times the interest of the church and the extension of the Kingdom, and feel that God holds him responsible for that part of the vineyard. He must use every legitimate means to advance the cause of Christ. While he may be conversing with a tiller of the soil about his crops or raising stock, he must not let that be the end within itself, but a means to an end. If you are interested in a man's business he will be interested in your business.

In other words he must not take the attitude of the man who went to the temple to pray and said, "Lord, I thank thee that I am not as this man."

The country preacher must also take an interest in all of the activities of the community. He must boost for everything that is worthy and become active in the welfare of his community. But through it all he must cleave to the right and never sacrifice principle. His word must be as good as gold, and he must refrain from placing himself under obligations which he cannot meet. It is the best plan not to become obligated to any one in any way.

But while he is burning gasoline to call on his members, especially the sick, or tramping over the plowed ground and soiling his shoes to reach some one, he must not neglect his study. After he has been successful in getting them to come to church and take an interest, he must also give them something worth while. The day is past when country people are looked upon as ignorant. With a large number of school teachers and professors in the average congregation they want something to think about. Men and women coming from fields and homes weary and tired from the toil of bread winning are seeking food for their souls. I think many a preacher has made a sad mistake in preaching upon popular themes instead of the Word of God, and his people go away hungry.

A church must be made to see their responsibility. A church that believes that God has a definite work for them to do and acts as though they believed it, will be a successful church. No church will ever be successful with some petty, selfish interest at stake. They must have an "eye single to the glory of God." Our own glory must be kept in the background. Some churches seem to exist only for the purpose of trying to outclass the others. Such churches are not, and never will be, successful.

The Country Church

By Joseph Holcomb

*An angel came to the world one day
In search of a poetical theme;
O'er city and mountain, far the way,
And long the search for her looked-for dream.
And there was a stop and lingering
At the eloquence of a city;
And there was a pause and fingering
For flower petals dead—a pity.
High and low she looked for the theme,
And far and wide was her faithful search;
But the inspiration of that dream
Was found in a lowly country church.
A country church, and by the hillside,
With its lawn of green and sky of blue;
Ah, to its members indeed a pride,
For the church was faithful, strong and true.
But gone the angel and gone the dream—
The angel gone to tell of her search,
To recite to God her chosen theme
Of the strong and faithful country church.*

—The Christian Index.

Another element of success is taking care of the young people. About all the church can hope to do is to reach the young folks and win them for Christ. The largest number of adults belong to some church, and those that do not are hard to reach. Therefore the church must keep their grip upon the young. Put on programs that are wholesome and will interest the young and lead them Godward.

Possibly one of the greatest elements in the success of the country church is a clean, neat and attractive place of worship. An unpainted, dilapidated, and dirty building and grounds, is no inducement to the public to come and worship. This is a display of a careless, listless spirit that people do not care to come in contact with. The time is far past when just anything in the way of a building, and furniture will do for a church. People will not leave clean, comfortable homes to go and worship in that kind of a place.

Another thing that enters in to make a country church successful is the observing of special days. Not one must be overlooked. Mother's Day, Children's Day, Easter, Christmas and others, Sunday school picnics and all. When one is left out, the church has taken one step backward. To hold her place she must interest the people of the community, and to go along in the same old humdrum way will cause folks to lose interest and to go somewhere else. Once gone, they are hard to win back. There must be an untiring effort on the part of every organization of the church and every member if a church is to be successful.

One of the great factors of a successful church is unity of purpose and spirit among its members. A church divided—part trying to do one thing, and the other part trying to do another will not be a success. It proves a laughing stock for the community. A preacher may be the best, and work hard, but with the members at odds he gets nowhere. A team pulling together can move a mighty load. A church with a spirit of unity can do great things for the Master. Many times there is an abundance of power going to waste because the church does not work together. This is a tragic thing in the life of any church, and the thing the devil likes to see, and it will spell failure.

Another element is sacrifice of time and means. There is no class of people on earth that works longer hours than the rural people. But God demands part of our time. A part of it belongs to him as well as part of our means and we cannot expect a blessing from him and expect that our church shall be successful when we rob him of his time and means. Our responsibility does not cease at the borders of our own neighborhood. There are others beyond that God calls our attention to, that need the gospel and we are commissioned to take it to them, and when we do not do so we cease to do his bidding. We cannot be successful and refuse to do the will of God. These are some of the elements of a successful country church which we have tried to picture in a plain simple way.

A Suggestive Solution of the Small Rural Church Problem

By Rev. Albert C. Schue

(Reverend Schue is a member of the Church of the Brethren and pastor of the "United Protestant Church" of Bainbridge, Ohio. The editor formed the acquaintance of Mr. Schue at the Brethren luncheon during the Ohio Pastors' Conference at Columbus in January of 1926 and after hearing his discussion of the community church problem, secured his promise to write his experience for the benefit of Evangelist readers. Brother Schue is well trained and capable and has made a valuable contribution to our thinking on this problem. We are indebted to him for his unselfish service.—Editor.)

We are clearly moving in many respects toward combination and centralization of activities in many phases of American life. In the main this trend is motivated by a desire to eliminate duplication of unnecessary effort in the same field. It is hastened by the desire for economy, which is really the same motive. Then it is urged for the sake of efficiency in administration and establishing as centralized authority as possible.

These same motives, be they sinister or otherwise, are at the basis of much activity that tends towards unification of religious effort in our country at this present hour. May I say very clearly, that in my own private judgment, the tendency toward union and community, and Federated, and independent churches is in the main wholesome and natural on the surface, but I do not believe it gets at the fundamental problem that underlies the whole situation. I speak as a pastor of a Community church. I speak as a member of the Dunker fraternity. I write out of an experience of three years in northern Ohio. Somehow, or other, the community church organization does not have a top, nor does it have a bottom. It has no head and no past, denominationally speaking. But to me the utter justification for the very existence of the very community church of which I am now serving as pastor, is that it is better in this community than no church at all, as would be the case. It is better than nothing. The question is however, how much better?.

If a community can and will support a denominational church I believe it will be for the better. Most communities can if they will. There are some of which I know that will not. Here is the situation I am trying to face experimentally in Bainbridge Township, Geauga County, Ohio. We have in this little church representatives of eight different denominations. And they all seem to get along very delightfully thus far. We have been going for three years. Each representative group brings its own denominational social and religious contribution. It is a pooling of religious interests in this community. We could not do anything singly, therefore let's do it together.

Now then for actual statistical evidence of progress. Our church membership increased from 35 to, at this time, 100 exactly. Many of these are transfers from the various denominations represented. Our Sunday school has grown from a small group to a much larger body. Note: 1920—average for year was 24; 1921—average for year was 26. (This was before merging of denominations represented in community.) In 1925 average for year was 39; 1926—last quarter Sunday school average was 40; 1927—second quarter thus far Sunday school average was over 50. This spells progress in numbers at least. In terms of actual church membership gain, last Easter we received 16 new members, some by confession, more by letter.

Our church has been able to build up, I feel, a very respectable program for a small rural community and has been able to do much good through the same. We have a Ladies' Auxiliary which meets regularly the first Wednesday of the month. It includes about 50 active members. In addition the community is divided into three groups of the same ladies who do effective local group work. Here is really where the work is done. The Auxiliary is largely planning and social in nature. To be specific, in the last year the Auxiliary gave over $500 to repair the church house on the inside. It pays yearly $200 to church expenses.

During the last six months we have organized a Men's Brotherhood, which meets regularly the second Wednesday of the month in the evening. This has been the outstanding venture and a success as well, of the life of the community church in Bainbridge. At the last two meetings we had respectively 32 and 35 men and boys present. We have a song leader, a speaker, and always a supper at 9:00 P. M. At last meeting this organization passed a resolution to compel the county sheriff to investigate a supposed gambling joint in this locality in sight of the church. We are working, thus you see, in moral progress.

Our church board meets regularly the last Sunday of the month. The members of this board must according to the constitution be members of the church. Our church stands strongly for this standard. I believe there must be a sharp line somewhere in this matter. We have drawn the line at this point. We have a somewhat loosely organized workers' meeting that has a conference monthly.

The experiment here is interesting and perplexing to the minister who is a member of a close-communication group as I am. Wife and I go to Cleveland, where we still hold our church letters in the Mission, for communion and services when we can. Our church constitution asks for a definite confession and requires baptism of all who seek to be admitted as members of the church. Our mission money does not give us any trouble, except to get it. It may be sent to the various denominational boards as represented in the church membership. Or individuals may send as they will. We get about 40

Scripture Text Calendars yearly and sell them to the homes in the community. About ten homes get the Christian Herald. Several get other church publications.

Our community effort seems to be a convenience rather than a challenging and aggressive program for righteousness. I say this as the pastor after years of careful and intimate observation. I am giving you the actual situation as I feel it.

The community church is better than nothing. I believe our fraternity should be thoroughly alert as to just what is going on in that field. In the main if the denominations do their real task there will be less and less calls for the community church. There are now and will be increasingly places where the community church alone can serve the best. To those of us who believe TRUTH is the main issue the community church will have no value. To those of us who believe the community and cooperation is the great issue the community church will increasingly commend itself. But this is true in my humble opinion, you cannot step on it too hard in the union church. It seems like a leveling down rather than a leveling up process. If we can have diversity and at the same time have unity we may achieve the ideal. Some folks love authority in religion and some love liberty. The community ideal seems to be a bit different. It approaches unity in diversity. I believe the great American contribution to the religious life has been through the various denominations. The union ideal desires to combine these varied contributions. But let us not forget it is in my opinion hard to retain denominational identity in the community church. To those of us who love the church here is the crux of the problem as it applies to the Brethren fraternities. To me my work here is merely an experiment. The evidence is not all in. What I write is merely systematic of the trend in this part of Ohio. It may come to naught. Nevertheless the community churches are increasing in number and I feel in effectiveness. Let us stretch forward in promoting a real and adequate program for every community for which we are logically responsible.

The Rural Church and the Community

By Floyd Sibert

(The following is the first of a three-installment article which was the writer's thesis for graduation from Ashland Seminary and written under the direction of Prof. J. A. Garber. Aside from his reading along this line, Mr. Sibert has had pastoral experience with the rural church.—Editor.)

I. Rural Communities Need Christian Churches

That the country church faces a crisis no one dares deny. The same dazzling mirage that caught and pulled Lot to Sodom is present today. Like a loadstone it has centralized college debate and discussion about problems of the city until many a fine country bred has answered the challenge by throwing in his life where the maelstrom was the swiftest. But alas for the countryside in the hour of crisis for her champions indeed are few.

What shall be our reaction? Shall we rid ourselves of the problem by saying that we are living in a new dispensation? By saying as some have that the day of the country church is past? We can say a thing, but saying it doesn't make it so. We might shut our eyes and say that the day of the Rocky Mountains is past, but on opening our eyes the mountains would stolidly greet our vision. Yet it would be about as reasonable to do the latter, as the former. By turning the searchlight of retrospection into the dimly lighted past we see something that makes our hearts tingle. First we see a ship plowing the surf. Next we see sturdy men cutting logs to build a home and a church. Again we see these brawny-armed, Godly-minded men plying the soil and pushing west. But ever in the wake of the sturdy plowman appear two unmistakable structures—the CHURCH and the SCHOOL. These are the foundations upon which American civilization was builded before the days of American vice and social complexity. If the rural church was a necessity then how much more must it be necessary now to the preservation of pure society? The question that faces us is, DO WE NEED a rural church? Who DARES to say that the day of the rural church is past? Would he be a modern Sampson to pull down the pillars of purity from the temple of our social order? THE NEED OF THE RURAL CHURCH IS INESCAPABLE! But perhaps not the rural church that we know today. Because of the fact that the rural church had to pioneer with the pioneers and function in sparsely settled communities it developed a more or less aggressive individualistic attitude. True with the rapid growth of cities and urban population it has failed to keep pace with the socializing process. But is that any excuse for discarding an organization that has tempered the national character of our country? Would a lady discard a diamond because it was no longer rightly mounted, or would she not rather retain it and have it remounted more appropriate to her need?

We can, however, be sure of one thing. Rural life is here to stay. Thinking people see clearly that in spite of city growth the nation is still rural. Agriculture is, and will continue to be, the main business of our people. The nation's prosperity still depends on country conscience. Not only is it true that most of our leaders in politics, in business, in the pulpit, and indeed in every profession, were born and bred in the country but the city is still looking to the country, to develop in a large degree, leadership for the future.

To quote Robert Fisk, "Were it not for the immigration tide and the continuous supply of fresh young life from the country, the city would be unable to maintain itself. It would be crushed beneath its burden. For the city is the 'graveyard of national physique.'" With its moral and industrial overstrain, it is the burial place of health, as well as youthful ambitions and hopes, for many young persons not accustomed to its high-gear life. The nervous system rebels against the city pace. In an incognito life the character crumbles under the subtle disintegration of city temptation. The young man with exceptional abilities finds his way to high success in the city; the average man trudges on in mediocrity, lost in the crowd—as just "a high private in the rear ranks," when he might have stayed in the country and won a measure of real influence and substantial happiness in his natural environment." Furthermore it is not only the lure of the city that has drawn them city-ward but the fact that the claims of the country has never been sounded. It is time to talk of life's chances for stalwart young Americans in the country, and how by staying right there they may realize their highest privileges.

Quoting Piefer in "Saving Rural Religion." Everybody knows that in the past two decades vast changes have occurred in organized rural religion. These changes have been more marked perhaps than in any other period in history, the acceleration being due largely to the economic disaster confronting hundreds of thousands of farmers. It is now found that an appalling percentage of farm communities in the United States are entirely without churches. Thousands of children and hundreds of fathers and mothers have never listened to the preaching of the gospel. From various communities come this information, "There has never been a Protestant sermon preached in this community." Statistics show that in rural America, one community in every six has no church." The need is urgent.

The principle of apperception demands that the church be located in the farmer's community. The farmer spends his time working with nature in an effort to feed the world. He looks over his field of corn with a sense of great satisfaction, for to him it represents the reward for his labor, yes, to him it represents LIFE. A man from the city might come by the same field and behold only the grandeur of the waving tassels above the sea of green. The artist might come along and see in it a wonderful painting. So each man interpreted what he saw in terms of his past experience. Or in other words, he apperceived these things. Hence we readily see that a farmer toiling with growing crops, and farm animals, struggles with the baffling forces of nature, could never fully enjoy the same sort of ministry as that of a congregation of manufacturers. His past experience would not enable him to interpret things from the same angle. To illustrate, a little girl coming to the country from town saw a little pig and called it a fat little pup. She interpreted the pig in terms of her past knowledge and experience and called it a pup. How much more preposetrous was this interpretation than would be that of a farmer driving ten or fifteen miles to a big city church and there try to adapt himself to this new situation once every week. Says G. A. Brickner, "The rural ministry has a great opportunity and plain duty. His parishioners are farmers; their thoughts, their habits, their lives are all formed in accord with the enviroing influences under which they serve mankind and their God. Business, recreation and education, to succeed, must come to them in terms of an agricultural experience." WHY NOT RELIGION? It must! And the religion that had its origin among the pastoral people may be preached with peculiar force to an agricultural people."

The need for a rural church is made more evident by the fact that rural and town churches are dying in every community. One needs only to drive through the country to find evidence to convince a jury. From Ohio to Indiana is an endless line of discarded church buildings. Some have been rejuvenated into oil stations, others for the sheltering of county tools, and some actually turned into pig pens to the shame of American rural life. There they stand, inanimate objects of mercy, while their phantom like spires silently point to the heavens above as if they were trying to say, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills from whence cometh my help." For that is where its helpers have gone and it is only from there that the power can be secured to restore the depleted condition of the rural church life.

In a certain little town which we take for an example are three churches representing as many denominations. Two have moss growing on their door steps, while the other, a would-be administrant to the four hundred inhabitants, has, between volcanic eruptions or contention, in a measure serves as a place of worship for children. The world war disclosed the fact that a large percentage of the population were victims of venereal disease. As a resent revival held in that community the pool rooms and business ran Sunday competition while four or a dozen of the four hundred residents responded to the call to worship and one of them was a WAG. The entire support of the meeting, in every sense, came from the country. A farmer will drain the green slimy cess-pool that is an eyesore to the community and a menace to health. But the little "city germs" are quite content to fill the pure air of country life with deadly froth from the maelstrom of human wreckage. Do we need a rural church? Is, or ever will, the city church make it possible for children to escape the fiendish clutch of immorality and maintain their purity in a town like this? A government survey shows the two mile line to be the limit of church attendance. Harlan says, "There are dead and dying by the score all over the country. Government statistics prove that there are eight million children under ten years of age outside the Sunday school. IS NOT THIS AMPLE PROOF OF THE NEED OF THE RURAL CHURCH?

(To be continued).

It is not belonging to a church that saves us, but the fact that we are fit for church membership.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Work of God

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

TEXT: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is yet day; the night cometh when no man can work."—John 9:4.

What a strange company that was as they trudged along that Sabbath morning long ago! "As Jesus passed by, he beheld a man that was blind from his birth." He had with him, slow-learning disciples; soon, the ever-present scribes and Pharisees (those self-appointed helpers we seem not to heed, always trying to make right those who are leagues ahead in spiritual things) there too, were timid parents unwilling to testify to the truth. "Who hath sinned, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" asked the disciples. Jesus gave an answer that all educators ought to hear and heed unless they are willing to deny the power of the Master. "Neither . . . this man or his parents." Some things are for the glory of God and result neither from environment, heredity, behaviorism, nor any other human explanation: this man was born blind for the glory of God. Then, conscious of the eternal purpose of God as concerned himself and this man, he announced the great compelling urge of his life. "I must work the works of him that sent me: . . . the night cometh when no man can work." Jesus just had to do some things. It seems hard for modern men and women to realize that there are any "musts" in their lives; but there were in the life of Jesus and we must have some "musts", also, if we follow him. And we must follow him or lose the Way to heaven and benediction. "The night cometh", he said. How terrible was that night! All of his disciples forsook him and fled. They slept when he had told them to "watch and pray." He prayed that the cup might pass, but in the same breath, he said, "Yet for this purpose came I into this world." "I must"; "Thy will be done." Jesus had to work and to work fast. The night cometh for us all. Will our work be done as we approach the end of the way?

But there is another word in this text that needs our notice. "The works of him that sent me." What are the works of God? Perhaps in no place in all the teachings of the Word of God do men so utterly fail to comprehend the Master as in this doctrine. We read that he went about doing good and at once men begin to believe that that was all he did. Was it? Indeed, "no." His life was filled with good deeds, good miracles, good sermons, good conversations, and at once men deceive themselves into believing that if they do likewise, they will be working the works of God. So we have the many false and half-way methods and inventions of men which miss the mark entirely. If lodges and clubs and human inventions of doing good would fill the bill, then the tragedy of the cross would indeed have been of no effect. All the prophecies of the dying Son of God, all the deeper teaching of the Old Testament and the clear interpretations of the great Paul in his epistles were wrong if the work of God were only doing things for salvation. How can we preach enough, talk enough, pray enough, that men will not be deceived by this shallow ephemeral nothing that misses the mark entirely and completely?

Had Jesus not answered directly and explicitly this question in as few words as possible, we still might have some excuse for ignorance and evil teaching, but he did. True to the whole tenor of the gospel, he, at another time answered the multitude (John 6:29). "This is the work of God, THAT YE BELIEVE ON HIM WHOM HE HATH SENT." Can you accept it? Is there nothing else than to believe? Is that what God requires? True—true. This is the work of God; all of it—just believing. True of the Old Testament teaching, and also of the New. "For I desired mercy and not sacrifice and the knowledge of God, more than burnt-offerings" (Hos. 6:8). Yet, the Jew went on burning sacrifices just as men try to fool themselves today by small giving and a little church-going, that they are doing the works of God. "What CHRIST'S PARTING PROMISE—Acts 1:1-14. Before Christ left the world he made effective arrangements for the working out of his redemptive purpose. His ascension was a part of his plan and work of redemption. He ascended to make intercession for his church and to sustain his servants in all the stress of life and in all the anxiety of service.

TUESDAY

BESTOWMENT OF POWER—Acts 2:1-13. The gift of Pentecost was in its truest sense the communication of divine life to men, a special and very extraordinary revelation of the Holy Spirit's power in submissive souls. We may not have reproduced the same phenomenon, but we may have the same bestowal of power.

WEDNESDAY

EFFECTS OF EMPOWERMENT—Acts 2:22-24, 29-41. Strange things happen when men are filled with the Holy Spirit; they speak with new tongues, the old unworthy speech no longer has place; they speak with new power, their words as they tell the Gospel story carry conviction; and they themselves were changed, the presence of the Holy Spirit was evident upon each of them.

THURSDAY

SONS OF GOD—Acts 8:12-17. Paul makes the high claim that believers are sons of God, and adoption into the family of God is to be assured of eternal life. The spirit of sonship must be manifest and is quite distinct from the spirit of bondage.

FRIDAY

INSTRUMENTS OF POWER—Acts 3:1-12. Peter and John at the Beautiful Gate demonstrate how wonderfully God can use men when they are walking in his will, worshipful, consecrated and unafraid. There is no limit to what can be accomplished in the name of the Lord by those whose lives are fit instruments of his power.

SATURDAY

HUMBLING AND EXALTING—Phil. 2:1-11. Self-seeking, pride in certain spiritual experiences and a false estimate of our own importance and attainments makes for inharmony and division. Jesus is the great example of humility and sacrifice which point the way to exaltation and power.

SUNDAY

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP—Acts 4:32-5:5. When by the Spirit the Lord's disciples are welded into such a remarkable unity of experience and purpose as was the case with the little Christian band in Jerusalem long ago, they forget selfishness and live for others and God. Such joyous fellowship is nowhere else to be found than in the body of Christ.—G. S. B.

doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly before thy God" (Micah 6:8).

Again, spiritual things and not temporal. Just here is the secret of the man going blind all his life. It would end in convincing one man, at least, that Jesus was the Son of God. Do you ask, or worse still, do you teach and preach as some do today, that Jesus never claimed to be the Son of God? Ah, then you have missed the key to this man's blindness and to the message of the miracle. After all the carpers and cynics and questioners had had their miserable part in this man's wonderful experience, they thrust him out. When Jesus heard that they had cast him out, he hunted him and said, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God?" He said, "Who is he Lord, that I might believe?" Note the response of Jesus: "Thou hast both seen him and it is he that talketh with thee." Did you see that? E. Stanley Jones in his Christ-filled book, "The Christ of the Indian Road," tells how he has come to accept the promise of Matthew 10:19 that the Spirit will speak for us in perplexing times and that once he was asked of an Indian if he could point to a scripture where Jesus had ever claimed to be the Son of God. He testifies that he believed that there was such a scripture and yet, at the moment, he could not think where to look; but he opened his Testament and his eyes fell on this verse: "Thou hast both seen him and it is he that talketh with thee." Of course, this is not the only time, nor the only place in the Word of God, where the claim is made else, it would not be so compelling a truth; but if it were the only time, it would be enough. "Jesus was the Son of God" is the greatest truth ever revealed to man and we must attain to that belief because it is the work of God to believe it. Ah, to believe him!

Now, note what happened to the man. When he said, "Lord, I believe", he did just what a man will do who does believe. "He worshipped him." Well, that is the result of belief. That is enough, too. If we believe the Son of God and if we worship him, it is enough. With worship, follows all the rest. Do you believe the Son of God? Do you, when he says "YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN" or you can not see the kingdom of heaven? Do you believe the Son of God when he says "Go ye therefore, make disciples and baptize them?" Do you believe the Son of God when he says, "All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers?" And when he says, "no man cometh unto the Father but by me?" Ah, here is the test—do we really believe? This is the work of God—THAT YE BELIEVE ON THE SON OF GOD.

The Country Church

By Mrs. C. M. Sams

A country church has always been a source of attraction to me somehow; perhaps sentimentally, perhaps some other way. As a country church comes into view on a drive over a rural road, it reminds one of a sentinel, quiet and watchful—watchful for the surrounding community. The little buildings, usually painted white, with colored glass windows, serve as a reminder that in the great open spaces there's a group of country folk worshipping him who made the glorious country.

But—a recent visit to one of our rural churches brought to light the fact that holding together our small town churches is often a difficult proposition. I never before knew the hardships the country pastor has to contend with. Advertisements of "nastor needed" in the small towns as published in the Evangelist, prove that country parishes are often vacant. Investigation shows that many times the last pastor was compelled to leave because of lack of a salary, or of a comfortable parsonage, or of cooperation on the part of the congregation.

A word to the country folks. You would not and have not in the past surely like to see the doors of your little church closed on Sundays. You would miss the fellowship of one another, of the pastor with whom you perhaps failed to cooperate. Then don't allow the doors to be closed! Let your country church thrive, stand always silhouetted against the blue sky as a reminder to passers by that God is in your community. Let your children's memories of childhood be of going to Sunday school, no matter how small the school. Boost your country church, and remember the minister needs every ounce of support you can give. It has been said, "Too low they build who build beneath the stars." May all our churches and our characters be built above the stars!

THE WIDOW ANNE

By Henry S. Alkire

She was just one of many like her. Her husband was killed by a vicious horse. It was in the days when "employers' liability" was unknown. And not only did it mean the loss of Anne's bread winner, but she had all the doctor and funeral bills to meet. Thus the familiar washtub, with its daily fifty-cent returns, became her portion.

She had long paid fifty cents in her church weekly envelope and never missed a service unless providentially prevented. I understood why she clung to our holy altars, where sorrows may find surcease. But I could not understand how she kept that fifty-cent payment coming. It meant a full day's slaving over the steamy tubs. When I saw her quietly drop that little envelope into the morning plate, I thought I could see blood prints on it. It seemed more than the "widow's mite."

So I brought up the matter when my stewards met. They instantly agreed with me and appointed me as a committee to talk it over with her. I felt bold to go. Many church folks are only too glad to be released from financial pledges. Not many await the pastor's coming to beg such release.

She listened almost lovingly. I painted the picture of her heavy burdens, of her aloneness, and of her possible physical breakdown, ending by reminding her that she did not have much to comfort her in her home. Then a smile which comes only from that Light which never shone on land or sea she said: "Pastor, I have all this, then I have Jesus besides."

O Widow Anne! Your red and calloused hand never had the fashionable dip when it met mine, your tongue never distilled the flowery eloquence of the highbrows; but when you pressed the pastor's hand as you moved with the costly cloth and silken robes at the door and whispered, "Pastor, you helped me today," you became breath to the pastor's soul. I am anxious to see your mansion in the skies and fear I shall feel small at your side there.

Jesus is supreme There has been none like him. Great men there have been—multitudes of them. but there was a fault in all of them. Only Jesus was without flaw. He is spotless, peerless. If he were not God, then it behooves the great Jehovah to give us a better, but he can not. There can be no improvement upon perfection.

Nathan Leads David to Repentance

Scripture Lesson—2 Samuel 11:1 to 12:25.

Printed Text—2 Samuel 12:1-10, 13.

Devotional Reading—Psalm 103:8-14.

Golden Text—A broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.—Psalm 51:17.

LESSON LIGHTS

A Double Crime

David's sin consisted of the two most heinous wrongs one person can commit against another,—adultery and murder, mingled with meanness, selfishness, and injustice. David did not sin through ignorance. His conscience troubled him. The inward fires were burning in his soul. His cruel and silent general, Joab, knew the guilty secret of Uriah's death. Rumors and whisperings must have pervaded the palace. There was also some danger arising from his conduct. It was the law that both the adulterer and the adulteress should be put to death. (Lev. 20:10). And Bathsheba was the daughter of one of David's mighties, and the wife of another, and the granddaughter of Ahithophel, David's chief and wisest counsellor. The relations between them may have been strained, for not long after, this wisest counselor turned against him. It also seems probable, from Psalms 32:4, that this burden, added to his long-continued cares, brought sickness upon him.

The Meaning of the Tragedy

We will miss the meaning of this tragedy and its lesson unless we keep before us certain considerations.

1. It is not at all probable that David fell without something in his life which prepared the way for his fall. The tornado comes suddenly indeed, but it overwhelms those trees which have been slowly decaying at heart, or have grown up with less firm roots because sheltered by their neighbors.

2. The story shows that David parleyed with temptation.

3. After one sin he was caught in toils from which it was difficult to escape. All his efforts to escape, except the one open door of confession and restoration which he refused as too hard, but involved him still deeper in the toils, as the tiger is caught by a sticky slime on the leaves, from which every effort to escape hastens his capture.

4. There is no apology for David's sin. It was a sin against light. He knew the commandments; he had received great spiritual enlightenment and noble impulses. He himself never apologizes for his sin. The Bible never apologizes for it. It is to be held up in eternal execration and scorn. Greatness and genius are no excuse for wrongdoing, and no substitute for a pure life.

5. At the same time we can never rightly judge of David's guilt without considering the circumstances. Emerson said, "One has but to remove an object from its environment, and it instantly becomes comic." He might have added that it becomes false, distorted, untrue. We must remember that "no other king of the time would have felt any compunction for doing what David did."

Remorse

The most hopeful element in David's case was the intensity of his pain on account of his sin. The deceased limb that feels no pain, but is mortified, dead, is hopeless. Many an infinitely worse sinner than David has felt infinitely less pain on account of his crimes.

Illustrations. David's sin was "like putting the clock back because we do not wish to know the hour; the clock goes on working, but henceforth all its results are wrong. It was not until the stern hand of the prophet put the clock right, and it struck

For the Discouraged Sunday School Teacher

I wonder if he remembers—

*Our Sainted Teacher in heaven,
The class in the old, gray schoolhouse,
Known as the "noisy seven."*

I wonder if he remembers

*How restless we used to be,
Or thinks we forgot the lessons
Of Christ and Gethsemane?*

I wish I could tell the story

*As he used to tell it then,
I am sure that with heaven's blessings
It would teach the hearts of men.*

I often wish I could tell him

His lessons were not in vain.*

I'd like, yes, I'd like to tell him with a tone that rang the like bell of judgment through the whole nature of the guilty king, that he saw the abasing vision of his own vileness."

Confession of Sin

A frank acknowledgment of one's sin, made in the first place to God, and then to all who have a right to know about the sin, and wherever an open confession of it will do good and not harm. "It is only when man does not cover his sin that God does cover it." "The less you spare yourself, the more will God spare you."—Tertullian. "It may perhaps occasion mere present pain to draw out the point of the weapon that sticks in the flesh, but to neglect it will occasion greater danger and more future torment."

The Proof of David's Sincerity, that he was not merely sorry for the consequences, but repented of the sin, is shown by his forsaking that sin and hating all sin, and by his efforts to remove the evil effects of his wrong. This was done largely through the 32d and 51st Psalms. These were David's public confession to both God and man. Confession should always be to those whom the sin has injured, and should be as widely known as the sin. He who taught men to sin by his example should also, by his example, teach them repentance. Therefore David wrote two hymns from the depth of his heart, and one of them, at least, he gave to the chief musician of the temple services, so that everywhere it should be heard and known throughout the whole kingdom how deep was the repentance of their king. He had dishonored God and religion and morals. To undo, as far as possible, this evil, David took a course almost unparalleled in the history of kingly heroism.

An Important Message

This lesson has a most important message to those that have not fallen. David's repentance, his restoration to God's favor, could not undo the terrible deeds. It could not bring Uriah back to life. It could not resurrect the dead child. It could not renew Bathsheba's and David's lost innocence. It could not annihilate a host of dreadful memories. Seeds of distrust were planted in the nation and seeds of dissension in David's family. Let every tempted soul take heed, and be strong and wise in time.

And the lesson, to those that have fallen, bring a message of hope and cheer. The past cannot be undone, but the future can be brightened. We cannot forget, but God will forget. And he will help us back into the purity and power we have lost.—From Illustrated Quarterly.

AUSTRIA TO THE FRONT

Austria has not only picked herself up politically, but religiously as well especially in Sunday school work. The news of progress among these people comes both as an inspiration and a challenge to Brethren Sunday school activity.

Since 1925 Rev. G. Luntowski has been supported as a full time secretary by the World's Sunday School Association for the active promotion of Sunday school work throughout the country. During the year 1926 he has organized 42 new Sunday schools and has visited every Protestant parish holding conferences with the pastors and the adult leaders with the view of stimulating the Sunday school method of teaching Christian truth. There is a total of 148 Sunday schools in Austria with a membership approximating 16,000. An annual convention is called for Salzerbad to be held in the month of June of this year.

Rev. Luntowski is untiring in his efforts and is holding conferences in all parts of Austria with the view of training a Sunday school leadership. The Sunday School Association publishes a paper for leaders and teachers with articles on Sunday school work. This is a new adventure and is proving a great help to those who are responsible for promoting the Sunday school.

Select Committee Plans

By Rev. R. P. Anderson in Junior C. E. World

WHAT SHALL WE PLAY?

For Social Committees

Here are a few active games that will amuse the Juniors at some of your socials. Paste them in your social scrap-book, and use them when you need lively games.

1. A Bawl Game—a judge deciding which Junior can bawl the best.

2. A Hurdle-Race. The contestants sing "America," singing two words and omitting a third, and so on. A mistake puts a person out.

3. Contention. Two Juniors (girls, if you wish) sit on the floor facing each other, their feet braced together. The feet must remain braced. They grasp a bar or walking stick, and try to pull each other to a standing position. Two or three couples may try this to see which can win.

4. A Jumping Race. Divide into groups. One Junior in each group starts on the line and jumps. The second Junior in each group starts at the former's mark, and so on until all have jumped. The group wins that has jumped farthest.

5. Linen Throw. Throw a handkerchief as far as possible. No weight must be attached to it.

6. Feather Aeroplanes. To each player is given a feather. All are told to blow their feathers into the air, and keep them in the air by blowing, not by touching the feathers. The Junior wins who can keep his feather flying longest.

TEST YOURSELF

For Lookout Committees

If you can get cards printed for this plan, so much the better, but the lookout committee may have fun making the cards, or some one with a typewriter or mimeograph may make them for you. Leave a space at the top for the name of the Junior. Then underneath this print the following words and letters:

Present	On Time	Studied Topic
10	20	20
Offering	Take part	Church
10	20	20

The figures show the number of points that each Junior may claim for the things named. He must each week honestly write his own grade underneath this figure. If, for instance, he is tardy, he must take off five or ten points for being late; and so with the other things. The cards may be mimeographed, and a new one be used each week, or dates may be placed on the bottom of them so that one card will last for a month. The cards are given to the superintendent, who will keep an honor roll of the Juniors who show the best grades.

A TWO-BOAT MEETING

For Prayer Meeting Committees

For this meeting the prayer meeting committee will prepare two boats cut out of cardboard. Rather large boats. When the Juniors take part in the meeting one of the members, who will stand near the boats (which should be fastened to the wall or to the blackboard) will make black marks on the boats. Each black mark will represent a Junior. They should be made on the boats turn about, a Junior in one boat, then the next one to take part in the other boat, and so on.

In the next meeting use the same boats, but this time instead of putting black marks into the boats, take them out by pasting a small piece of white paper over each one as each Junior takes part. This is to see which boat can get all its passengers ashore first. A good plan is to fix the names of the Juniors to their marks, and take them out in the same way. Thus all the Juniors must come to the second meeting, or their side will lose. (Instead of black marks small figures cut from cardboard may be used and pinned to the boats).

A FLOWER-HOLDER

For Flower Committees

It has long been the custom of flower committees to place flowers on the pulpit on Sundays. One society improved on this plan by presenting to the church a beautiful silver flower-vase in which to place the flowers week by week. If a silver vase is too costly, then a cut-glass vase might be given; but a silver vase would be better. It might be presented by the society at one of the church suppers.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for August 28)

Visiting Juniors in Japan. Acts 1:8

"Mother, I wish that we could visit the Junior Christian Endeavorers in Japan," said Carl. "I would like to see how they do when they have a meeting."

"Well," said mother, "maybe you can some day. There are not very many Junior societies in Japan, but I hope that there will be a large number of them until you are grown."

"Are the boys in Japan just like the boys in America?" asked Carl.

"They are not so very different from you and other American boys, Carl. They are not as tall as most little white boys. Of course, you know, their skin is a little darker than yours. But way down deep inside of him, the little Japanese boy has feelings very much like the feelings of any little American boy. They like for their mothers to love them and they like to play and they need to know about Jesus just as you do. Do you know how a Japanese mother shows her love for her little boy?"

"No," said Carl.

"She does not kiss him as I do you, instead she does this," and mother held Carl in her arms and rubbed her cheek against his.

"Isn't that funny?" said Carl.

"The little sisters or brothers are usually looked after by the older children of the family. I have a nice idea, Carl. Let's pretend that we are attending a Junior Christian Endeavor meeting. First we will stop at the door of the Mission church and watch the children come to their church. Now we are seated at the door. Do you see anyone coming yet, Carl?"

"Yes, mother, here comes a little girl and she is leading a small boy by the hand."

"That is a little girl and her brother. They live near here and their mother has washed them and dressed them so that they will look nice for their Junior meeting. I do not believe that that little girl is more than six years old, yet her mother has trusted her to look after her little brother. Carl, I see someone else coming now. Look far down the street. Do you see that little boy who is walking so fast? There seems to be something fastened to his shoulders or back."

"I know what that is," said Carl. "He has his baby sister or brother fastened to his back. I guess he is terribly tired from carrying such a heavy load. I hope that the baby will be good at the meeting."

"Here comes a whole group of children together," said mother. "I do not believe that all of them could come from one home. There must be two or three families of children coming together. Here comes a little boy who looks scared. I do not believe that he has ever been here before. We'll take him in to the mission teacher so that he will feel at home."

"Maybe he will tell us about himself," said Carl.

"Just listen to his story, Carl," said mother. "I feel so sorry for him. He says that he has been watching the other children come here to their meetings and each time that he saw them pass his house, he asked his mother if he might come, too. Each time his mother has refused him and sometimes she has punished him for asking."

"I wonder how he got here today," said Carl.

"I believe he is going to tell us. He says that his mother is busy and so he pretended that he was playing out in the street and came on over here. He wants the Mission teacher to help him to get permission to come to the meetings each week. He would like to know about Jesus just like other girls and boys."

"I hope that all little boys and girls like him may be able to go to the Mission churches and learn about Jesus," said Carl.

"Now," said mother, "it is time for the meeting to start and as we will not be able to understand the words of their songs or stories, we will not stay any longer. Maybe some day when you have grown up you will learn the Japanese language and be able to help the little Japanese children."

Lost Creek, Kentucky

We have worked out of the mud somewhat now, i. e., the mud left by the flood, and are now two weeks on the new school year. The last "big tide", which came anywhere near to what this flood was, was in 1862. That was at different places some feet below this flood. That highest water, before the flood, came as a result of three or four days of rain. This flood of May 30th, came after about four or five hours of downpour.

The attendance at services has gotten back to normal again. Since the flood it was below. A big county bridge which went out, near us, accounting for some of it. Today we had 117 in Sunday school, more in church. One year ago we had 114. The graded road is steadily approaching. By the first of next month the whirr of the steam shovel will be heard at Riverside, or very near it.

We are having some good growing weather now. After the flood it was feared that there would be no food stuff raised in these valleys this year. But much is being raised, and doing well now.

The attendance in school has been about up to the standard, the usual shortage of room being one of our predicaments again. We are well pleased with the outlook for the year. There is one need not yet fully supplied, but we are trusting that this need of more help may soon be met.

We have some new faces on the teaching force this year. Miss Bessie Hooks of Kittanning, Pennsylvania, is back for another year. Brother and Sister Early of Los Angeles, California, are on their second year. We are always glad to see the holdovers in the work. They know better where, when, and how to take hold. The new faces in the work this year are as follows: Miss Ruth Austin, Canton, Ohio, high school teacher; Miss Clara Hall, Garretville, Ohio, seventh and eighth grade teacher; Miss Dove Barnett, Portsmouth, Kentucky, 4th, 5th, and sixth grade teacher; Miss Omeda Hadden, Haddix, Kentucky, 1st, 2nd, and 3rd grade teacher; Miss Goldie Richards, Garwin, Iowa, Matron, and teacher of domestic science in the high school; and Mrs. Corsa Smith, Harveyton, Kentucky, head cook. After two weeks of work now, everyone of these new helpers are making good, their work showing up very satisfactorily.

Miss Austin and Miss Richards graduated at Ashland College last spring. Miss Hall has had much experience in teaching, and comes to us because of being where she believes her Lord would have her be. This of course is true of all the workers. Miss Barnett and Miss Hadden are graduates of Riverside Institute, and Mrs. Smith has been a student here.

Folks ask the question, Does it pay? Does it pay to keep Riverside going? Are the people who get the benefit of this expenditure, appreciating it, etc., etc.? Permit us to attempt to answer somewhat. The salary the workers receive here, they could easily double and quadruple, if they went after it. The salary of the teachers named above is $40 per month and their board, and traveling expenses, and some of us do not get that. Anyone acquainted with school work know what sacrifice is being made. NOW THREE OF THE WORKERS THIS YEAR HAVE FORMERLY BEEN STUDENTS OF RIVERSIDE, and everyone of them could get much more money for their work. It seems to the writer that that kind of service does show appreciation, and that it does pay.

The opening day of school is always given over to much speech making, everyone who can talk in public being called on to do so. One of Riverside's graduates, a mighty fine young man, was present. He responded in part as follows, possibly not being exactly quoted: "I am especially glad to see some of our graduates back teaching. It is as it should be. We know the salary is not what one could get elsewhere, but it is an opportunity for service, and our folks ought to help carry the work along, and the burden of it, as there is any." This shows appreciation and to us who face the tasks as they come, and the situation as it exists, do believe that it pays.

Miss Thetis Hadden, a sister of our Miss Hadden, a graduate of Riverside and the Bible Institute at Los Angeles, is now assisting the Kinzies in the work at Krypton. This she is doing at a financial sacrifice also. She hopes to complete her college work at Ashland.

Recently there came in the mail addressed to Riverside Institute, the following lines. There was no way by which we could identify who the sender was, and it was signed simply, "A Student", and had been in the mail two days:

"'Tis your school and my school
 On which we look with pride,
 In your state and my state,
 Our school at Riverside;
 Her sunny skies are brightest,
 Her students' hearts the lightest
 In the mountains of Kentucky,
 Where the coolest breezes blow,
 We chase away all cares,
 In this dear old school of ours,
 By wearing happy faces
 Wherever we may go.

'Tis your school and my school
 To which we'll e'er be true,
 In your state and my state
 Where skies, not hearts, are blue.
 We'll sing her praise the loudest,
 Wherever we may wander,
 Whatever we may do,
 For in her watchful care,
 Through her effort and her prayer,
 We grow to meet life's problems
 With a faith sincere and true."
 Five young folks have recently been baptized. Pray for us that we may be faithful to the trust committed.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

Krypton, Kentucky

Several weeks have swiftly passed since we reported from here, and it is seemingly stolen hours that we now use to write this. However, we are sure it is an important duty (as well as a pleasure) to "write what we see, and send to the churches."

Many things have transpired since the last message, and in fact so rapidly have things come to pass that time has flown with the wings of the wind. Brother Drushal has given you some considerable version of the terrible flood which devastated this valley last Decoration Day, and because of the little we suffered our time and attention were diverted to the program of forward steps in school work for this year. However, we might state that the Krypton property, although very close to the river—right on the brink—suffered practically nothing compared to others' losses, primarily because of the height of the land at this point. We were marooned on an island the greater part of the day and while the waters speedily climbed to alarming stages, we carried various effects from cottage to church auditorium, which is four or five feet higher. Nevertheless, the water lacked some thirty inches of entering the floor of our home. The dormitory floor was about fourteen inches under water, but no damage, for everything was out in plenty of time. One of our gardens had just been plowed and partly planted. This was all destroyed and several rods of fence completely carried away. But, again we say, these things we mention are infinitesimal in the face of the sufferings and losses of thousands all about us. The lack of loss does not say there was no peril. As the drift and debris piled against our upper fence and the angry torrent gushed through the apertures, we felt then and now also that it was only the hand of a heavenly Father which saved some of our buildings. The force of the flood can be realized in the fact that a huge iron bridge was carried two miles before it found a resting place across the river from this property.

The flood, for this occasion, is past; the river is peaceably and lazily wending its way, with surface some thirty-five or forty feet below the level of our floors. With the help of the Red Cross and the determined hopefulness of human nature, people are becoming re-established, and soon these perils of waters and all the lessons which they should have instilled, will be forgotten, even as the first great inundation of history in the days of Noah. These catastrophes may be God-sent, as some declare, to awaken sinning peoples and warn them, but if this be the case then we see no evidence of efficacy in this May 30 message.

We turn our attention abruptly from waters to the work in which we are plunged, even as we were obliged to do May 31, June 1, and following.

After having gone over the situation here and the property and equipment as well, personally, with Brethren Gearhart and Ankrum, representing the Home Mission Board, we immediately got extremely busy making certain very necessary repairs and improvements, knowing that whatever was attempted, the finish would have to come by mid-July, and July 18 found our children coming in for another year of study.

They found a new solid foundation under the cottage, replacing rotten posts, and besides, a cellar with concrete walls and upper 20 inches of native stone laid together with cement. They found some roofs repaired, a linen and bed clothing department in the dormitory, stone posts under rear porch, toilets repaired, a corner of the church auditorium, formerly so much waste space, partitioned and put into use. They found twenty additional feet of blackboard space in the school room, but the most delightful find was a series of six large windows taking the place of non-transparent concrete. This flood of light and ventilation makes this sub-basement school room one of real delight to all who enter. Many visitors, parents of children, and in fact all who visit us, exclaim their joy with this room. It is not elaborate nor fancy, but so pleasant compared with what is so common in schools of this section.

All of last year's boarding pupils returned, with several new ones, and that means our limited quarters are highly taxed. We have room for just one more, and there are three prospects hanging in the balance. Our small dormitory is for sleeping only, and all boarding students eat at our table in the cottage. Fifteen now sit in a dining room about 10x11 feet. Folding chairs help solve the problem, but it is indeed a happy family which gathers from many homes over a wide stretch of the Kentucky River. Our student body is nearly triple what it was in the beginning last year, and people are interested just as soon as they know there is a school of this kind at this place. We find our best advertisement is the student who goes home for vacation or visit.

But the best news we have to impart is left till last. Mrs. Kinzie and the writer carried the entire work last year, she teaching a few classes in certain subjects, early morning and early afternoon, then attending to cooking and overseeing girls, etc.; not mentioning the responsibilities which would naturally fall to a pastor's wife, visitation, ministering to the sick (she having had nurse training, and no resident physician). But this year, with the heavier duties, we prayed for help, and the Lord heard. He sent us Miss Thetis Hadden, a product of Riverside, who graduated there, then went to Los Angeles Bible Institute.

We find this sister, one not only amongst people whose ways she thoroughly understands, but a devoted, beautiful Christian character, and one who fits in excellently. Mrs. Kinzie still has a few classes, so that in fact our student body has three teachers, and the work is divided up in such a way that the children who come to us are going to have opportunities for outshining anything possible to dream of in the overcrowded free schools of the county. Parents are rapidly getting their eyes open to these advantages.

Now, while we try to present the regular course of studies in a scholarly manner, we also make a special aim to exalt Jesus Christ and the Word of Truth, by precept and example, in the school room and on the playground. And by his grace we hope that on these foundations, laid in the lives of many little ones of the primer class, tomorrow may see strongly Godly lives heading homes that are not only Brethren but clean and righteous through and through.

Pray for us that we might continually be led of the Spirit in all we do and undertake, that all might be for the glory of our Lord.

FRED V. KINZIE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

PERU, INDIANA CHURCH

This is one of the new churches in Indiana and is still being given aid by the Mission Board. Brother Maus is the pastor here and has done an excellent piece of work. They have erected a magnificent brick building on a well chosen site. Like all mission churches, they have had a struggle in building up their church.

The financial obligations would have made some large congregations hesitate before going forward, however they have met the challenge and made commendable progress and in a few years should be free of debt and have a self-supporting congregation.

Brother Maus and his wife were both Ashland students and that means they gave every aid and encouragement to the endowment. On account of the heavy financial load the church is carrying, with only a few to meet it, I did not press them hard for gifts. The membership did not dodge the services and showed their interest by being present. While the total gift was not large, yet it showed they wanted to have a part in this campaign, WHICH MEANS SO MUCH TO THE FUTURE OF THE COLLEGE AND THE CHURCH. Their total gift was $285.00.

College Corner, Indiana Church

This is a strictly country church, whose membership is made up entirely of farmers and is an exception to the average rural church of today, in that it is growing in numbers. This is largely due to having a live energetic pastor, Brother Clarence Stewart, who has done much for this community.

They have a fine bunch of young people which guarantees a future for the work. Brother Stewart will continue his work here in connection with his pastorate at Mexico. Brother Stewart with me celebrated the 4th of July in this community by making twenty calls. Like all farming communities, I found the people depressed under present conditions, but since the rain and warm weather they should feel better, as it looks like a CORN CROP.

It only takes a small cloud to look like a big storm on the financial horizon, when one is soliciting money for the church. With a small congregation, they showed a good spirit of cooperation and gave to the endowment $339.00.

LAYMENS' CONFERENCE PROGRAM

After trying for some months in vain to get in touch with the other member of the committee, Miss Inboden and I, as president and secretary, took the liberty of planning the Laymen's Conference program ourselves. We noticed in the Evangelist last week that some one else has been working at the same job, though who or why, we are at a loss to know. Now it is rather hard to explain a thing when you do not understand it yourself, so I suppose this mix-up will have to be straightened out after we arrive at Winona Lake. Conference speakers have a remarkable tendency to be absent when their names are called, so perhaps the two programs can be combined without difficulty. We have been working on this program for some time, and it follows as we have it now planned. Some minor changes may be made later.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

I have just returned from my trip to the Coast and a wonderful trip it was. I set out from here with my family the last day of June and reached Long Beach just 14 days later, having spent three days in side trips. I reached California without mishap and time for the conference which was my main objective.

The Conference was held at Long Beach and was well attended and helpful. I spoke six times, using topics which had been selected from a list which I had presented. There were other speakers, of course, besides myself. I also spoke to our people at Whittier where Brother Kimmel is pastor. I found the church active and interested under his able leadership. I also spoke to our two churches in Los Angeles, where Brethren Cover and Broad are the pastors. At both churches I found a good interest with these brethren working hard. After my address at the Second church where Brother Broad is the pastor, four young people came forward and confessed Christ. This was very encouraging. The last night before my start home, I preached in our LaVerne church. There Brother Tay, the pastor, had invited in members of the Church of the Brethren. I found this church loyal and spiritual. I also spoke to a group of ministers at the Los Angeles Bible Institute. Altogether, I was in California 14 days and spoke 11 times. I was glad for the opportunity to present the general theme of Christian Education.

The Brethren of California know how to make one feel at home. I visited Mr. and Mrs. Hendrickson and was royally entertained. However, my home while at the Conference was with Dr. and Mrs. Bauman, and the entire family did so much for my family and myself that I shall feel under lasting obligations to them. Both the Hendrickses and the Baumans took us on many fine trips so that we could see the wonderful country.

We were also entertained by Mrs. Meader, the Kirbys, Mr. and Mrs. McEntire, Dr. and Mrs. Wall, Mr. and Mrs. Nielsen, by Clarence and Hazel Shively, of Los Angeles, Mrs. Ellen and Ruth Lichty, and called at many other homes. It was good to see so many former students whose names I shall not have room to list and also to get acquainted with several prospective students. There will be a very good enrollment of students from the Coast this fall.

All in all, the summer was well spent, but all personal pleasure aside, the real purpose was twofold. First, I wanted to get acquainted with the California people and have us drawn a bit closer together in the work of the College. This I hope was done. Three thousand miles is a good distance over which interest may reach and I hope that after my visit there the College interests may be upon the hearts of the people there. Secondly, I was glad for the opportunity of doing what I could to say a good word about the general theme of Christian education. In every address I tried to present the great message of Christianity, coupled up with right education. I am convinced that there is no good reason why education and Christianity may not be attractively presented to the young and presented in agreement. If this was done at all, I shall be satisfied with my trip.

I found the Summer school here going fine. Professor Mason had charge, and together with the other members of the staff, they had taken good care of the work. I want again to emphasize the fact that the greatest asset here is the teachers. Without the faithful and able men here, Ashland College would be poor indeed. The church may well trust them with the duties of the College.

We are getting ready now for the opening of the work this fall, Tuesday, September 13th. With several changes on the Faculty this will not be an easy task. However, the prospects are bright. Dr. Bell still continues to send in subscriptions and cash and I hope that before the year is over we may see our way clear to make application for entrance into the North Central Association. Several things have happened of late that make the chances good.

I ask your continued interest in the work here.

SCIENCE FOUNDATION CONFERENCE

The first general conference of the recently incorporated Science Foundation will be held at Winona Lake, Indiana, August 26, 27 and 28. Two mass meetings will be held on Sunday, the 28th, at which time the following will be among the noted speakers to be heard: Dr. Leander S. Keyser, of Hanna Divinity School, Springfield, Ohio, and a member of the faculty of the Winona School of Theology and who this season conducted a course in Anthropology and Hamartiology, (two hours daily) during the first semester. Another noted speaker will be Arthur I. Brown, M.D., C.M., F.R.C.S.E., of Vancouver, British Columbia. Prof. E. S. Bollanger of Riverside, California, will report on some recent investigations of hitherto unknown traces of Dinosauria. His research work in extending the work of Doheny Scientific explorations in Arizona.

Scientific men from all parts of the country are expected at this conference.

A cordial welcome will be given all those interested in the Scientific side of Evolution.

Prof. Fred E. Bennett of Chicago, President of the Science Foundation, will preside.

PHILADELPHIA FIRST BRETHREN

During these days when we hear much of the summer slump, our own church is enjoying a marked interest and fine attendance at all the services.

We want especially to mention our splendid Sunday school. Our attendance is far above what it has been, in former hot weather periods, and the interest keen. We are blessed with a wonderful corps of teachers who are most faithful and consecrated to their tasks, and take a heart interest in their pupils.

We have had again, a Daily Vacation Bible school during the month of July, which was superintended by our pastor. The teachers were our own talented young women who gave their time gratis, some of them at great sacrifice. Young housewives came a distance each day to serve in this capacity and had to return to finish household duties in the heat of the day. We surely appreciate their unselfish service!

On Wednesday evening, July 27th, this Bible school rendered a splendid program of song and Bible drill, showing some of the work accomplished during the month. Those who heard these children so wonderfully recite their Bible themes, surely saw both the need and the success of a Vacation Bible school. Our school does not give much attention to hand work and such like, but is primarily a real Bible training, arranged by our own pastor. The attendance was not so large as former years but more regular and very good as compared with other schools in the vicinity. Then too, about one-half of our children came from some distance, having to ride each day, as our congregation has moved away from the church building.

Our Y. P. S. of C. E. deserves worthy mention, too, for their continued interest and activity in Christian service. They refuse to do as most organizations, disband for the summer, you'll find them each Sunday evening before the preaching service, holding forth in the C. E. room. They also conduct a meeting at a rescue mission hall, once a month, all year through, have done this for many years and have been the means of saving many souls from degradation to the glorious light of the Gospel of Christ.

We are still winning them one by one, at our regular preaching services and since our last report to the Evangelist have received fifteen into the church by baptism.

The foreign missionary Easter report proves that we still continue to practice the grace of giving and stand second in the offering of that day. We rejoice in this large gift because our liberality is not the result of a few large offerings of monied persons, (we have no wealthy people) but our offering is made up of the sacrificial giving of the loving hearts of the majority of our people who are not rich in this world's goods, but rich in faith.

So God lives and moves in the Philadelphia church, blessing us in all our organizations and activities for which we thank him, and go forward.

MRS. H. RAUDENBUSH, Church Correspondent.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

The Brethren work at Harrah continues to go forward. During the last week in April a number of the members met at the home of Brother and Sister Kennedy to arrange to hold a Love-feast and communion service. The idea of organizing a separate church at Harrah was discussed at this meeting. No definite action relative to the organization was taken further than the appointment of a committee of five to take the matter under advisement and report later. The members of the committee are W. C. Kennedy, chairman; E. B. Gould, vice-chairman; Will Stover, Chas. Faw, and S. C. Culver. This committee met later at the home of Brother Faw and the committee was unanimous that the time had arrived for the organization of a Brethren church at Harrah. It was decided to call the membership together on the following Wednesday evening to vote on the matter. Practically every family was represented and the vote for organization was unanimous. Some opposition to the idea of organizing developed on the part of some who are in charge of the building which has been used by our people. That no mistake might be made, it was decided to ask the entire membership in the Harrah community to meet on Sunday, July 17, which was the day for Brother Beal to preach, for a basket dinner at the home of Brother and Sister Will Stover. After prayerfully and carefully considering the matter from every angle it was unanimously voted to proceed with the organization. The following officers were elected: W. C. Kennedy, Moderator; Will Stover, Vice-Moderator; Mrs. Will Stover, Secretary; E. B. Gould, Treasurer. A finance committee was appointed consisting of the officers already mentioned with the addition of Chas. Faw and S. C. Culver. Will Stover and E. B. Gould were elected deacons and Mrs. Will Stover and Mrs. E. B. Gould were elected deaconesses. Brother Beal preached in the evening to a good sized crowd in the union building in Harrah.

On Sunday, July 24, a number of the Harrah people attended Sunday school and preaching service at Sunnyside. After the morning service Mrs. Schanz was baptized. Following baptism, Mrs. Schanz and four members of the Charles West family who had been baptized some time previous were confirmed and received into the Brethren church.

The Union Sunday school is keeping up well in attendance. The attendance is around fifty more than last year.

The first love-feast and communion were held the evening of May 6. Forty-three people were at the tables and a few interested people were present to witness the service.

We are looking forward to a real work for the Brethren church in Harrah in the near future. Pray for us that we may know his will and that we may always be ready to follow his leading.

HOUSES AND HOMES

By Wightman F. Melton, Ph.D.

Is a parsonage a house or a home? Edgar Guest says it takes a heap o' livin' in a house to make it home. If the circuit rider is moved every year, does he go from house to house or from home to home? Does the removal of the time limit tend to make the parsonage more home than house?

Usually the structure that houses the minister and his family is rather modest and inexpensive. How many hundred-thousand-dollar parsonages have you seen? No preacher pines for an earthly palace, and no minister moans for a mundane mansion anyway. Which is to be preferred for the purposes of living and loving, a house that costs a million or a home that costs a thousand?

Last winter in Florida a friend was showing me the sights of his city. Stopping his car at a vine-embowered gateway and nodding toward a long avenue of Australian oaks, he remarked: "That is a $2,000,000 residence!" An artistic sign on the massive gate said, "Private. Keep Out."

While I was gazing uncovetously toward the mansions in the midst of royal palms it occurred to me that my friend had spoken of the place as a "residence." He didn't even call it a house, much less a home. And I found myself wondering if any middle-aged man and his immediate family can enjoy a house $2,000,000 worth. I was not trying to convince myself that it can't be done; I was simply asking myself the question, Can it be done? And then I recalled a circuit rider and his little family enjoying a $300 shack on the old Cropwell Mission, North Alabama, about a million dollars' worth one winter.

We have all heard of haunted houses. "All houses where men have lived and died are haunted houses." But who has ever heard of a haunted home? And who has ever so much as thought of a haunted parsonage?

Houses are built to sell or rent. Homes are built to live in, not to die in. "Superannuate homes!" How much sweeter that sounds than superannuate house or superannuate residence or even superannuate parsonage. Superannuate homes are built to live in, not to die in. They are built to grow old in, places where twin hearts may dream the remainder of the evening out. The superannuate home is what every home should be—a sort of ante-room to heaven.

Bless the dear women and girls of the Methodist church! They are making the preacher's house look like home and feel like home. There was a time when it made the children of a minister sad to hear other children sing "Home, Sweet Home." They—the minister's children—hadn't the heart to try to join in the song. All they could have sung would have been "Rented House, Rented House." "Parsonage, Sweet Parsonage," wouldn't have been much better.

It used to be the fashion to call the preacher "parson." In those days it might have been all right to refer to his official residence as a "parsonage," especially if he was a bachelor. "Rectory," "pastorium," and "parsonage" all sound less like home than "manse," even to un-Scottish Methodist ears.

O, well, whether the house be built of clapboards or marble, love, and contentment can make it home.—Christian Advocate.

WHAT THE CHILDREN ARE LEARNING

The early work of Near East Relief was the saving of life; today the organization is building the life of the new Near East that is rising on a basis of modern ideals. All the children in Near East Relief care are taught trades or crafts or are instructed in modern methods of agriculture so that when they go out into the world at the age of sixteen they will be able to maintain themselves. A great effort is made to give instruction in occupations that are in demand. For example, a great deal of construction work is going on in Greece because of the 20% increase in population in the country after the Smyrna disaster. Near East Relief boys are being taught the building trades. There is a constant demand for rugs throughout Syria because of their time-honored uses in the homes of nationals and their place on the list of exports. Girls at Ghazir, Syria, are skilled rug makers. Before the war 90% of the population in Armenia was on the land. Near East Relief, cooperating with the Armenian government, is teaching the orphans the duties of farmers and farmers' wives, and this includes the use of farm machinery hitherto unknown in that part of the world, selection of seed, analysis of soils, care of domestic animals, dairying, all most up-to-date. Boys at Nazareth in Palestine and at Antilyas in Syria are capital cabinet makers. These young people, carefully trained, will be the economic leaders of the growing generation. The contributions made on Golden Rule Sunday, December fourth, will help bring this condition to pass.

AUTO SUGGESTIONS

Here is an interesting experiment for you to make. Cut a circle four inches in diameter or draw it with a heavy black line on a sheet of plain paper. Fold the circle in half and again fold it. Spread it out and mark the creases with strong black lines that cross the circle. Put A at the top, B at the left side, C at the lower end of the line marked A at the top and D opposite B. Get a piece of string, say about twelve inches long—a little more or less does not matter. To one end fasten a button or small weight. Tie the other end tightly to one of mother's knitting needles, a pen holder, or something of that kind. Now hold the button over the cross in the middle of the circle, just as if you were fishing. Don't let the button touch the paper. Keep your elbow resting close to your side, and try to hold the rod quite still. Now look from A to C and back, just letting your eyes follow the line repeatedly. Presently the button will begin to swing from A to C. Without stopping it, begin to look from B to D, and the button will presently change its direction, and swing from B to D. Now look from A to B, C, D, and the button will begin to swing in a circle. The tighter you hold the rod the better the button will swing. And all you have done is to let your eyes travel along all the lines and back, or round the circle. Try it. It's wonderful! If anybody asks you how it is done, say, "Auto suggestion," for this is out of "The Practice of Auto-suggestion."—Selected.

And this voice which came from heaven we heard when we were with him on the holy Mount.—Peter.

THE SUNDAY AUTOMOBILE

An old man said: "I don't like the Sunday automobile. It hasn't got sense enough to turn in when it comes to the church."

"In my boyhood days, the old family horse seemed to know Sunday as surely as the preacher did."

"It would have taken some argument and some larruping to get Dobbin past the hitching-rack at the meeting house. He was a pretty good monitor for the young folks."

"But today the automobile goes humming along—just warming up about the time it nears the church; and it seems such a pity to stop and let her cool down."

"It's getting too easy to slip past religion."

"And one reason is that the Sunday automobile hasn't got horse sense."—Sel.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

PICNIC TIME

It's June ag'n in my soul I feel the fillin' joy
That's sure to come this time o' year to every little boy;
For, every June, the Sunday schools at picnics may be seen,
Where "fields beyond the swellin' floods stand dressed in living' green;"
Where little girls are skeered to death with spiders, bugs and ants,
An' little boys get grass-stains on their go-to-meetin' pants.
It's June ag'n, an' with it all what happiness is mine—
There's goin' to be a picnic, an' I'm goin' to jine!

One year I jined the Baptists, an' goodness! how it rained!
(But grampa say that that's the way "baptizo" is explained.)
And once I jined the 'piscopils an' had a heap o' fun—
But the boss of all the picnics was the Presbyterium!
They had so many puddins', sallids, sandwidges, an' pies,
That a feller with his stummick was as hungry as his eyes!
Oh, yes, the eatin' Presbyteriums give yer is so fine
That when THEY have a picnic, you bet I'm goin' to jine!

But at this time the Methodists have special claims on me,
For they're goin' to give a picnic on the 21st, D. V.;
Why should a liberal Universalis like me object
To share the joys of fellowship with every friendly sect?
However het'rodox their atricles of faith elsewise may be,
Their doctrine of fried chick'n is a savin' grace to me!
So on the 21st of June, the weather bein' fine, They're goin' to give a picnic, and I'm goin' to jine!
—Eugene Field.

A CORRECTION ON "PICNIC TIME"

In Eugene Fields' little rippling rhyme
He says that June is the picnic time,

But any month is to me sublime,
Just so it's good old summer time.

I'm not so fussy about the day,
The church's name, nor the games they play,
But I'd like to see a fine array
Of bulging baskets on picnic day.

I'm anxious to have a chicken fry,
And I want a lot of cake and pie,
And everything for which boys sigh,
And a seat where none will pass me by.

THE TALE OF THE TIGER

Once upon a time there was a boy who had a yellow striped toy tiger, with green glass eyes, given him for his birthday. It could growl loudly if the boy pulled its head down.

The morning of his birthday the boy built a large, strong cage of blocks for his toy tiger; and then he went out in his yard to play.

His friend came up the street just then, and stopped at the boy's gate. The boy leaned over the yard gate, and, looking back in a make-believe scared way toward his front door, said in a whisper: "I have a tiger in my house. A tiger could eat you up!"

"Dear me!" said his friend, "I have to go right home." And with that his friend hurried away.

"Ha, ha!" the boy chuckled to himself, "that was a good joke." Then he forgot all about it.

But the tale of the tiger went on. The boy's friend ran to tell the cook as soon as he got home. "A boy up the street has a tiger that could eat us up!"

"Dear me!" said the cook, almost dropping her pan of gingerbread. Then she ran to the back door and told the iceman: "There's a tiger up the street and it will eat us up if something isn't done to stop it."

"Dear me!" said the iceman, and he rattled his tongs to call a policeman: "Here's work for you, up the street there are tigers in the yard and they are likely to eat up the whole town."

"Dear me!" said the policeman, starting toward the station house, "that's a great danger to this town. Those tigers must have got loose on their way to the zoo, but we haven't any ropes or cages in the police department."

So he telephoned to the fire chief: "Up the street there are tigers in a yard, and they will soon be eating up the whole town!"

"Dear me!" the fire chief answered. "I'll start right away with the hose, the hook and ladder and plenty of rope. You had better come, too."

Near dinner time the boy took a handful of grass in to feed the toy tiger in his cage. Then he made the tiger growl loudly. The windows were open so the sound of the tiger's growl went away down the street.

"That's the tiger! This way; hurry!" the crowd shouted. Up the street galloped the fire department. On came the policeman with clubs. Back of them came the cook with the rolling pin, and the boy's friend. When they found that there was no real tiger eating people up, but only a toy tiger they were very much put out about the unnecessary trouble. The boy was ashamed that he stayed in the house the rest of the day and the tiger looked at him with his green glass eyes. They had a wild look as if the tiger were telling the boy that any tale even when true, may change as it travels.—Carolyn Sherwin Bailey, The Herald and Presbyter.

A Program of Evangelism

One of the causes for encouragement in general church work is the increased and more intelligent interest taken in evangelism. This is to be noticed in practically all denominational programs and emphases, as well as interdenominational. Representatives in the field of evangelism of various church bodies recently met with the Commission on Evangelism and Life Service, of which Dr. Charles L. Goodell is chairman, at Northfield, Massachusetts, to study the task of evangelism with the view of helping one another with the best tried methods, stirring up greater zeal for the work and outlining a program calculated to call forth and enlist the church's utmost of resources in the effort. This is indicative of the church's attitude wherever its spiritual leadership is gathered together either in denominational or union conferences and conventions, and it is this increased disposition to study the task and the resultant increased intelligence concerning it that gives us our greatest encouragement and hope for the future.

One feature of this more intelligent approach to the problem of evangelism is the greater emphasis being placed on the personal touch and the effort to utilize the vast army of hitherto unused laymen. There has been, and yet is to a considerable extent, a decided swing away from the mass or group evangelism, and most naturally in such a swing some have gone quite to the opposite extreme and declared the sermon unessential, if not a hindrance. There is already evidence that this extreme view is not being favorably received and leaders who once boldly declared they were through with preaching evangelism, are returning to a recognition of the worth of the sermon along with personal work. Preaching is too fundamental to the advancement of the Kingdom for it ever to drop out of popular use as an instrument in evangelism. It has been abused in various ways, and it is against those abuses that this reaction really protests. The evangelistic sermon has oftentimes been too sensational to produce abiding results, it has at times been too superficial, its appeal has been too strongly to the emotions, its dependence too much on mass psychology, and it has been connected up with too expensive machinery and the sermon itself has been too highly commercialized by many. No one has recognized this more truly than the pastor and this reaction has been largely fostered by him and is traceable to no small extent to such abuses. But in reality the sermon is not being discarded so much as is the old type of professional evangelist. Pastors are more largely doing their own preaching, or securing outside preachers of a type who have the pastor's point of view, who instruct as well as appeal to the emotions, who build their programs for permanent results and not mere numbers in a campaign, and who do not lend encouragement to the tendency to commercialize evangelism. But the necessity of preaching evangelism is still very widely recognized and will continue to be so.

But along with the sermon it has been noted that the personal touch is necessary if the greatest and most permanent success is to be achieved. And this is both wise and biblical. It is but reverting to the true New Testament evangelism. It is returning to the example of our Lord who was the greatest personal soul winner as well as the peer of preachers. This emphasis naturally throws the church back to a study of the life and methods of our Lord's ministry, that it may be the more efficient in its ministry, and the more effectually accomplish the commission with which it has been charged. And it is especially fitting that at this particular period, this time when we are entering upon the three years which correspond to the three years of our Lord's public ministry approximately nineteen centuries ago, we should seek to focus in an intensive manner the attention of the great mass of the church's membership upon the life of our Lord Jesus Christ. It is a most favorable opportunity to call upon all Christian people everywhere "to give themselves with renewed consecration to the study of his life and with wholehearted determination to bring the knowledge of our Lord and his saving grace to multitudes that know him not, and to learn how his way of life may become operative in all the areas of human relationships in our modern world."

These specialists in evangelism who have broadcasted the results of their conference are calling the attention of every denomination and religious agency to the importance of pressing evangelism more continually and with the fuller enlistment of their possible resources. They urge that particularly during the months of September to May very special efforts be put forth to turn the mind of the church in devotional and evangelistic lines, and that efforts may be most wisely and effectively directed, they suggest a program that works toward a climax at the Easter season. While the program is commended to "our various churches throughout the land and to our missionaries at home and abroad for such use as each body and each worker may deem best," it is made clear that there is no desire that it shall even appear to be in any sense obligatory to any denominational body of local church; it is offered merely as a suggestion. And it appeals to us to have such possibilities as to merit our careful study, and we send it forth to our readers with the earnest hope and prayer that it will furnish an inspiration to greater zeal in evangelism and that its suggestions will prove helpful to pastors and other church leaders in forming such programs as will enable them to be of the greatest service possible in carrying forward this—the common task of the church. And such as can outline no better program than this, we suggest that they adopt it for their own.

The Program

We believe the work of the church year should be planned well in advance and should have in it two major movements.

(a) A fall program with a well planned church rally, and a program of activities continuing through the fall months with special emphasis on church attendance, care of absentees, church publicity, and membership enlistment.

(b) A pre-Easter or Lenten program beginning early in the new year and including:

1. A careful cultivation of the devotional life of the people.
2. A definite program of religious instruction by the pastor for the young.
3. The enlistment and training of a body of witnesses for Christ to do personal work in the ingathering of new members.

(a) The Fall Program

1. That the first Sunday of October be selected for Church Rally Sunday with emphasis upon family church attendance. This Rally to be preceded by a thoroughgoing visitation of the parish that newcomers may be given personal invitation and that all the people may be reminded of the program of the church, become acquainted with its personnel, and be given a new understanding of their responsibility for the work and the worship of the church.

2. That this occasion be utilized to give widest publicity to the church and to the Christian program, at home and abroad, in the daily press and through other mediums throughout the community.

3. That following the rally the church give itself to a thorough cultivation of all indifferent members, to looking after absentees, and in every way instructing the people as to the duty and value of regular church attendance.

4. That this period of work shall fruit in an autumn ingathering of new members at the fall communion service or at some other suitable season.

(c) The Pre-Easter or Lenten Program

1. Careful cultivation of the devotional life of the people. We recommend

- (a) That all people everywhere should read during January, the Gospel of Matthew.
- (b) That during the first 21 days of February the Gospel of John shall be read.
- (c) That from February 22 to Easter day the Fellowship of Prayer be used.
- (d) That devotional literature and instruction in worship be provided for the people and careful plans made that worship and devotion be everywhere encouraged.
- (e) That the people be urged to follow the life of Christ day by day from Palm Sunday to Easter, using one of the many available editions of the Gospel story or the manual prepared by the literature committee of the Federal Council's Commission.
- (f) That emphasis shall be placed on the value of individual and family devotions and groups and neighborhood prayer meetings shall be organized.

2. We urge pastors to consider their peculiar responsibility for the religious training of their young people and commend most heartily the catechetical classes and the pastor's training class as used in many of our churches.

3. We commend to pastors the growing custom in many churches of enlisting and training a group of consecrated laymen and laywomen as witnesses for Christ and we urge that those who enlist for this high service be given most careful preparation and guidance that their service may be truly fruitful to themselves and to the cause of Christ.

We are greatly encouraged by the widespread use of the program of Visitation Evangelism, "week-end" Evangelism, and programs of "united witnessing," and like forms of church and community movements, with the use of vocational evangelists where desired, and we urge all our churches to cooperate as far as possible with other churches of the community in such forms of evangelism. And further we request the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Men's Church League, and like organizations to avail themselves of the invitations they may receive from the churches to help in this great work.

4. We commend the growing custom of emphasizing the importance of a suitable reception of new members at the Easter season, or on Pentecost Sunday or other suitable occasion, that all the church may come to a better understanding of the meaning and value of church membership and that new members may realize the importance and sacredness of public confession of saving faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother R. Paul Miller, pastor of the First church of Philadelphia, which is to entertain the fall conference of the Pennsylvania district, announces that a strong program has been arranged and that the local church is making plans to give the delegates royal entertainment and an interesting time while in their city.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble gives us another report of the work and workers connected with our African mission. A school has been opened at Bassai and the difficulty was to determine who should be granted the privilege out of all those who sought the school work; many had to be denied. The work on the buildings is going forward nicely. There is much demand for medical work and the nurses are kept busy. Miss Emmert is also busy with her school.

Brother I. D. Bowman tells us of having baptized eleven persons on a recent trip to Delaware, where he thinks the prospects are bright for the Brethren faith. A week's services resulted in extending the knowledge of Brethren principles and practices. He points out the need of reorganization and two church buildings among these people. Brother Bowman is now engaged in evangelistic work at Gatewood, West Virginia, for his fifth campaign at that place.

Dr. C. F. Yoder, head of our South American missions writes an encouraging letter concerning the progress of the work at Rio Cuarto, where the Sunday school attendance ranges from 120 to 150. Two Christian Endeavor societies are maintained with good interest and the prayer meeting attendance of thirty to forty speaks well for the church's spirituality. At the recent Bible study and workers' conference three of the native preachers were ordained to the ministry.

Our good correspondent from Warsaw, Indiana, writes that very commendable growth has been experienced by that church since Brother C. C. Grisso has had charge of the work. They have been compelled to lose his services, however, as he has gone to take charge of the church at Sunnyside, Washington. We rejoice with the Warsaw people in the good work that has been done and feel sure that Brother Grisso's congenial personality and enthusiastic work will be missed there. They are warranted however in looking forward with confidence to the leadership of Brother E. M. Riddle, who has done such a splendid piece of work at Bryan, Ohio.

An encouraging report comes from Brother E. F. Byers, pastor of the church at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Twenty-one members have been added to the church since last report. The Sunday school has increased ten per cent in average attendance this year, the W. M. S. is a 100 per cent plus society, and the Christian Endeavorers are carrying off county banners. Good progress is being made in paying for their new church site and parsonage, and they are hoping soon to complete the task and get started on their new church building project.

We have a report of the Southern California district conference, which was recently held in Long Beach, and it is pronounced a splendid success. Appreciation is expressed for the contribution which President E. E. Jacobs of Ashland College made by his interesting and informing addresses. They are used to good conferences and strong addresses in that district, and it speaks well for this one to have it rated so highly. Brother A. B. Cover, who recently moved into the district as pastor of the First church of Los Angeles, was elected as directing head of the conference.

Let us not whine about the things that seem to be against us, and fret and mislead ourselves with the thought that we have no chance. It all depends on how we take things. The things that seem to be against us may be our salvation; they may result in that discipline and strength of character that makes for success both in time and in eternity. While the man who seems to be having all the good things of life, the man we compare our lot with, the one we envy, may be finding his favorable circumstances a hindrance and a curse. And if not, it might be so if we were in his place. Let us thank God for our lot and make the best of it.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign secretary has a good report of his canvass of the Loree, Indiana, church where Brother C. A. Stewart has been the successful pastor for seven years. And doubtless the loyalty of this congregation is in no small way due to the fine loyalty of its pastor. It is good to hear such testimonies as Brother Bell gives concerning the splendid cooperation of the pastors in his work. With such a loyal bunch of preachers the future of our general church interests, and of the college in particular, is assured. The Loree church is one of the refreshing exceptions among the country churches in that it continues to maintain a live interest and commendable growth instead of being on the decline as so many country churches are. The gift of these people was $1,084, which brings the total of the campaign up to $118,322.42.

Dr. J. A. Garber, who for twelve years has occupied the chair of Religious Education in Ashland Seminary, has resigned to accept a similar position in Lane Theological Seminary at Cincinnati, which is associated with the University of Cincinnati. The brotherhood, Ashland College and Ashland community will regret to lose the service of so valuable a man. He has for years occupied a large place in the activities of the brotherhood, especially in the Sunday School Association and the Christian Endeavor Union, where, it is not too much to say, his wisdom and leadership have been the dominating factors in the splendid growth and service of these institutions for a decade or more. His place in Ashland College will be hard to fill and as it also will in the life of the city and county of Ashland, where he has been directing the religious education activities and leading them forward, much to the appreciation of churches of the community. But Prof. Garber feels that a field of larger and pioneer service has opened up to him at Lane Seminary, which plans to launch out upon a larger service in the religious leadership training of churches of that city. And the direction of this new move as well as the religious education courses of the seminary students in the work to which Brother Garber is called.

GENERAL ARTICLES

How About Evangelism?

By Charles A. Bame, D.D.

It is but a trite thing to say that we are passing through a strange experience as to Evangelism. From the very prominent place it held in the program of the church but a few years ago, to the place where many of our churches do not think of trying to have a revival at all, it is speeding about as fast as we are in many other things irreligious. How short is the time since no Brethren church would have thought of omitting a revival for a year, to now, when so many caught in the maelstrom of modern movements, think the time of revivals is past!

The reason is not far to seek. From the plan of an All-preaching revival to the plan of a No-preaching revival is a long step, but that is exactly what has happened in the short space of a few years. To my way of thinking, two things have been mainly responsible: the money-getting spirit and the discovery by some evangelists of the great value of the personal method. The first of these of course, was and still is, reprehensible. Money-getting is not the spirit of the gospel; and when pastors and leading laymen found that ordinary men with small equipment for the task they assayed were actually getting as much money, sometimes for a few weeks of service—which many times was poor service, as a pastor got for a whole year of hard painstaking labor, it was but to be expected that there would be reaction, as there ought to have been. But there is a consideration even to that: the evangelist has but a part of the year to work. Our big churches will not try to conduct a revival in the summer and the small ones do, perhaps mainly, because it gives them the only chance they have to get anyone who can put over a worth-while revival. So, there are two sides to even the money question in evangelism; the evangelist is a part-time worker.

As to the second observation, it is the right thing and the good thing to discover that personal evangelism is a necessary part of the whole program of evangelism. But to get "dippy" over it, or to make it to appear that there is nothing more to evangelism than that, is to miss the mark as widely as the money-getting preaching evangelist misses it.

There are few men (very few, let us hope) in our country who are now making about as much money out of the no-preaching revival as most of the other evangelists were making out of the tabernacle type. And to become the victim of that false reasoning that either one of the methods is complete in itself or ever can be, is to be deceived into the greatest of all blunders on this subject. The church or pastor that believes that the revival can be brought about without the power of the Word, is as far from Bible truth as one can be. It is the word that cleanses; the word that is "quick and powerful"; the word, backed by the witness of the Spirit, that convicts and brings confession. Through the Ohio Pastor's Council, I have been permitted to listen in on the advice of leading men of many denominations and have had their reaction to the work of what they term, "professional evangelists," and my heart is made heavy for the future of our country when I hear what they say, and know what they are trying to do without the gospel. But when I discover that so many of our churches are not promoting evangelism at all because we do not have the no-preaching type and because it seems to be "in the air" that Evangelism is about out of date. I am the more pained.

The Brethren church has been an evangelistic church from its beginning. It has been the method of recruiting new members; it can not hope greatly to recruit, until or unless it keeps at the Master's method, which was both to have conversations (personal evangelism) and to have preaching of

Necessity of Evangelism

The history of the New Testament Church amply warrants the conclusion that evangelism is the primary duty of every Christian community, and that the spiritual vigor of every congregation of Christians, and of every individual element therein, depends on the fidelity with which this task is pursued. If the New Testament presents the norm of a living church, we may reckon it as an established principle that the life and power of a church depend on its evangelism, i. e., on its loyal adherence to the message, and its unwearied proclamation of it. . . . The Gospel is not a philosophy; it is Good News. The church is not an academy; it is the instrument of evangelism. For the sake of the world, whose need has never varied; for the honor of the Redeemer, whose name is above every name, either of philosopher or of statesman; for the continuance and growth of the church as the household of faith and the seed plot of righteous living; for the strength of our own purpose and the reality of our own communion with God, we are summoned to the task which lies at the heart of privilege.—Dr. T. B. Kilpatrick, in "New Testament Evangelism."

the word, (preaching evangelism).

Remember that the Master said, "as ye go, preach." Remember that it was a great doctrinal sermon that brought the three thousand on the day of Pentecost. Remember that the builder of the early churches among the heathen did it by preaching. It was he who said, "Preach the Word; be instant in season and out of season."

I hope not to be censorious when I say that it behooves the Brethren churches above all, to cling to the preaching-revival. I still cherish the hope that we still use and accept the Bible as authority. Many preachers of other denominations do not. They have lost faith in the power of the Word of God and no wonder they accept a card-signing, soft, easy way of getting members for their church. If they need believe but little of the gospel message and live still less of it, why preach it? Why hold up a standard we do not try to put into life and preach a gospel in which we do not believe? Cutting out of the gospel all save confession, making the soul of it but an empty shell, it is easy to see that the way to recruit for such pastors and official boards, is to make it as easy as signing a card in an office and paying the church "dues", as the "collection for the saints" is often called by such "converts."

In one of the bishoprics of one of the popular churches, during recent years, the bishop set as the goal of new members for the year, a certain number of thousands. Coaching his pastors, he, with a grave voice and a great sweep of the arm, said, "With the old-time preaching revival, I am done." And then, as delighted with his new method of "conversational evangelism", as a boy with a new bunch of marbles, he instructed them how to enter the office and home and win them personally. Later, one of the pastors told me: "Well, we made the goal, but we got that many thousands of unconverted people in our churches." And nothing more ails our churches than the mass of unconverted people on our membership rolls who vote out gospel preachers who believe in the gospel message and method.

One more thing: our members need the revival. It is a renewal of their own spirits and a confirmation of old-time experiences that come only in the revival that make it a wonderful means of grace to us all. I have often said, that to baptize others always seemed to bring a new baptismal experience to me and we need to again and again observe the Communion. Preachers need to rehearse and study over, sermons that they have preached before and perhaps, many times; and who would say that a repetition of our arguments to convince others does not confirm us in our beliefs and strengthen for the contest we must make to win others to our Master's way of living? In other words, we all need to be revived and renewed. Indeed, if our churches could always carry out to the full, the spirit of the early church of "adding to the church daily such as were being saved," and would always be separated from the world and full of the spirit, we would not need so much, the revival; but because exactly the reverse was and is true, we can never dispense with it, sermon and all, till the Lord comes and changes it all by the entire defeat of the devil and his cohorts.

Let Brethren churches discover the best method of evangelism which will be both personal and preaching; let none of us plan a year for the Lord without a great conquest of assault on the works of the evil one and let our evangelists plan their work to meet the entire program of the Master. We can not, dare not, try to do without it; we must not be deceived by half-way methods and unscriptural schemes to get members who do not know Christ nor try to live his gospel nor know of his way of life. We must keep evangelism of preaching and personal work or surrender our claim of being a Whole-Gospel church.

Tom Watson's Description of a Sam Jones Revival

By H. H. Smith

In 1896, just after the failure of his candidacy for the Vice-Presidency, Thomas E. Watson wrote a very spicy account of his first attendance at a meeting conducted by Sam Jones. After reading it, it will be easy to agree with an editor of a religious paper who wrote just after Sam Jones' death: "No man had such sharp wit, such force of apt illustration, such terrible denunciatory powers as the Rev. Sam Jones."

Mr. Watson wrote:

"We did not yawn the day we went to hear Sam Jones.

"There he was, clad in a little black jump-tail coat, and looking as much like the regulation preacher as we look like the Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

"He was not in the pulpit. He was right next to the crowd, standing within the railing, and almost in touch of the victims.

"His head was down, as if he was holding on to his chain of thought by the teeth, but his right hand was going energetically up and down, with all the grace of a pump-handle.

"And, Lord! how he did hammer the brethren. How he did peel the amen corner. How he did smash their solemn self-conceit, their profound self-satisfaction, their peaceful copartnership with the Almighty, their placid conviction that they were the trustees of the New Jerusalem!

"We sinners looked on, listened, grinned. It was all we could do to keep from saying, 'Sick 'em, Sam!'

"We knew some of those men. We sinners knew their failings. We wondered where Jones had learned it all. We rejoiced exceedingly, and the amen-corner brethren sweated in their great agony.

"After a while, with solemn, irresistible force, Jones called on these brethren to rise in public, confess their shortcomings, and kneel for divine grace.

"And they knelt. With groans and sobs and tears these old bell-wethers of the flock fell on their knees and cried aloud in their distress.

"And the little man in the short-tail coat was master of the situation.

"Then what?

"He turned his guns upon us sinners and he enflamed us. He raked us fore and aft. He gave us grape and canister and all the rest. He abused us and ridiculed us; he stormed at us and laughed at us; he called up flopped-eared hounds, beer-kegs and whisky-soaks. He plainly said that we were all hypocrites and liars and he intimated, somewhat broadly, that most of us would steal.

"Oh, we had a time of it, I assure you. For six weeks the farms and the stores were neglected, and Jones, Jones, JONES was the whole thing.

When Sam Jones died, just ten years after this article was written, Mr. Watson paid the great evangelist the following tribute:

"Against vice in all its forms he brought every weapon known to the Armory of Right, and he used them, with a force and skill and tireless energy which made him the most powerful evangelist of Christ that recent history has known.

"Brilliant, witty, wise, eloquent, profound in his knowledge of the human heart, no man ever faced an audience who could so easily master it.

"From laughter to tears, from indifference to enthusiasm, from levity to intense emotion, he could lead the multitude at his will. Under his magnetism and will-power the brazen libertine blushed for shame, the hardened criminal trembled in fear, smug respectability saw its shortcomings, sham Christians forgot to be self-complacent, social hypocrites fell upon their knees, and the miser opened his purse."

Military Training in Schools and Colleges of the United States

The Facts and an Interpretation

By Winthrop D. Lane

(NOTE—In answer to a demand for some information on military training in schools and colleges we are re-publishing herewith in two installments a pamphlet of exceptional merit and timeliness. The churches, especially the pacifist group of which the Brethren church is one, are vitally affected by the war propaganda that goes out from the War Department, and there is need of information concerning it. The "Christian Monitor," Mennonite publication, says editorially in introducing this article to its readers, "It is our business as a church to testify against evils, as well as our business to witness to the truth. The first is negative, the second is positive. The ministry of both is our Christian duty . . . The day seems to loom in sight, when this liberty loving nation may go the way of militaristic Europe. This is just another of the downgrade signs seen in the American life." We cannot but look upon the militarizing influences being spread abroad in the land with grave concern, and it behooves the church to stand out against the subtle advances of this evil with unflinching courage and to raise its warning voice with truly prophetic wisdom and faithfulness.—Editor.)

Mr. Lane's account of the extent of military training in the United States will, we think, come as a surprise to many Americans. His conclusions are so well founded on facts that they do not need recommendation from anyone. They carry their own weight to the thoughtful reader.

But facts like these call for some action. Even those who, having read this pamphlet, still believe in the Reserve Officers' Training Corps (R. O. T. C.), will surely want to be on their guard against its becoming a means of militarizing America. It would be a tragedy if at the very moment when such ancient enemies as France and Germany are outlawing war between each other, the military spirit should assert itself in the United States.

Our schools ought to be the best defense against this. There, certainly, we should have a positive education for peace. Such education is wholly inconsistent (1) with military training in the high schools and (2) with compulsory military training in the colleges.

At the very least, military training should be rigidly excluded from the high schools. It does not provide the best form of physical training, it does not teach constructive citizenship; if successful it tends to impart aggressive, even jingoistic, notions by its effect upon immature minds at their formative period. When such training is made compulsory in high schools it is an indirect approach to that universal military training and service which in peace time public opinion in America has overwhelmingly rejected.

The same argument applies to compulsory military training in the colleges when imposed by college faculties. A country which has refused to accept compulsory training and service for all its citizens cannot consistently permit young men ambitious for an education to be forced into accepting military training as part of the price for that education.

So much ought to be clear to every man who has respect for the spirit of American institutions and hope for American leadership in world peace. The removal of military training from high schools, and of its compulsory features from the colleges, is a minimum program for dealing with the R. O. T. C. But a further conclusion is forced upon us. We are convinced that it is alien to the best interests of our universities and to the highest ideals of learning that the War Department should be given so much power, and military training so much place as it now has, in our college world. The atmosphere of military training is not the atmosphere for the finest, the most thoughtful work along any line requiring independent thinking. Higher education ought to exist for the encouragement of independent thinking. Science, art, and culture are not and cannot be purely national. All learning is witness to the truth that "above all nations is humanity." Colleges and universities, therefore, are peculiarly inappropriate fields for military training and for the intrusive presence of a military bureaucracy. We Americans would have said this of any country in the world. There is no virtue of our own which makes us immune to a militarism which has played so fatal a role in Europe.

In recommending this pamphlet, therefore, we urge not merely thoughtful consideration of its statements but action to secure to American youth such educational influences as will make unequivocally for peace.

The Surprising Thing that Is Happening

Military training confronts the young men of the United States today on a scale that it has never before reached. Under the encouragement of the War Department, it is being rapidly extended and is becoming a prominent part of the education offered by civilian schools and colleges. Most people do not know how far this has gone. A large number of educational institutions that had no military training five years ago have it today. In many of these it is compulsory. That is, all young men are required to take it.

Educational institutions in which it now exists are some of the best known schools in the land, colleges famous on the football field and in one form or another of academic achievement. The list is not by any means confined to land grant colleges, which have long had a greater or less measure of military science and neither does it stop with colleges. It includes high schools where boys of fourteen years and over, many of whom are still in knee pants, parade in uniform, take lessons in rifle marksmanship and learn the ways of military duty, scouting and patrolling.

A War Department Drive

The training hereinafter described is not the result of chance or of the action of local or public officials. It is not the mere contagion of a purpose temporarily in the minds of many people. It is encouraged, supervised and regulated by the War Department. The purpose is to make soldiers. It is not training into citizenship, or any vague and ill-defined training of a general military nature. The official object is to "provide systematic military training at civil educational institutions for the purpose of qualifying selected students of such institutions for appointment as reserve officers in the military forces of the United States."

The courses of study used in these schools are written and supplied by the War Department. Their use is prescribed. No school can receive the benefit of War Department assistance if it does not use these courses. Moreover, the War Department, authorized by law, specifies the number of hours that students must spend on this military training. Credits toward graduation are conferred by colleges that give it.

Military Facilities of Twenty

Assistance rendered by the War Department to schools is substantial. Uniforms worn by students are supplied by it; so, also, is all necessary equipment. The War Department pays students in the senior (or college) division of military training sums in cash sufficient to subsidize the last two years of college education for many a boy in difficult circumstances. Moreover, it supplies the men who teach these youths. To each school the War Department assigns an officer of the Regular Army as "professor of military science and tactics." It supplies his assistants,—other officers of the Regular Army. The military science faculty in Ohio State University numbers twenty and in the University of Illinois twenty-two—all assigned and paid by the War Department. This number is equal in size to the entire faculty of many a smaller college.

Neither is the War Department content with training boys and young men at school. It has established Citizens' Military Training Camps, or the C. M. T. C., as they are called, for lads who have left school and gone to work. In the summer of 1925 there were twenty-eight camps and Congress appropriated $2,100,000 for their support. The citizens' military training camps really began in 1921, though there had been pre-war and war camps for training soldiers before that. The real post-war C. M. T. C. has been going, however, for only five years. In 1921 the number of young men in attendance was 10,681, in 1922 it rose to 22,000, in 1923 to 25,000 and in 1924 the number was 34,000. "The time is not far distant," wrote General Pershing this past summer, "when, instead of training 35,000 young men, we will be training 100,000 each year."¹

So rapid has been the growth of military training that few people are aware of what has actually taken place. The accomplishment of the War Department, and its avowed policy, are such as to raise this question. Is it the purpose of the Federal Government, working through the War Department, to bring about universal military training for boys fourteen years of age and older in the schools of the United States? And this further question is pertinent: Does Congress wish to support this program?

It is safe to say that, when the United States entered the war in 1917—and earlier, in 1915 and 1916—most people in this country conceived German militarism to be the enemy that we were fighting. No other conception could have given rise to the cry that we were going into the war to "make the world safe for democracy." That militarism was believed to be extraordinary preparation for, and concentration on, war. We thought that the war was due in no small part to this pre-occupation with the military purpose and method. We believed then that no nation that required all of its young men to take training as soldiers could be regarded as strongly devoted to peace. We believed that militarism was in some way closely bound up with this universal, or almost universal, military service and training. Have we changed our opinion?

President Coolidge in a speech before the graduating class of the U. S. Naval Academy, June 3, 1925, said: "I am not unfamiliar with the claim that if only we had a sufficient military establishment no one would ever molest us. I know of no nation in history that has ever been able to attain that position. I see no reason to expect that we could be the exception." And in an address before the American Legion, October 6, 1925, he said: "The real question is whether spending more money to make a better military force would really make a better country." The preparation of American schoolboys to be soldiers and officers is both adding to the American establishment and spending more money on military forces. It is not only an aggrandizement of the military arm, but it is training these boys to think in terms of war purposes and military spirit.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Delight in Divine Worship

By E. M. Riddle

TEXT: And the whole assembly took counsel to keep the other seven days: and they kept other seven days with gladness.—2 Chron. 30:23.

Our text refers to a very interesting public religious service, convened by the good king Hezekiah. His nation had been invaded with the spirit of apostacy and profanity and in the midst of their work of reformation, a public service was conducted, giving opportunity for the confession of sin. Hear the plans from the word itself, "So posts went with the letters from the king and his princes throughout all Israel and Judah, and according to the commandments of the king, saying, Ye children of Israel, turn again to the Lord God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob and he will return unto the remnant of you that are escaped out of the land of the kings of Assyria. And be not like your fathers, and like your brethren, which trespassed against the Lord God, . . . but yield yourselves unto the Lord and enter into his sanctuary, which he has sanctified forever, and serve the Lord your God, that the fierceness of his wrath may turn away from you. For the Lord your God is gracious and merciful and will not turn away his face from you, if ye return unto him." This service of worship unto which they were summoned was held. They kept the feast of unleavened bread seven days with great gladness. During the time Hezekiah spoke to them concerning the good news of the Lord, and they did eat and make peace-offerings and also confession unto the Lord God of their fathers. After this protracted service of seven days, the whole assembly took counsel, and they resolved to keep other seven days and they did so with gladness.

The text very naturally gives rise to two thoughts for further discussion. First, why the people of God should delight in worship; and secondly, how they will evince it.

The word speaks in no uncertain terms, the great command, "Thou shalt WORSHIP the LORD THY GOD." Hence because of the divine authority we should delight in worship. God demands it. He has appointed it; sanctioned it with promises, and disobedience thereunto he has connected with severe threatenings.

May we reflect upon the thought of God for a moment since we are commanded to worship him. Who is God? The beloved disciple, St. John (1 epistle 5:7) informs us of him, that there are three that bear record in Heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Spirit, and these three are one. This trinity in unity is the object of our faith, not of our speculation. He has sufficiently described himself to his servants. "I AM THAT I AM" to Moses. Ex. 3:14. "The Lord God of your fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob" and again he styles himself the Lord God of the Hebrews. This most High God is the creator, possessor, and disposer of heaven and earth and all things which are therein, both of men and of angels, and of every rank and order; for they are the work of his hands, "for those pleasure they are and were created." Rev. 4:11.

How reasonable a service is it therefore that he should be worshipped!

The Psalmist exclaims—"Praise ye the Lord." "Let them praise the name of the Lord: for he commanded and they were created." We should WORSHIP because it is adapted to man's nature and power to do so. A contemplation of the great and glorious good produces emotions of pleasure. Nearly all the tribes of men worship something. One nation adores the wonderful orb of day, another the wind, and another the invisible spirit. Others make idols to represent their deities. It is obvious that man was destined for religious homage, reverence, prayer, and adoration. To worship God, is to direct the powers of the mind to the right and only object worthy of it. Man is thus lifted up into holy contact with his creator; he comes into spiritual contact with the high and lofty one who inhabits eternity; and this is the summit of human greatness and the perfection of man's blessedness and glory.

Public worship harmonizes with the social constitution of man. Nothing will entirely fill the place and call forth the volume of response as public worship. Various ways of worship, even the modern radio will not entirely suffice. Secret prayer and meditation are very necessary and must not be minimized, they are truly precious to the believer but man grows in worship with others and was destined to sympathize most with his fellow men. The holy emotion goes from heart to heart. The sorrowful lose their grief amid the sunshine of the service—the joyous have their ecstasies chastened and sanctified, by their communing with the distressed. Some poet has sung the very fitting words:

"Lo, what an entertaining sight
Are brethren that agree;
Brethren, whose cheerful hearts unite
In bands of piety.

When streams of love, from Christ the spring,
Descend to every soul;
And heavenly peace, with balmy wing,
Shades and bedews the whole."

This divine worship is the greatest of all blessings.

"I have been there, and still would go:
'Tis like a little heaven below."

Think will you of the divine and spiritual illumination of the soul, conviction of conscience, and sorrow for sin, and the conformity of the soul to the divine likeness. It has been well said that the house of God is the celestial training for the service of the skies.

The Psalmist exclaims, "One thing have I desired of the Lord; that will I seek after; that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to inquire in his temple." 27:4.

But says someone, how are we to worship? Let the word speak, "Not in vain—"Matthew 15:9; "Not as the conscience dictates, for example—Cain, Genesis 4:2-7 or Israel—Exodus 32:1-28 or the two priests of Leviticus 10:1, 2, but we are to worship positively, in spirit, in glory, in truth, according to John's gospel and the apostle to the Philippians. May we go a step further, Christians should worship by singing, Ephesians 5:19; by reading Colossians 4:16; by praying, Acts 2:42, 1 Thessalonians 5:17; by teaching, by communing, by contributing, each is a New Testament teaching.

Now for our last consideration, how will this delight for worship be manifest? I believe it will be evinced by holy cheerfulness, which will distinguish our attendance. "I was glad when they said unto me let us go into the house of the Lord." "How amiable are thy tabernacles." "My soul longeth." The work of our God will be sweet and the most natural expression will be that of praise. It will be adoring and grateful, the soul's highest and sweetest emotions will be excited, it will be reverent and humble.

We ought also to exhibit finer fruits. We shall show that it will make us wiser, holier, and more heavenly-

MONDAY

PAYING THE PRICE—Matt. 13:44-46. "When he had found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had, and bought it." It is an eternal principle, we must pay for all that we get. There are no "hand-outs" in the universe; we must lay the prices on its altar. Rev. Vincent G. Burns says, "A good life, radiant, serviceable, eminently victorious, was never yet secured without self-denial."

TUESDAY

THE NEED OF PATIENCE—Heb. 10:35-39. "Ye have need of patience." How true today! Our present-day life seems to be characterized by impatience; that is one of our "major sins." We make our rash demands, and then we worry and fret and pine because they are not fulfilled on the dot and to the last item. Why? Do we count God's willingness or ability? Or do we imagine we can hurry him? We need more submissiveness, trust and patience.

WEDNESDAY

IN SEARCH FOR SOULS—Jer. 2:1-4. "The word of the Lord came to me, saying, Go and cry in the ears of Jerusalem." God's love not only causes the divine heart to search for souls, but causes the hearts of men to join him in that search. In obedience to that divine impulse Jeremiah gave himself to the task of leading Judah out of sin into the righteousness that saves. Nothing is more real than God's love and nothing is more continuous and constraining than his searching through the efforts of men.

THURSDAY

MYSTERY OF THE SPIRITUAL—John 3:5-15. "How can these things be." And men are still puzzled about the spiritual life, about how lives are transformed by the Spirit of God. But why should they expect to understand? The natural man cannot understand the things of the Spirit. Thank God, we don't need to understand; we only need to believe and receive the gift of the Spirit.

FRIDAY

ENNOBLING COMPANIONSHIP—Acts 4:12-18. "They took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus." There was something about the life of Jesus that made a change in the lives of those who touched it; it ennobled and hallowed them, and men were able to discern the change. It is so still.

SATURDAY

TRUE WORSHIP—Psalm 5:7, 8. "In thy fear will I worship toward thy holy temple." It is not all of worship to sing hymns, to offer prayers and to engage in all the ritual of the sanctuary. It is but mumbling lip-service if the soul does not approach God in deep reverence and true devotion.

SUNDAY

A REST IS PREPARED—Heb. 4:9-11. "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." Activity is the outstanding element of life, but it is planned that rest alternates with labor and activity. It is so in nature. It is essential to the happiness and welfare of man's physical life, and it is the promised boon of his spiritual being. When the labors have been worthily done, the opportunities wisely improved and the stewardship faithfully performed, we shall enter into rest at God's right hand.—G. S. B.

minded. We will carry a sense of God's presence with us so that the world will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. God's people ought to carry with them from his house and worship, the sweet fragrance of divine things thus they will appear to others as the seed which God has blessed.

We will manifest our interest by cordial and liberal support. The children of Israel brought an offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring for all manner of work, which the Lord had commanded to be made by the hand of Moses. If we love divine worship, we shall liberally and freely support it, as God gives us the means, even as Paul says to the Corinthians, "let everyone of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."

Do we thus love God's house and ordinances? Do we eagerly anticipate them, and would we most gladly continue our zeal and fervor for the things that are eternal in character? Will we be willing at the appointed time to keep the practices and teachings of the church of our choice with gladness? Will we not be on our guard that the earthly things and attractions do not take away the holy relish for spiritual services? May it be so to the end, that in the end here, we may exchange.

"This house,—these hours of praise and prayer,

For holier—happier worship there."

Introduction

Solomon is supposed to have been about twenty years old when his father died. The staple facts of our lesson today are given both 1 Kings 3:4-15, and 2 Chronicles 1:2-12, but most fully in Kings. In common with Saul Israel's first king, Solomon at least in his early life, was modest and humble, neither self-confeited nor vain. Both men had at first a reasonably just sense of the great responsibilities of a king. This is more apparent in Solomon than even in Saul, and constituted one of the brightest tokens of his future promise. His strong desire to rule well, coupled with a sense of personal obligation to God, which was evinced in his devotion to religious duties, must have been very gratifying to his father David before his death. The record in 1 Chronicles 28:9, 10, 20, 21, gives very fully the warm parental exhortations with which David charged upon his hopeful son these great responsibilities, but drops not a word of reply from Solomon; nothing to indicate the spirit with which he received the charge. But when he entered upon his royal duties his spirit became at once apparent, giving the best testimony that the counsels of the dying father had gone to his heart. Such regard for wise counsels in any young man is the best evidence of a bright and useful future. Prof. Augus Green assigns the date of the accession of Solomon as 980 B. C.

The Vision

Those who are ambitious, who are dissatisfied with their present state, who are aspiring and forward-reaching,—they are the ones who have visions, they are the ones who see into the future. Solomon was that kind of a man, and it was because he was that God appeared to him and said, "Ask what I shall give thee." Farrar says, "That blessed and most loving offer is made to every human soul. To the meanest of us all God flings open the treasures of heaven. We fail to attain the best gifts because so few of us earnestly desire them, and so many disbelieve the offer that is made to them. Yet there is no living soul to which God has not given the choice of good and evil. 'He hath set fire and water before thee; stretch forth thy hand unto whether thou wilt.'"

The Choice

There come times in every life when vital choices must be made. God presents before us great opportunities and privileges and says, as he said to Solomon, "Choose ye this day", and we must choose. To refuse to choose is in itself a choice, and as Heber Evans says, "it is the liberty to choose our own aim in life, and at last your own destiny, that makes life so serious." And as Alice Adams says, "It is not what we get, but what we choose; not money or poverty, but the love of money; not success in gaining pleasure, but what we seek first, that tests us as to what we really are. What we have and what we do often depends on many things outside of ourselves. What we choose is the work of our hearts and wills."

A young person is like a train starting out of the station of a great city. The track on which he starts soon meets switches which turn him in many different directions to various destinations. The train is sent where the switch tender directs. But the young man does his own switching, and chooses his own destination, though Providence is continually presenting before him many possibilities.

"Our lives are songs; God writes the words,
And we set them to music at pleasure;
And the song grows glad, or sweet, or sad,
As we choose to fashion the measure.

We must write the music, whatever the song,
Whatever its rhyme or meter;
And if it is sad, we can make it glad,
Or if sweet, we can make it sweeter."

Appointed of God

Solomon was conscious of being in the place where God wanted him, that his kingship was a matter of divine appointment. "Thou hast made thy servant king," he said. That consciousness made the matter of being king a serious business.

"The fact that God has put a man in any position of trust or duty creates an obligation to fulfill the trust and perform the duty. It is a source of great strength and great blessing to me in the position and doing the work to which we are conscious that God has appointed us. This is a strong reason for asking and expecting God's blessing upon us, and for doing our utmost to accomplish the object. Whatever God gives us to do, he will enable us to carry out to its fulfillment. The assurance that we are carrying out God's will. God's plan for our lives, that his will, his power, his love, are behind and underneath our lives, cannot but make us strong and triumphant. For he would not select us for the work unless he knew it were possible for us to do it in his strength."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Two Views of Solomon's Choice

1. "The wisdom for which Solomon asked was not that wisdom that has its beginning in the fear of God, but more practical, political wisdom, with good government as its end and aim. That the king did not have the highest wisdom is apparent when we look at his later life, which was conducted on anything but wise principles. Note now what God said to Solomon about his following the ways marked out by God himself. He promised him much if only he would be obedient."

2. We are told by a great preacher that Solomon chose, not the best, but only the second best. But is this true? It is said in v. 3 that Solomon loved the Lord. His very choice proved that he had "the fear of the Lord which is the beginning of wisdom." He was first devoted to God's cause, the cause of religion, the cause of God's people; and now he wanted the wisdom needed to fulfil his duties and carry on God's work. He was unselfish.

The Need of Wisdom

We all need continually divine wisdom in order to discern between evil and good, between the good and the better. We are often perplexed as to the right course for us to pursue in little matters or in larger. Most of us have frequent reason to hesitate in honest perplexity between two courses of conduct in some matter of everyday life, asking ourselves in all sincerity the question, Which of these courses is good and which is evil? No matter how much we desire to judge aright, we are oftentimes perplexed. This explains the failures and errors of really good men. It is a blessed thing that God is willing to give us wisdom liberally. "The vulgar and grovelling mind says, 'Let me have a path of pleasure, indolence, and self-indulgence.' The sordid mind says, 'Let me have luck and fortune, and a mint of money.' The ambitious and smart mind too often says, 'Let me win the prizes and mount to the top, and feel my pride to the full.' But the soul whom God has called and means to use says, 'Give me that higher wisdom which comes only from above, and conducts every one who has it in the upward paths. Make me anxious and able to live in such a way that those about me may be all the better and happier for my life.' That was Solomon's ambition in the morning of his life."

Coptic Sunday Schools in Egypt

The following interesting letter has been received by Rev. Stephen van R. Trowbridge, the secretary of the World's Sunday School Association with headquarters in Cairo, Egypt. The letter contains a report of the Sunday school movement in the Orthodox Coptic church:

"Thank you for your earnest interest in the Coptic Sunday schools and for your valuable cooperation. May the Lord bless your work which is for the glory of his holy name. Our organization and current work is as follows:

"We have a Central Sunday School Council, with headquarters at Cairo. This directs the schools in Egypt and the Sudan. The Chairman is the Dean of the Cathedral in Cairo. Mr. Habib Girgis, the Principal of the Coptic Clerical College, is the General Secretary. Every central school has its own committee. His Beatitude the Patriarch and their Graces the Metropolitans and the Bishops take great interest in the Sunday schools in their dioceses.

Select Committee Plans

By Rev. R. P. Anderson in Junior C. E. World

A Society Reception For Social Committees

The lookout and social committees will work together in this plan. The idea is to give a reception to all Juniors who have united with the church in the past year.

The first part of the programme may be made up of singing, solos, quartette, and so forth, readings, recitations, and short talks. Honor the Juniors for whom the reception is given. Then have refreshments, and after that a social hour, with games and stunts. "Good Times with the Juniors" sold by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon Street, Boston, Mass., for $1, contains outlines of many fine socials.

Dr. C. E. Pep For Lookout Committees

The lookout committee may plan this meeting with a bright member of the Senior society, who will take the part of Dr. C. E. Pep. The plan is very simple. It is to have an Endeavorer impersonate a doctor—C. E. Pep he will be called—and come into the society to treat it. Dr. Pep will rush in in great haste at the proper time. He should be dressed like a doctor, with whiskers, skull-cap, goggles, and should carry a satchel full of (imaginary) medicines. He will call up some of the Juniors one by one, and will tell what is the matter with them. That is, he will tell of troubles from which the society (not the individuals) suffers, and tell also how to cure them. One patient representing the society will be suffering from clipping-reading; Dr. Pep will tell how to cure that. Others will suffer from tardiness, starting late, lack of interest, poor attendance, and so forth. If this is well done, the meeting will prove very interesting.

Object-Talks For Prayer-Meeting Committees

It is often possible to give object-talks in the meeting. An object-talk is given by showing the Juniors an object and then drawing a lesson from it. A chain, for instance, may be shown; then it may be wound around the wrists of one of the Juniors, and one may give a talk on how habits are developed and how strong they become, so that we cannot break them. The habit of smoking, of lying, and so forth. There are possibilities in all sorts of objects: a lamp will teach the lesson of shining as lights in the world; a crooked stick will show how some people grow crooked; a few drops of ink dropped into a glass of water will vividly present to the eye the thought that evil thoughts pollute the mind. Get the superintendent to help you to suggest objects for object-talks bearing on the topics.

Stewardship "Reading-Contests" and "Playlets"

Experience shows that nothing else so increases the interest in stewardship and adds to the number of tithers in any church as a reading-contest followed by a supper and the presentation of a playlet.

We now publish a pamphlet entitled "Live Wire Reading-Contests," also "Thanksgiving Ann" and "Aunt Margaret's Teeth," both in playlet form.

For twenty cents we will send postpaid to any address samples of these, also twenty-one other stewardship pamphlets amounting to more than two hundred pages. This is less than the cost of printing. Address The Layman Company, 35 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

HAND-WORK

For Whatsoever Committees

Junior societies that have no hand-work periods (they need not be in the time of the meeting—a week-day evening does very well) are missing something that Juniors enjoy. It is a good plan to get the book, "Hand-work for Juniors," sold by the United Society of Christian Endeavor for seventy-five cents. This gives many ideas as to the different kinds of hand-work Juniors may do, and contains instructions for doing the work. The hand-work committee may help the missionary committee, for instance, by making models of missionary lands, houses, and so forth; it may help the study of the Gospels by making models of Bible objects; and it may do useful work by making a variety of articles that may be sold at bazaars or in other ways.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

(Topic for September 4)

Willing Workers Gal. 6:9; Neh. 4:6

Jane dropped her tea towel on the corner of the table and ran to the door as fast as she could. She had heard an automobile stop and she wanted to find out who was coming to see her. Just one glance was enough to bring out the dimples in her cheeks and she called out, "Katie, hurry up and come in. I am so glad that you and your mother have come over to see us."

Jane called her mother to talk to Katie's mother and soon Jane and Katie were having a wonderful time playing. Suddenly Jane said, "Oh, I forgot to finish wiping those dishes."

"Well this is a good chance to get out of it, isn't it?" said Katie. "I never help with the dishes if I can keep from it. I hate dishes."

Jane looked surprised and said, "Well, I don't specially like them but I help with them whenever mother asks me. If you don't mind we will go down in the kitchen and I'll wipe the rest of the dishes. It won't take me long and I'll feel more like playing if I know that I have done my work."

So they left the dolls and the rest of the toys in the attic playhouse and slipped down to the kitchen. The doors were open into the sitting room and so it happened that the little girls overheard a conversation that was going on. They did not mean to listen when they should not, but they heard their names mentioned and so it was pretty hard not to listen to the rest that was said.

Katie's mother spoke first. "I have been trying so hard to get a maid to help me with my work. I have not been feeling at all well and the doctor says that I must get out more or I'll break down."

"Well, doesn't Katie help you?" asked Jane's mother.

"I am ashamed to say it for it may be my fault, but I can't get much help out of Katie. She could do a good many little things that would help me a lot, but she just won't work willingly. I would rather go ahead and work until I get so sick I can't work than to keep nagging her all of the time."

"That is a shame," said Jane's mother. "Jane helps me so willingly. I don't see how I could get along without her. I try not to work her too hard. I give her tasks that she can finish up as quickly as she wishes and then play afterwards and she is always a willing little worker."

"I guess it is my fault about Katie," Katie's mother sounded like she was very blue and discouraged. "If I can't get a maid I am afraid that I really will become very ill because it is just as hard on me to make Katie work, since she won't do it willingly, as it is for me to do the work myself. Oh, I don't know what I'll do."

Just then Jane happened to look at her little friend, Katie, and she saw a big tear starting out of the corner of Katie's eye. Jane decided that this was a time when there was something else more important to do than wipe dishes so she said, "Let's slip out and not let them know we heard them. Come on, quick!"

They hurried up the steps but when they reached the attic they did not go back to their playing. Instead they sat down to think.

"Oh, I must do something for mother. I don't want her to get sick," said Katie. "How will I let her know that I am going to be a willing worker and not worry her any more?"

"I'll tell you," said Jane, "let's write her a letter."

Katie liked that idea, so Jane got some paper and they set to work. They worked hard. Just as the letter was finished, in which Katie had said many nice things; such as, "I love you mother and want to help you to stay well" and "I will try very hard to always work willingly", Jane's mother called them to come down and have tea with their mothers. As they ran down the steps Jane whispered to Katie, "You drop the letter in your mother's lap and we will go out to the kitchen while she reads it."

They did just that and when Jane's mother called, "You children hurry up or the tea will be cold", they found both mothers waiting for them with smiles on their faces and Katie thought she saw a tear in the corner of her mother's eye. But it was a tear of happiness.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

This year for the first time we have had a midwinter meeting of our workers for Bible study and conference. It came in July following a snowstorm such as we have here only once in many years. Only six of our ten men were present, as Brethren Zeche and Anton are in Buenos Aires and Sickel and Romanenghi in North America. We had the ordination service of Brethren Iztueta, Sotola and Reina the first evening, and the entire week was one of great blessing to all. We have a fine group of young men in our work and feel sure that they are going to be greatly used of the Lord. Their work has been steadily growing both in numbers and spiritual strength.

In Rio Cuarto we have had no slump since our return and are looking for continued growth. Our ordinary attendance in Sunday school ranges from 120 to 150, church services only a few less, the combined attendance of the Junior and Senior

C. E. about the same, while at prayermeeting we have from thirty to forty.

A few days ago I had the privilege of speaking to the prisoners in the penitentiary. There are only about 130 now. They are a hard looking lot but they gave perfect attention. I spoke under the auspices of the college. Formerly I could not get permission because the chaplain, a priest, would block my way. This week a doctor's wife told us of a neighbor, a Catholic mother who obliges her grown daughters to go to the confession although they protest that the priests insult them there and that the head priest is the most shameless man in town. Truly Satan blinds the eyes of his victims in order that he may keep them in his grasp.

We long to enjoy the fellowship of the brethren at General Conference, and will at least be present in spirit. May the Lord make the Conference a time of opening of Heaven's windows. C. F. YODER.

Dr. Gribble Writes Again

42 Rue Pierre Nicole,
 Paris, Vme, France,
 July 28, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

For a long time no word has been received from the Congo. Yesterday two water-drenched letters arrived—one from Mrs. Foster of Yaloke, one from Miss Myers of Bassai. Both were stamped "Mail from the Congo shipwreck."

Miss Myers' letter contains news of the opening of the school at Bassai. She writes (May 31), We just finished examining children for entrance into the school. Many came from a distance. The candidates being numerous we were obliged to exclude those who have been specially trained in "shumaili" (devil worship) and of course the lepers. Only fifty were admitted at present. Many are heart-sick over their non-admittance. A special class from 11 to 12 will be held for the evangelists. The old shed is being utilized for a school building. Brother Jobson has made seats, desks and book racks.

"Brother and Sister Sheldon have recently arrived at Bassai and will remain for a time. Meanwhile Brother and Sister Hathaway are at Bossangoa."

Mrs. Foster, also under date of May 31, writes, "The rainy season has begun at Yaloke. Tonight as I am writing it is raining very fast and long, having begun at three-thirty. We praise the Lord for the rain, because soon we will have good fresh vegetables for food. We now have fresh eggs, milk and butter. We have a very large garden and if the Lord permit, hope to have a good harvest."

"The work is moving along nicely. The dispensary is nearing completion. The veranda bricks are now being laid, the rooms being all finished. The carpenters (native) are working on the doors and shutters. A special house, the foundation of which is already completed, is being built for storing of gasoline in case of lightning."

"We have had seven wicker chairs made for the platform of the church, also a small one for the organ. They are very well made for native work. Three men came here from Boali who knew how to make them, and several of our men and school-boys have learned the trade.

"Brother and Sister Hathaway are at Bossangoa during the absence of Brother and Sister Sheldon.

"Miss Emmert is busy caring for her school and the many problems which present themselves in connection with that work. She has about thirty pupils now and they are a very lively crowd, though not all of them brilliant. But we love them and believe the Lord will be able to use some of them in the coming days if he tarryes.

"The medical work is heavy. Thirty-two or more patients are cared for by Miss Tyson daily at the morning dispensary, besides emergency cases who come during the day.

We pray for you and Marguerite daily

A MISSIONARY THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK

Missionary Heroism

The pages of missionary history are crammed full of heroism.

The principle of "safety first" never did count first in the life of a true missionary.

He loves life, but "counts not his life dear unto himself."

For Christ's sake and the Gospel he may at any time be called upon to lay down his life.

The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church.

Not many of us are called upon to render such a service of sacrifice. But Christ expects every Christian to render a service that has sacrifice in it.

—Francis Shunk Downs.

and believe the Lord is blessing you very much in your fellowship one with another, also making you a blessing. No doubt when this letter reaches you your time for parting will be near at hand. We pray that God will multiply his grace to you both and that this time of fellowship may be a foretaste of that we shall all enjoy together throughout the years of eternity. Eternity will be a long time of joy and blessing to those who know him, but oh, the sorrow and heartache for those who will not accept him! We haven't had a bit of mail for seven weeks, and all of us are getting rather hungry to hear from our loved ones. But this is just one of the many circumstances which surround us in Africa."

We end this letter as Mrs. Foster ends hers. "May the Lord continue to bless and keep you and supply your every need." We thank you for your continued prayers.

THINGS TO BE GIVEN UP

"Just what things must I give up?" To this the Bible answer is, that you must surrender everything that hinders your growth in grace. If certain practices or an attendance upon certain places, hinders your spiritual progress, then be done with them? Where there is doubt in your mind in regard to an amusement, give your Master the benefit of the doubt, and stay out of it. Just on this doubtful territory it is that we see so many unhappy falls. We also firmly believe that Christians ought to surrender very often their right to lawful things; for by so doing they may remove stumbling blocks out of the path of others, and strengthen their own graces. The Greek racer denied himself many lawful indulgences. So should a follower of Jesus whenever self-denial will increase his spiritual sinew. Too much is said in these days against "ascetism;" but the danger of the church does not lie in that direction. Satin cloaks are more in vogue than "hair shirts."

Daily food is a lawful indulgence. But fasting is sometimes profitable for both body and soul. Many luxuries of domestic life are lawful in themselves; to give them up in order to have more money for benevolent uses, or in order to discourage social extravagances, is a dictate of pure Christianity. John Wesley had a right to own silver plate, yet he nobly refused to possess more than two or three silver spoons "while so many poor people were lacking bread." An excellent man in my congregation sold his carriage when he found that his horses were eating up his charity-fund too fast. My friend is no ascetic. He is a very sensible and sunshiny Christian. If the same spirit which actuated him were more common in the church, there would be fewer luxurious equipages, fewer wine bottles, fewer card tables, fewer sumptuous evening parties; but there would be more missionaries in the West, and more Bibles in China and Japan. Self-indulgence lives under the clouds. Self-denial soars above them.—Selected.

The Old and New Testaments contain but one scheme of religion. Neither part of this scheme can be understood without the other.—Richard Cecil.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

LOREE, INDIANA CHURCH

This is another one of our rural churches, located about eight miles from Peru, in a small village. They have a modern brick church and fine parsonage. Brother Stewart has been pastor here for seven years and much against the wish of his people, is leaving this fall to take up the work at Mexico. During the ministry of Brother Stewart the church has made a big growth and built a fine parsonage. Brother Whitted of Nebraska, a former pastor, will follow Brother Stewart in the work here. This church has plenty of good talent and a very promising group of young people, some of whom we hope to see in Ashland College.

I found the people interested in our school and the general work of the church. My stay here was very pleasant and Brother Stewart gave me every aid. I WANT TO SAY RIGHT HERE, THAT THE PASTORS HAVE ALL PULLED STRONG WITH ME SO FAR IN THIS CAMPAIGN AND IF IT GOES OVER (AND WE EXPECT IT TO DO SO) TO THEM LARGELY IS THE SUCCESS DUE.

The total gift of the Loree church was $1,084.00. W. S. BELL.

FROM DELAWARE

I have been looking for the appearance of a short article in the Evangelist for six weeks. As our noble editor did not receive it; it may have been lost in the mail. So I try again. In my trip to Delaware about seven weeks ago I baptized eleven. A young married man and wife, an old lady, an aunt to this young man, and eight children. All are of good families, and we believe will make good members of the church.

This makes seventeen we have baptized since called to preach in Delaware. Others are almost persuaded.

Since I baptized the eleven I have held a week's meeting in a grove near Bethany Beach and on the boardwalk of the Beach.

We had some unavoidable hindering causes.

First, my circulars laid somewhere four days.

Second, insects were so bad in the grove the people could scarcely endure them.

Then we moved to the beach and had better crowds.

Third, pressing duties called me away. So instead of a 12 days' meeting, we only had services a week.

We sowed some seed, removed some prejudices, and convinced several good families of the truthfulness of Brethren doctrine.

After attending to some pressing duties at home we left for a three weeks' campaign at Gatewood, West Virginia.

This is the fifth campaign I have had here. The field has been well worked, yet there are many unsaved in this field. We had a full house last night. It gives me great pleasure to see the fruits of our labor of two years ago.

The young lady that leads the music, and the superintendent of the Sunday school were baptized by me at that meeting.

Some of the other active workers were converted at that meeting. I received a letter from Brother Byers, asking for a detailed statement of the Delaware work. As I have neither his letter nor his address with me, I cannot write him, but will say through the Evangelist:

That this work must be reorganized, the Brethren that I preach for have no pastor, nor church buildings.

Brother Witter having been District Evangelist, the day had been appointed three weeks before he died to go with me to Delaware to take a survey of the field and help reorganize them. We made three appointments for him. He died the day we were to go. After repeated calls to preach for them I heeded their plea.

We hope another district evangelist will be appointed at the Pennsylvania Conference, that will assist in reorganizing the work, and then we can give a detailed report.

We have some as loyal Brethren here as I have ever met. Other good brethren became discouraged eighteen months before I took the work. I believe many of them can be gotten back.

While I have made no attempt to enroll the membership, I feel sure there can be at least fifty active members enrolled. Some of the very best people who are inactive are waiting to see if our work will be reorganized. So I think there can be a hundred gotten back into the reorganization.

We badly need two church buildings here,

I think we will be able to build one. At the other needful point they are unable to build now. It seems to me that by careful tactful handling, this will prove to be one of the most fertile fields I have seen for years.

I can only make two short trips until the first week in November, then I hope to actively take up the work in this field. On account of serving the Third church of Philadelphia for six months, I could only give these people weekday services. Hence they have been greatly neglected since I have been preaching for them.

WARSAW, INDIANA

The writer has had the pleasure on past occasions of reporting the work at Warsaw as progressing in various ways, and we are happy to report a continued growth during the last few years. With Brother C. C. Grisso as our faithful pastor we feel that much good has been accomplished and the church has grown stronger. A number of members have been added to the church during the three years of his ministry here, and an ever increasing interest in the work is being manifested. We were especially sorry, therefore, a short time ago when Brother Grisso tendered his resignation, and announced that he had decided to accept a call to Sunnyside, Washington. Brother and Sister Grisso and their good family have endeared themselves to the people of the Warsaw church and the community during their stay in this city and we feel very keenly our loss in their departure for another field of service.

Brother Grisso preached his farewell sermon on August 7th, and special services were held on this day. A basket dinner was served in the basement of the church at the noon hour, nearly a hundred people being present for the dinner. A short service was held in the afternoon. Rev. M. A. Stuckey and Rev. H. E. Eppley were present and participated in the farewell services. Our best wishes go with Brother and Sister Grisso and their family as they enter upon their new work.

We are glad to state that Brother E. M. Riddle has accepted the call to succeed Brother Grisso as our pastor. Brother Riddle comes here with his family from Bryan, Ohio, where they have been faithfully engaged in the Lord's work for a number of years. We are confident that under his guidance the church will continue to prosper, and we solicit your prayers as we work together for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom.

ALBERT HARTMAN, Secretary.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

It has been several months since the readers of the "Evangelist" have had the opportunity of reading a report of the work at Uniontown, Pennsylvania. Here's your opportunity.

Needless to say the work is going forward in the Master's name. This is a praying church. Our people believe that "God lives and all is well." He who lives to do the will of God never fails in finding the Lord his helper, and he has surely been our helper during the past months of struggle for a "bigger and better" Uniontown church. Every department of the work continues to grow. Our women surely deserve praise for the wonderful work they have been doing. They have paid off their first pledge to the new church fund, have pledged another and have paid a part on it in less than a year. They will have a 100% plus society this year again. The Christian Endeavor under the leadership of Mr. Umbel has made considerable advance during the year. We led the county in "Quiet Hour" members, if not the "Tenth legion", and carried off one of the highest awards from the County convention this year. The Sunday school is also growing under the efficient leadership of F. P. Ebbert. Notwithstanding the setbacks we have had the last year, our Sunday school has increased 10% in average attendance for the year. We just recently held our Sunday school picnic which proved to be a real success. The weather was ideal. The church in itself is also increasing financially, in Spirit and also in numbers. Twenty-one have been added to our membership since the last report. Twenty of these by baptism, one by letter.

The new church site and parsonage purchased a year ago will likely be paid off yet this year. We had no thought when buying same that it would be possible to clear it of debt for at least two or three years. Paul said, "With the help of Christ, I can do all things." Our people believe that if Paul by his help could do all things, we all working together and with his help can certainly do one thing, and that one thing is to build a new, "Bigger and Better" Uniontown Brethren church, and unless something unforeseen prevents, we will begin improvements in the spring. We hope in the near future to submit to you a picture of the new building. We covet the prayers of the Brethren that it may soon be a reality, and his name which is worthy, shall have all the praise and glory

ANNUAL BIBLE CONFERENCE OF THE SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA DISTRICT JULY 15-24

The 16th Annual Bible Conference of the Brethren churches of Southern California convening between the dates of July 15-24 at Long Beach, California, was one of the finest and best attended ever held in the district.

The seven churches participating in this conference were, 1st and 2nd churches of Long Beach, 1st and 2nd churches of Los Angeles, Fillmore, LaVerne, Whittier.

The business session which opened the conference Thursday morning, July 15th, out of the total of seventy delegates from all the churches, sixty-four were present.

The statistical reports read by the pastors showed considerable growth among the churches.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: Elder A. B. Cover, Moderator; H. V. Wall, Vice Moderator; Alan S. Pearce, Secretary; Mrs. Edna Icenhower, Assistant Secretary; Morris Leffler, Treasurer; Leo Polman, Member Executive Committee. We count it a great privilege to have among us Brother A. B. Cover who has accepted the call to the pastorate of the first church in Los Angeles, and to be under his able leadership the coming year.

One of the great blessings afforded this conference this year was several addresses by Prof. Edwin E. Jacobs. This was Prof. Jacob's first visit to the Pacific Coast giving us a better opportunity to get acquainted with the President of our College and he with us. Some of the themes of his masterly addresses are as follows: "Modern Scholarship and the Christian Faith"; "Evolution and Christianity"; "Nature and the Bible"; "Is Restraint an Element of Christianity"? "Social Salvation and the New Birth." These messages were inspiring and of inestimable value to the many who heard them.

Among other outstanding speakers of the conference was Dr. Arthur J. Brown, Surgeon, Scientist and Bible Teacher of Vancouver, B. C., Canada; Alva J. McClain, formerly professor at Ashland College, now a teacher in the Bible Institute of Los Angeles; Dr. Cortland Myers, Author, Pastor, Preacher; Floyd Taber, preparing as a medical missionary to Africa; Elder C. L. Sickel, missionary to South America; and the pastors of the various churches of the district.

The conference deeply regretted the ab-the church at Washington, D. C., who due to illness was confined to his bed during the entire conference, and was unable to bring to us the messages he had planned.

The speakers gave messages true to the Bible as the very word of God. This conference thanks God for the splendid men who have always adhered to its principles, unwavering faith in the infallible Word of God.

Among the resolutions adopted by the conference is one in harmony with the messages given us by Dr. E. E. Jacobs and Dr. A. I. Brown. "We as a body wish to maintain the definite attitude taken heretofore in the matter of teaching evolution in the public schools and oppose such teaching whenever afforded."

The writer regrets the delay of this report due to illness. ALAN S. PEARCE, Secretary.

OHIO UNION EVANGELISTIC EFFORTS

Results of the Interdenominational work in visitation evangelism sponsored in several parts of the state in the past winter and spring by the Ohio Council of Churches were so satisfactory that the work will be continued and enlarged in the coming year.

The Council's committee on evangelism determined upon this policy at a conference in Columbus June 7 with a group of denominational executives, representatives of city and county church councils and pastors who had participated in the recent campaign.

The meeting was attended by 48 clergymen of 11 denominations. It was led by Bishop Theodore S. Henderson of the Methodist Episcopal church, chairman of the committee, who devoted five weeks' full time service in February and March to co-operative campaigns in Licking, Muskingum, Fairfield, and Perry counties and in Cincinnati, Toledo and Dayton.

The program for the coming year as mapped out by the group includes:

Intensive local campaigns in not more than six counties, where the churches invite such help and give assurance of active participation.

Support where needed and desired for activities of city church councils.

One-day evangelistic conferences for ministers and selected lay leaders of 20 counties, with the counties grouped so that each conference will cover three or four counties.

Formulation of a schedule of evangelistic work that any pastor can adapt for use in his church.

Consideration of the feasibility of a statewide "religious emphasis week" similar to the program observed in Cleveland and other cities.

This program will be carried out under the direction of a committee composed of the executives of the co-operating denominations in the state. These officials will again participate actively in the leadership of local campaigns and conferences.

Spokesmen for local ministerial groups that participated in the past year's local co-operative campaigns were unanimous in the verdict that the good results are continuing and did not end with the large Easter ingathering. In each locality, Bishop Henderson and other denominational leaders conducted a series of training conferences, spaced several days apart over a period of two weeks, for groups of personal workers organized and directed by their respective pastors.

Throughout the campaign the need for retaining such a group of trained workers as a permanent part of the church organization was emphasized.

It is estimated that at least 500 workers are members of such evangelistic groups in the four rural counties covered and that not less than 1500 new members have already been received into the churches there, two-thirds of them on baptism or confession of faith, with good prospects for a continued steady influx.

The discussion showed that those who participated in the past year's effort valued it highly from two standpoints—first, the deepening of the spiritual life in the churches and the winning of many new converts, and, second, the high degree of fellowship developed among men of many communions as they worked unitedly in their local campaigns.

"In 25 years of religious work I have seen no more intimate spiritual fellowship and brotherliness than has been evident in this work of the past year," remarked Bishop Henderson.

Evangelistic work organized on a permanent, year-around basis with a group of trained leaders in such church doing personal work is highly superior in its results in the short-time mass appeal, in the opinion of members of the conference.

"Too many ministers are still obsessed by mass psychology," commented Bishop Henderson, expressing this view. "They still feel that they can get results by a mass appeal. They won't take time for an educational approach to this spiritual problem. Just as we train our educational leaders carefully to give young people information about Jesus Christ, so must we train evangelistic leaders to help people get salvation through Jesus Christ.—V. E. McVicker.

our funds permit we plan to organize a Sunday school in every church.

"Every week we print 9,000 copies of the Sunday school lesson helps in leaflet form for use by teachers and students.

"In Cairo the students of the Clerical College are the volunteer teachers, but in other places the preachers, assisted by some of the zealous laymen, do the teaching."

THE POWER OF A LIVING EPISTLE

In a certain home a young lady resided who was a relative of the family. Her fretful temper made all around her uncomfortable. She was sent to a boarding school, and was absent for some time. While there she became a true and earnest Christian. On her return she was so changed that all who knew her wondered and rejoiced. She was patient and cheerful, kind, unselfish and charitable. The lips that used to be always uttering cross and bitter words, now spoke nothing but sweet, gentle, loving words. Her infidel cousin George was greatly surprised at this. He watched her closely for some time, till he was thoroughly satisfied that it was a real change that had taken place in his cousin. Then he asked her what had caused this great change. She told him that it was the grace of God which had made her a Christian and had changed her heart.

He said to himself, "I don't believe that God had anything to do with it, though she thinks he had. But it is a wonderful change that has taken place in her, and I should like to be as good as she is. I will be so." Then he formed a set of good resolutions. He tried to control his tongue and his temper, and kept a strict watch over himself. He was all the time doing and saying what he did not wish to do and say. And as he failed time after time, he would turn and study his good cousin's example. He would read this living Bible, and say to himself:

"How does it happen that she, who has not as much knowledge or as much strength of character as I have, can do what I can't do? She must have some help that I don't know of. It must be, as she says, the help of God. I will seek that help." He went into his chamber and prayed to that God whose very existence he had denied. He prayed earnestly. God heard him, and he became a Christian.—Young Men's Christian Magazine.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

POCKETS

*Pockets are so int'resting!
Mine holds marbles, knives, and string,
Suckers, balls, a gun that pops,
Shiny pebbles, bottle tops,
Whistles, nails, and say—it's funny,
Nearly everything but money!*

*Daddy's pockets—well, goodnight!
Men folks have 'em left and right;
Carry anything they please—
Wallets, pens, and lots of keys.
Once I found a pup asleep,
Cuddled in dad's pocket deep.*

*Pockets are myster-i-ous!
When my grandma visits us,
Even if I never hint,
She'll bring out a peppermint;
Chestnuts, spool top, shiny dimes,
Mittens that she made, sometimes.*

*Girls are not like us, for they Don't use pockets anyway;
Carry bags ... I tell you what—
Seems to me they miss a lot!

THE DINNER BELL

By Florence Isaacson

It was summer vacation at the picturesque big log cabin in the mountains.

There were Bessie, Lucy, Archie, and Carlyle. What a time they were having!

One of the things they particularly liked to do was to ring the big dinner bell that called in the wandering ones to meals. They loved to hear it peal out and echo over the great mountains. They called it the chimes. The one who was there first could ring it, and there was always an exciting race for the bell-rope.

Carlyle rang it quite often, but not so often as he wanted to, for he was not a very good runner. But sometimes he played tricks. That morning he had risen an hour earlier in order to be sure and be there first.

"I know what I'll do this noon," he said to himself: "I'll slip away from the game real early, and be waiting here with my hand on the rope, and then no one else will get it."

So at a quarter to twelve Carlyle was washed and ready for dinner and was sitting on the floor of the porch, with the bell-rope in his hand, waiting for the cook's signal.

"Where do you suppose Carlyle went?" Bessie asked.

"I don't know," said Lucy. "He just simply vanished all of a sudden."

"Maybe he is cross about something and has gone home," said Archie.

A few moments before twelve they all wandered back to the cabin.

Suddenly Lucy, who was ahead, was seen to stop, place her finger to her closed lips and indicate silence. They all looked in the direction to which she pointed.

They could hardly keep from laughing aloud, for there on the porch floor, his hand upon the bell-rope, sat Carlyle, sound asleep.

"Let's all tiptoe up and ring the bell while he is asleep," whispered Bessie.

So just as the cook gave the silent signal, for she had joined them in the joke, they rang the great bell long and loud.

Carlyle started, looked up, and took in the situation.

How they all laughed!

Poor, selfish Carlyle looked very foolish and awfully ashamed. It was not any fun to have people laughing at you while you were asleep, and after that he stayed with the rest and took his chance.—Selected.

THE WAY TO TRY

By Viola Woodville

A shrill whistle sounded outside the house, followed by two more of shorter length.

"That's Jasper Heath. He wants me to play hand ball, mother," explained Paul Winter, jumping from the sofa where he had been curled reading "The Mysterious Island." "May I go?"

"Put your book on the table, dear," reminded Mrs. Winter, nodding "yes" to his request.

Paul gathered it up from under the sofa, and throwing it on the table, began looking for his cap. Finally he found it on the piano. Next—the hand ball.

"Mother, where is it? Jas won't wait."

"Then maybe you will learn to put things away, son, with a few disappointments. What did you tell me the last time I asked you to be more orderly?"

"I said I'd try," hurriedly called back Paul, having found the ball under the radiator where it had rolled when he was teasing the cat.

It was an hour later that Mr. Winter came in.

"Letty," he said to his wife, "I don't know what to do. I must get the message I spoke of to the city. My client has no telephone, and I can't leave the office long enough to make the trip."

The Winters lived in a small town and Mr. Winter's office was in his own yard.

"Why not send Paul?"

"But could he make such a trip?"

"Yes, indeed. I know where he is and will call him."

Much relieved, the father went back to his office. Paul was not far away and came at once at his mother's call.

"Do you think you could go to the city with a message? Your father needs a reliable boy to deliver it promptly."

"Certainly, mother. If I hurry I can get that five o'clock car," he added after consulting a time table. "May I have your commutation ticket?"

His mother handed him the ticket and he ran to his father's office for directions.

The errand was not a simple one. The address was hard to find and since Paul seldom went to the city alone it was only by asking questions of the right persons that he finally found it. But the errand was properly done and Paul was at home in good time, much to his father's satisfaction.

"Paul, son," said his mother that night as he was going to bed, "the only I'll try" that counts is the 'certainly' kind. Suppose that when I asked you if you could go to the city for father, you had said merely, 'I'll try,' and then had done nothing more about it. But you looked up the time that the train leaves, got the ticket from me, went to father for instructions, boarded the train, and transacted the business in proper style."

"I see the point, mother," laughed Paul. "Certainly—sure thing. Everything in its place. You'll see, mother," he promised, kissing her goodnight.

Mothers do not expect miracles, but Paul did improve.—An article issued by the National Kindergarten Association, 8 West 40th Street, New York City.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

Plans are already ripe for announcement for the coming conference, October 4-6. We have real cause to believe that it will be the best we have yet held, although that may be saying a good deal.

Dr. Astrom of Chicago, Illinois, is to be with us in several special Bible addresses. A Bus trip is being planned for the delegates for Wednesday afternoon, to visit the most famous historic places both in Philadelphia and nearby, such as Independence Hall, Flaghouse, Valley Forge, etc.

A wide open hospitality is waiting all who come. The Philadelphia church is happy to be host to all and will do our best to please everyone and aid in a most profitable conference. R. PAUL MILLER, Pastor Entertaining Church.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

DEMOSS-FORENASH—In a very quiet apartment furnished ready for use, Lawrence M. Demoss and Sarah M. Forenash were united in the holy bonds of matrimony, May 13th, by the writer. Only the groom's sister and niece were present. The young couple have the well wishes of the community at large. THOS. F. HOWELL.

POE-HADDIX—On May 14th at the home of the groom's mother, John H. Poe and Cora L. Haddix were quietly united in marriage, with only the home circle to witness the occasion. They have the well wishes of a large circle of friends. THOS. F. HOWELL.

IN THE SHADOW

CARPENTER—Earl V. Carpenter, who was born near Ashland and spent his life there, was summoned from earth August 7th at the Mansfield General Hospital after a serious illness of six weeks.

He was a member of Hammond's M. E. church near Hayesville, Ohio. He graduated from Ashland College in 1913, and then taught school for three years. In the year 1916 he was married to Hilda Esther Price of Nappanee, Indiana. Their home has been blessed with three daughters, who with their mother, survive.

Many of his college friends were in attendance at his funeral, one of whom conducted his funeral services, the local pastor being on a vacation.

May God's blessing always be with those who mourn. E. M. RIDDLE.

BEVER—Little Ned LeRoy Bever was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Bever of Bryan, Ohio, and could only stay with them for one week and two hours. Now the loving arms of the parents must be filled by the Lord's angel saying, "Fear not, of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." The pastor sought to comfort the good Christian parents with the Word of God. E. M. RIDDLE.

ELSASSER—Salome Irene Elsassser, the eldest daughter of Henry and Zella Elsassser of Bryan, Ohio, was born January 11, 1901 and went to meet her Master August 15th. She was a graduate of the local high school and had been employed at the Farmer's National Bank.

She lived a beautiful Christian life and possessed a charming, sweet character. She united with the Brethren church in 1916, where she served the Sunday school and church as pianist twelve years.

She leaves a father, mother, four brothers and one sister. Her funeral services were conducted by the pastor at the church August 18th, in the presence of a large circle of friends.

God's grace is sufficient for all. E. M. RIDDLE.

LEEDY—Mrs. Ida May (Swank) Leedy departed to be with the Lord, Friday, July 22, at 11 P. M. At the time of her decease she was 66 years, 3 months, and 24 days old. She was born on the Leedy homestead, about two miles northeast of her late home at Ankenytown, Ohio, March 28, 1861. On December 29, 1881, she was united in marriage to Jacob S. Leedy. She is survived by her husband, three children, Mrs. Milo Gatto, Mrs. Fred Murphy, and O. J. Leedy; one sister, Mrs. Zetta Moree, and ten grandchildren.

Mrs. Leedy became a Christian soon after her marriage and was a member of the Brethren church at Ankenytown the remainder of her life here. The last few years of her life have been spent in almost constant sickness, so that she often longed to enter into that greater existence with Christ. Although her passing brought great grief to her family and friends, yet in her decease she was merely transported to greater blessing.

The funeral was held at the Brethren church at Ankenytown, with the pastor in charge.

LESLIE LINDOWER.

NICOLA—Ola Nicola, daughter of C. G. and Alice Nicola, died at the home of her parents, April 12th, 1927. She was eighteen years of age. Her death was a shock to the community. Amid her affliction she called for the writer and was anointed, resigning to God and was willing to go. She united with the First Brethren church of Grafton, and was baptized by her pastor, J. B. Shaffer here. She remained a member to her death. Funeral services in the Grafton Brethren church, conducted by Rev. J. B. Shaffer, assisted by the writer. The body was laid to rest in the Bluemont Cemetery. THOS. F. HOWELL.

ROYS—Sarah Elizabeth Roys died December fifth, 1926. She was a member of the M. E. church for many years. She leaves many relatives and friends and a devoted husband to mourn their loss. Funeral services were held in the First Brethren church, Grafton, by the writer. THOS. F. HOWELL.

DENNIS—Wm. Dennis was born August 20, 1884, and departed this life May 23, 1927, at the age of 42 years, nine months and three days. On July 17, 1917 he was united in marriage to Miss Ada Poling of Westernman. To this union were born five children, four boys and one girl. The deceased is survived by his wife and children, with many friends who mourn their loss. He was reared a Catholic, but in the year 1918 he changed his views of religion and united with the Church of the Brethren where he remained until his death. He was a quiet, peaceable man, and kind to his family.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the M. E. church at Knottsville, and the remains were laid to rest on the beautiful hillside. THOS. F. HOWELL.

METZ—Charles Ralph Metz, son of Thomas and Rosa Metz, was born September 1, 1915, and departed this life July 9, 1927, being eleven years, nine months, and eight days old. His mother left this world a year ago. Ralph leaves a heartbroken father, one brother and four sisters to mourn their loss. He was a good boy, tender and loving, liked by his many friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Shilo Church of the Brethren, interment in the Shilo cemetery. THOS. F. HOWELL.

MURPHY—Elder William R. Murphy was born March 27, 1845 and departed this life April 8, 1927, at the age of eighty-two years and twelve days. He was united in marriage to Hester A. Myers, on November 11, 1869, to which union were born six children—George E., of Monongah, Charles B. of Arden, Benjamin M. of Pittsburgh, Estella V., deceased, Rosa M. Simmelman of Meatsville, and Mack E. of Pittsburgh. Besides he leaves to mourn their loss a host of other relatives and friends and the dear wife who ministered to his every call to the last hour, with unflinching faith, resigned to God. She bore the burden as one whose hopes were anchored within the veil.

At an early age he confessed Christ as his Lord and Savior and united with the Church of the Brethren. Being ordained to the gospel ministry he served his place well for many years, answering the call of all whom he might comfort and assist. In his declining years he saw fit to unite with the Brethren church of Grafton, West Virginia, of which church he was very proud, he being the instigator of its organization. His greatest hope was to see the little church on the hill grow to be a stronghold for God and the salvation of many.

Elder Murphy was a man loved by all who knew him. He was a kind, loving father and husband, leaving a legacy which money cannot buy, a character that will stand the test of the eternal courts of justice.

God has wonderfully blessed his labors with many who testify to the fact that he was the evangel of their salvation. He was profoundly interested in the promotion of the community welfare, and will be greatly missed as an advisor and comforter of many.

The writer was twice to visit him, just one week before his death, he spoke of death as a dream or a pleasure trip. The disposition and anticipation of his last hours suggested the text for his funeral, "For me to live is Christ and to die is gain." Phil. 1:21.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. B. Shaffer and the body was laid to rest in the Meatsville cemetery to await the resurrection.

THOS. F. HOWELL.

The Thirty-ninth General Conference

The Thirty-ninth General Conference of the Brethren churches met at Winona Lake, Indiana, in its first session on the evening of August 22, with Moderator C. H. Ashman presiding. The attendance was large for the first session and the gathering enthusiastic. The delegates seemed to have come in an expectant and worshipful frame of mind and that attitude was intensified by the very pleasing leadership in song by Brother Harley Zumbaugh, who had charge of Conference music throughout the week. After a devotional service conducted by Brother George E. Cone, of Milledgeville, Illinois, the vice-moderator, Brother R. Paul Miller, brought the evening sermon on the theme, "His Offering and Appearing", in which he stressed the very vital place of the cross and the second coming of Christ in the thought and life of the church. At the close of this session while the Membership Committee began its work, the delegates showed a distinct desire to tarry in the place of meeting for the greeting of old friends, the renewal of acquaintances and the forming of new ones. When the delegates finally dispersed to their lodging places, a happy evening of fellowship and worship had been experienced, which proved a fitting prelude to the week of inspiration and conferring together in the work of the Lord.

In the election of Conference officers, which took place on Tuesday morning, one honor was in a very special way deservedly bestowed, and that was the giving to Dr. Martin Shively by unanimous vote the moderatorship of the 1927 Conference. For forty years Brother Shively had been attending Conference, always serving faithfully and efficiently in committee or on program, as assigned from time to time. But he never sought for himself any honor of place or of position. It was therefore with all the more readiness that Conference seized upon the suggestion to bestow upon him this honor, and in doing so it was honored by his capable and dignified leadership of its sessions. The newly-elected Vice-moderator is Prof. W. I. Duker, pastor of the Elkhart, Indiana, church. Rev. O. C. Starn, the efficient secretary for four years, was elected to succeed himself. N. G. Kimmel, prominent layman of Gratis, Ohio, was re-elected treasurer. Elder George E. Cone was retained as statistician. And Dean J. Allen Miller, Dr. G. W. Rench and Dr. L. S. Bauman were elected to constitute the powerful Committee on Committees.

We do not wish to presume upon the prerogatives of the Conference Secretary by reporting what took place at each session, but will content ourselves this week with giving some characteristics of Conference, as it appeared to us. The first thing we wish to mention worthy of note was the attendance and loyalty of the delegates and visitors. The attendance of such a goodly number of Brethren from various parts of the brotherhood was a pleasant surprise by some of the Conference leaders, in view of the repressed financial conditions in some parts of the country. We do not have the exact number of registered delegates, but it was in the neighborhood of three hundred, and the visitors present throughout the week outnumbered the elected delegates. The number increased as the Conference grew older and by Sunday morning more than a thousand Brethren was gathered in the Auditorium for Sunday school and church services. The loyalty of the delegates was shown by their faithfulness in attendance upon our programs while there were strong counter attractions going on in the large Tabernacle nearby. Besides, it seemed that there was not quite so much visiting and walking about the grounds during sessions as on previous occasions. The faithfulness and promptness of the delegates in attendance was to be commended, and if they did not get inspiration and suggestions to carry home to their constituents, it was not, in the main, because of their non-attendance.

The atmosphere of Conference seemed to be largely charged with cheerfulness, optimism and fraternity. If any one was there with a very bad case of the "blues", we failed to meet him, or else he kept it pretty well concealed. This is not to say that no one had any problems to puzzle over, or that no one knew of any discouraging features related to our church work, but that, notwithstanding any such possible considerations, the people seemed happy and hopeful for the future. Faith in God enables one to be confident and optimistic even in the face of discouragements. And that good spirit is conducive to fellowship and brotherhood. The words of greeting we frequently heard, the conversations engaged in and the general attitude of delegates on the floor of Conference, indicated a spirit of fraternity that is highly desirable.

There seemed to be quite general satisfaction on the part of both leaders and delegates with regard to the program. We heard frequent expressions of commendation concerning various speakers, the most talked of being Dr. W. P. White, the Scotch-Irish Bible lecturer. His manner as well as the content of his lectures made him a popular speaker. Next to the Bible lectures in attractiveness were the evening programs of sermon and song. We hope to be able to publish some of those splendid sermons from time to time if the preachers will prepare them for publication. Practically all the participants on the program that we had the privilege of hearing gave evidence of having made some real preparation for their parts, and that is a big element to a successful program. There is one feature that we think might be improved on however, and that is the more extensive preparation of sermons and addresses for General Conference in manuscript form. That is not to urge that they be read from copy, and it is not to say that they would in every case be better in quality, but it would make possible a more complete record of this valuable material in our "Brethren Annual and Conference Minutes." We speak this word in behalf of our Conference secretary.

We were pleased at the expeditious dispatch of the business of General Conference and the good humor and mutual consideration in which it was transacted. There was no wrangling that we heard, and little unprofitable debate. The exercise of courtesy and agreeableness is increasing among us, and also we are learning to thresh out our knotty problems in committee rooms where frankness and agreement can be more easily had than on the Conference floor. This makes for efficiency, unobtrusiveness and smoothness and leaves larger place for the inspirational portions of Conference. While this is to be commended, it is also proper to voice a warning that Conference shall not push its business back so far and so completely into the committee room that it shall cease to have any interest in it, or any knowledge or part in it. We must maintain the democratic spirit and insist on a certain amount of democratic practice for the sake of the church's future.

Frequent emphasis was placed on our time honored slogan: "The Bible, the Whole Bible and Nothing but the Bible." In sermon and Bible lecture, in discussion and in resolution, that slogan was often and emphatically re-echoed. We do well to continue to hold that before us, and that continually, for it is the heart of Brethrenism. And it may be said that Brethrenism has always been sufficiently conservative in faith and church practices to leave no reasonable doubt in the minds of observers about our being safely grounded on the Word of God. This is to our credit and is a large element in the security of our denominational future. But at the same time it may be said by way of warning that we should not allow our conservatism to blind our eyes to plans or programs or agencies that will work to the advancement of the Kingdom of God and enable us the better to guard the flock and to feed the lambs and the sheep.

There were three other notes that were strongly stressed in various parts of our Conference and which are so closely related that they can be mentioned together. In fact, they are so vital and indispensable one to the other that they cannot be successfully promoted separately. (1) The promotion of the devotional life on the part of our church members is a most important thing—one that should command our attention more persistently and intelligently. We do not stress the importance of the spiritual life as we ought; we are too tolerant of worldliness; too careless regarding the means of grace; too neglectful of daily spiritual exercises; too forgetful of our need of the continual operation of the grace and the power of God in our lives. And as a result we are largely powerless because we are too widely without spirituality. And being without spiritual keenness, we are also (2) lacking in evangelistic fervor. When we are out of touch with Christ, we are out of sympathy with his supreme passion—the saving of lost men and women. The fact that men are without Christ and so without hope does not weigh heavily upon the vast majority of Christian people. The difference between the saint and the sinner does not seem very great, because we have so little of real saintliness within us. The church or the individual that lacks that Christ-motive and viewpoint, that has not the outgoing spirit and urge of the Gospel, that has not experienced the passion of evangelism is lacking in real spirituality and power. And to the extent that this is true we are delaying the Kingdom and retarding the growth of the church. And along with these weaknesses that need to be overcome, there is (3) the further weakness of failing to recognize the claims of Christian stewardship. They are all related, and he who is careless at one point will soon be suffering at all three. He who lives as if all that he has and is, were his very own, and that he owes nothing to any one, will not be very eager about soul-winning, nor will the spirit of Christ be very real in his life. Spirituality, evangelism and stewardship are three phases or expressions of the one Christian life, and they are indispensable each to the other. It is not surprising, therefore that they should be so inseparably linked together in address, prayer and program, or that they should be so strongly and constantly urged upon pastor and layman alike in every church conference. No more vital note was sounded in our recent conference than this three-fold plea, and no other message is it so necessary to carry down to the last member of the last church of the brotherhood.

Does a College Education Pay?

Here are some practical-minded folks who have made a considerable measure of success in life without a college education and are often asking, "Does a college education pay?" Too often they estimate the payment in terms of dollars and cents. Does it pay materially? they ask. Does it pay in the things one is able to accumulate? And it is not always possible to say that it does pay in that sense, though it is evident that the educated man has better chances than the uneducated, other things being equal. But that is not the true basis of judging the worth of education. "For a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." It is the life that counts; the quality, the worth, the enrichment of life. It is in terms of spiritual values that the answer must be given, and it is in such terms that Orison Sweet Marden answers the question, Does education pay? Hear his reply:

Does it pay an acorn to become an oak?
Does it pay to escape being a rich ignoramus?
Does it pay to learn how to make life a glory instead of a grind?
Does it pay for a chrysalis to unfold into a butterfly?
Does it pay to add power to the lens of the microscope or telescope?

Does it pay to acquire a personal wealth, which no disaster or misfortune can wreck or ruin?

Does it pay to learn how to focus thought with power, how to marshal one's mental forces effectively?

Does it pay to open a little wider the door of a narrow life? to push out one's horizon in order to get a wider outlook, a clearer vision?

Does it pay a diamond to have its facets ground, to let in the light, to reveal its hidden wealth of splendor?

Does it pay to have expert advice and training, to have ideals held up to one in the most critical years of one's life?

Does it pay to experience the joy of self-discovery, to open up the whole continent of possibilities in one's nature which might otherwise remain undiscovered?

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Next week we will publish numerous brief reports on the various phases of our General Conference, and we hope also the regular Conference minutes.

Dr. Henry V. Wall, secretary of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, gives us his annual report, together with that of the treasurer, Brother N. H. Nielsen. It is stated that in the eight years of the League's history 3,000 souls have confessed Christ in meetings conducted under its auspices. Dr. J. C. Beal is to hold several meetings as its evangelist.

Prof. A. L. DeLozier decided not to let his last epistle be his last one, as he declared his intention to do. Our readers will greatly appreciate this additional letter, which is possibly the most interesting one he has yet written. We will not say that we are glad to have Brother DeLozier's congenial personality out of our circle of leaders at Ashland, but we do greatly enjoy his letters.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble again conveys to us the news from the African Mission Field. One especially interesting news item is the announcement of the birth of Kenneth Everett Sheldon, to Brother and Sister Chauncey Sheldon on June 4th last. In behalf of the Evangelist family we congratulate the proud parents and pray God's blessings upon them. We note that the building proceeds as usual, also that the missionaries on the field are eager for the return of Dr. Gribble.

The Daily Vacation Bible School idea is spreading far and wide, not only in America, but throughout the Christian world, according to a bulletin of the World Association of Daily Vacation Bible Schools, issued at Nice, France. The desire on the part of all Protestant pastors to try out all methods possible, especially those that have been successful in America, has approached the stage of eagerness. The most recent news is that of one such school having been conducted in a summer home for children in the Alps, near Cannes, by the pastor of the First Baptist church of Nice. And the idea has traveled across the Mediterranean and gripped the minds of Christian leaders in Northern Africa, as a news item in a religious journal indicates: "The Synod Sunday School Committee is investigating the Daily Vacation Bible School idea in connection with working out a plan for a Sunday School Union in Egypt and the Soudan."

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, writes of the gifts of several of our national organizations to the Endowment Fund. The National Sunday School Association gave $1,000.00, the National Ministerial Association, gave $1,000.00, and the Women's Missionary Society made an additional gift of $500.00, all of which bring the Campaign Fund up to $120,822.42. If every week could realize so splendid an advance the goal would be reached much more quickly than the present pace indicates. That of course is impossible, we cannot expect large gifts from every church or person canvassed, but if all men realized fully the urgency of the need, the gifts would be much larger than they have been. But we are going to reach the goal, even that it may be a difficult pull. We simply must reach it, that's all, and we must do it quickly, if Ashland College is to be given creditable standing. Let us pray for Dr. Bell's success, and when he is in our local field, let us give him our best cooperation.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Moderator's Address

By Rev. Charles H. Ashman

(Delivered before the Thirtieth General Conference, Winona Lake, Indiana, August 23, 1927, and voted by that body to be published in The Brethren Evangelist.)

Under the providential guidance of our heavenly Father, the saving grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ, and the leadership of the Indwelling Holy Spirit, we are assembled in this the thirty-ninth General Conference of the Brethren church. We assemble with co-ordinated aims and purposes. We meet to reciprocate Christian greetings and enjoy mutual Christian fellowship. We are gathered in this body to review the past, survey the present, and plan for the future of our beloved church. Certain outstanding scriptural exhortations ought to grip our hearts and become the guiding principles in all our speech and decisions. They are: "Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks. Rejoice evermore. Set your affections on things above. Love one another. Be filled with the Spirit. Study to show thyself approved unto God. Earnestly contend for the faith once for all delivered unto the saints. One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

Our message as retiring moderator is strictly denominational. This is a Brethren conference, not a community church affair, the Brethren church is big enough for me. She has the whole Gospel to preach, teach, and practice. Her responsibilities are as big as the Bible. Her problems challenge the highest scholarship, the greatest executive genius, the most efficient leadership, the deepest consecration, and the most profound spirituality. She is big enough for the biggest. They who forsake our ranks for more lucrative fields of service, prove themselves to be too weak and small to meet these challenges. Our message is strictly Brethren!

Moreover, our message is presented from the pastor's viewpoint. It has been gathered from the books of experience in the college of hard knocks. It is neither theoretical nor theological, but experimental and perhaps will be painfully practical. It will present the problems of our church as they appear to those upon whose hearts rest the responsibilities of pastoral care of the churches.

"The Care of all the Churches"

The greatest problem, the biggest task, the most serious responsibility, the supreme opportunity of this Conference is that which Paul so graphically presents in 2 Corinthians 11:28. After enumerating an unparalleled list of personal hardships, he says, "Besides those things which are without, that which comes upon me daily, THE CARE OF ALL THE CHURCHES." This is the challenge we present to this Conference. It is a staggering task, a tremendous responsibility, a supreme opportunity. It presents a challenging and beckoning future. Two contrasting attitudes will be assumed toward it leading to widely divergent destinies. Some will assume the attitude of unbelieving and cowardly Israel as she stood on the banks of the Jordan and cast wistful eyes toward the promised land of milk and honey, pomegranates and grapes, figs and olives, and also giants and entrenched cities. Paralyzed with fear, in cowardice she turned back into the wilderness to bleach her bones on the desert sands. We may do likewise. As we analyze the present and face the future of our church, we too may fail to command the resources of God through faith and be brought into bondage through fear. Or we may be inspired by Paul. He stood before "a great and effectual door" of opportunity. But,—there were "many adversaries." He defied the adversaries and trusting in the Holy Spirit, passed through the door to "crusade and conquer for Christ." The manner in which we face and study and tackle the problems involved in the "care of the churches" will prove the sincerity of our love for Christ, the seriousness of our profession of belief in the whole Gospel, the genuineness of our faith in our distinctive mission, and the stamina and courage of our individual Christian character. We invoke the energizing and dominating power of the Sovereign Holy Spirit as we present these problems to you.

Doctrinal

The "care of all the churches" involves a doctrinal problem. These are days of "the falling away." There are many "false teachers" who are attempting to "creep" "ministers of righteousness." These are days, not so much of heresy, but of apostasy. Heresy requires brains, in unawares and despoil the churches. Satan has his time, energy, and fearlessness. It is the working out of a supposedly new doctrine. Not many of the apostate teachers of today have the brains and fearlessness to do this. But, there is much apostasy abroad. Apostasy is just easy-going, drifting away from the truth. It is lazy, shallow, flat, brazen-audacity denial of the revelation of the Bible. Apostasy is more subtle than heresy. In heresy, there is the statement of the true doctrine and along side of it the false as a substitute. In this the true has a chance to survive and even conquer the false. But in apostasy there is ignoring, dismissing, denying the true with no substitute. Apostasy is the most subtle, insidious, and disastrous of all the forms of attacks on the Bible. These are days of the apostasy. The "mystery of lawlessness doth already work." "Certain men are creeping in unawares, denying the Lord Jesus." Many in the churches "will not endure sound doctrine, but after their own lusts are heaping to themselves teachers, having itching ears who are turning away from the truth unto fables." They are "departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons." To deny these conditions is to prove our ignorance; to ignore them is to demonstrate our shallow insincerity; to evade them is to brand ourselves with cowardice.

As a denomination, we may with pardonable pride rejoice that this leaven of false doctrine is as weak as it is in the meal of the Word of God in our beloved church. Our ministry is comparatively free from its permeating influence. Our educational leadership is purging it out continually. Our literature maintains a commendable attitude of vigilance against it. THIS FACT OUGHT TO BE HERALDED FAR AND WIDE! It ought to be sounded forth from the pulpit. It should be given headline prominence in all our literature and publications. It should be proclaimed from every conference platform. It would be the best publicity the church could put out. Such declarations would be in perfect harmony with our historical and present position as a denomination. We have nothing to lose and everything to gain by it. It would draw unto the church the Bible-loving, Bible-believing, and Bible-living Christians. Why pussyfoot or soft-peddle the fact that the Brethren church is comparatively free from the apostasy?

However, there is enough of this leaven of the apostasy in our church to give us grave concern and thoughtful vigilance. Under the guise of assumed superior scholarship or pretended honest doubting or plea for toleration or masquerade or false personal license of interpretation, there are a few who would sow the seed of error, unbelief, and liberalism in our church. The hour is at hand in our history when, in the "care of all the churches", insincere preachers must be prevented from exploiting the churches. They must be prevented from using the church, either in the field of evangelism or as pastors, as tide-overs until they receive their appointments in other religious bodies. Unsuspecting churches must be protected from them. The future of the Brethren church depends more than in any other one thing upon the purity of the stream of doctrine that flows from her pulpits, pews, college, seminary, and publications.

In view of this doctrinal problem, we therefore recommend that a frequent and prominent place be given constantly in all our literature to the message of the Brethren ministry. Not as the declaration or establishing of a creed, but, as the trustees of our College have declared, "as the basis of our teaching." In the latest Seminary Quarterly of our College, it is given such prominence. It ought to thus appear in our church paper and Sunday school publications frequently. It should be printed in our church calendars, song books, and in every way be kept before our church and the public.

Moreover, because we are a Whole Gospel church, we need a constant and emphatic declaration of our distinctive ordinances. Two years ago, after visiting practically every individual church in our denomination, Dr. Yoder said in his Moderator's report, "With the passing of the stalwart heroes of the first generation of the church, there is less emphasis placed upon the importance of observing the ordinances as they were delivered." This charge is true! It presents a challenge to our ministry today. Then Dr. Yoder make this recommendation,—"I therefore recommend first of all that our pastors and editors give us at least once a year a systematic and thorough exposition of the ordinances, their form and spirit." This was unanimously and enthusiastically adopted in 1925. What did we do about it? Pastors, have you once a year systematically and thoroughly set forth the ordinances thus? Editors, has such a systematic and thorough exposition of the ordinances appeared yearly in your publications? If not, why not? It was just such a doctrinal number of the Brethren Evangelist that won me to the Brethren church. Because the need is just as imperative, I therefore make the recommendation of Dr. Yoder, word for word, as a part of this message to this Conference

Distinctive Christian Character

Involved in the "care of all the churches" is the problem of distinctive Christian character and life. The Disciples were called, "Christians", because there was a striking similarity between the Christ they preached and their lives. The greatest human asset of the apostolic church was a distinctive Christian character. Its members were, "a peculiar people, noted for good works." They had "favor with all the people" because the people "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus." They maintained a separateness and distinctiveness of life in the midst of a "crooked and perverse generation." They were separatists. The winsome, attractive, irresistible magnet of the early church was Christ manifested in distinctive character and life. No marvel that thousands, dissatisfied with the emptiness of the false religions of the day and seeking the personification of truth in life, rushed into the church. There was a definiteness, a clearness, an emphasis about the lives of the early Christians which impressed all.

Today, we need the same type of character and conduct in the church. Works of righteousness must be maintained as the evidence and product of our justification by faith in Christ. We must "be not conformed to this world, but be transformed by the renewing of our mind." We must "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." We must "be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." The preaching and teaching of the whole Gospel must be followed by its practical demonstration in living. Unless our distinctive doctrines produce a distinctive character and life, they lose their appeal and prove us to be hypocrites. Involved therefore in the "care of all the churches" is the problem of the compromising, worldly, line-of-least-resistance church member. The Brethren church has believed and taught non-swearing from her origin, yet the number of oath-bound fraternity members is increasing in her membership and even invading her ministry. She has maintained that the teaching of an artificial covering of the Church of the Brethren as an interpretation of 1 Corinthians II is erroneous, yet she is rejecting the only other plausible and possible interpretation of this passage, that of the long hair of woman as the natural covering. In the deepest of sincerity and love, we ask this conference, "What are we doing with the gospel principles of non-conformity, non-resistance, and non-swearing?"

We believe that the best method to maintain this distinctiveness of Christian character and conduct is to develop the spiritual life of the individual Christian to that point of power, satisfaction, and victory which will naturally lead the Christian to choose the spiritual instead of the carnal. Neither legislation nor discipline will accomplish it. Rev. Samuel Horton of England recently said, "There is grave danger today of placing too much emphasis on mechanics and too little on dynamics." He declared that the greatest need of the church is "a revitalization of the prayer meeting and a rebuilding of her altars."

We therefore recommend that this conference establish and appoint a commission on the promotion of the Spiritual life. This commission shall carry on a vigorous campaign of publicity and promotion in every way possible to stimulate and sustain the victorious life possible in Christ through the Holy Spirit. It shall give special emphasis to Bible study and prayer, but shall include in its program of publicity emphasis upon all the divinely ordained means of grace and power. Its mission shall be, not to investigate and report but to promote the spiritual life of the individual Christian. We advise that this commission consist of seven members of "good report and full of the Holy Ghost." The advising and arranging for Bible conferences and Victorious Life conferences would be excellent methods of accomplishing the purposes of this commission on the Promotion of the Spiritual Life.

Evangelism and Evangelization

The divine order in the Holy Scriptures is doctrine, character, service. Belief and acceptance of the doctrines of the Word will produce a distinctive character and life which will be translated into Christian service. We believe that the mission of the church is evangelization of the world and Evangelism in relation to the individual. The first great Conference of the church held in Jerusalem so declared. The minutes of this Conference are recorded in Acts 15. The question of the "care of all the churches" was that of the hour. After long and serious deliberation,—after sincere seeking for and yielding to the guidance of the Holy Spirit, this verdict was reached relative to the mission of the church in this dispensation, "God for the first time did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name." It was world evangelization and individual evangelism. The early church had nothing to do with spiritual narcotics. She believed her supreme mission was to win the individual to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. She believed that her task was to develop the hidden life of the individual. She realized under divine guidance that the social order could not become more Christian than the spirituality of the individual lives of those composing it forced it to be. This principle has never been changed in God's Word. Only as individual Christians as units of the social order function for Christ can there ever be any Christianizing of anything. You can poultice the canker sores of the social order with a sort of Christianized ethical plaster, but the most you will accomplish will be to spread the diseases. Psycho-pathological smackery will never cure sin.

Now, the Brethren church is peculiarly shut in to the evangelistic method of maintaining her existence and insure her future. We do not build up our membership by the unscriptural baptism of infants. The only way we can increase our membership is to win souls to Christ and lead them into full obedience to his Word in Christian baptism. We must be evangelistic or we die! Our evangelistic program must be of that type which will produce not just uplifted hands and signed cards, but Christian baptism and confirmation. In the "care of all the churches", the individual member must be made to feel a personal responsibility for the lost. Somehow, the Brethren church must be overwhelmed with a vision and passion for the lost or she has no future and her present is jeopardized.

We therefore recommend that this conference establish and appoint a Commission on Evangelism of five members whose duty shall be the promotion of a scriptural and energetic campaign of urgency in every way possible to inoculate the membership of the Brethren church with the apostolic vision and passion and pungency for winning lost souls. This commission shall cooperate in the most hearty manner with the Evangelistic and Bible Study League. We advise that it give special attention in its publicity to visitation evangelism as a cooperative method with the old-fashioned revival meeting. It might also serve as a clearing house for churches seeking evangelists and evangelists seeking meetings.

Military Training in Schools and Colleges of the United States

The Facts and an Interpretation

By Winthrop D. Lane

(NOTE—In answer to a demand for some information on military training in schools and colleges we are re-publishing herewith in two installments a pamphlet of exceptional merit and timeliness. The churches, especially the pacifist group of which the Brethren church is one, are vitally affected by the war propaganda that goes out from the War Department, and there is need of information concerning it. The "Christian Monitor," Mennonite publication, says editorially in introducing this article to its readers, "It is our business as a church to testify against evils, as well as our business to witness to the truth. The first is negative, the second is positive. The ministry of both is our Christian duty . . . The day seems to loom in sight, when this liberty loving nation may go the way of militaristic Europe. This is just another of the downgrade signs seen in the American life." We cannot but look upon the militarizing influences being spread abroad in the land with grave concern, and it behooves the church to stand out against the subtle advances of this evil with unflinching courage and to raise its warning voice with truly prophetic wisdom and faithfulness.—Editor.)

(Concluded from last week)

Why This Pamphlet Has Been Written

The object of this pamphlet is to put facts into the hands of the American people. The public has not passed upon the question of military training for youth. It has registered opposition to the idea of universal compulsory military training, but upon the present near-substitute it has not spoken. Congress, under the emotion of a great European war, put into effect the National Defense Act, and in so doing authorized the President of the United States to introduce military training into civil educational institutions; the War Department is now showing what this may mean, but the general public has hardly known what was going on.

Now how did the thing get going? Nearly everyone knows that there are in the United States what are called "land grant colleges." These were established in pursuance of an act of Congress passed in 1862, called the Morrill Land Grant Act. This gave land to the states on condition that they establish colleges devoted primarily to teaching agriculture and the mechanic arts. Nearly every state in the union now has one such college. The state agricultural college is in most states the land grant institution, though in some the state university is. The law required that military training be offered in these colleges. All land grant schools have, therefore, ever since offered some form of military instruction to their students, but in many, if not in most, this was little more than a kind of military physical drill and was not taken seriously by the military authorities of the Government of the United States.

All this was changed, however, in 1916, when the European War raised the enthusiasm, and stirred the fears of military people in this country. That was the year of the great "preparedness" drive, when the country was swept by appeals to increase the money spent on defenses, augment the army and prepare for war in other ways. The idea of universal military training was put forward. The instrument was the National Defense Act. Though passed first in 1916, its provisions in regard to military education were not closely drawn, but in 1920 this Act was amended and enlarged so that it became the legislative base from which the military people executed their drive on the schools.

The R. O. T. C.

This act authorizes the President to establish and maintain in "civil education institutions" a Reserve Officers' Training Corps. This corps is to consist of various units or branches, infantry, cavalry, field artillery, signal corps, medical and others. In any given school there may be one or more units of this corps. The corps is to be established only in schools having at least 100 physically fit male students under military instruction, except that 50 may be the minimum in units other than infantry, cavalry and artillery. No unit is to be set up in any school until an officer of the Regular Army has been detailed by the War Department to serve as "professor of military science and tactics" and until the authorities of the school agree to maintain, as a minimum, a two years' course in military instruction. The law requires that such course, when entered upon by any student, must be a pre-requisite for graduation by him unless he be "relieved of this obligation by regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of War."

The law further specifies that the Secretary of War shall have authority to prescribe standard courses of military training for these youths, and that no unit of the R. O. T. C. can exist in any school that does not incorporate these courses into its curriculum. An extraordinary innovation this, that an American civil educational institution should relinquish to the War Department control over part of its teaching. The amount of teaching time thus farmed out is specified by the National Defense Act to be at least three hours a week for the first two years and at least five hours a week during the third and fourth year advanced courses.

The R. O. T. C. as thus established is divided into Junior and Senior divisions. Junior divisions are those conducted in high schools and preparatory schools, and senior divisions are in colleges and universities and some essentially military schools. In the senior division the work is divided into two parts, the basic course consists of training given during the first two years of a college term, and the advanced course of training received during the third and fourth years. Any student who enters upon the advanced course is required to agree in writing to continue in the R. O. T. C. for two subsequent years. He must also agree to attend one summer R. O. T. C. camp, either at the end of his third year in school or at the end of his fourth. The duration of this camp is six weeks.

Eligibility to receive this military instruction is limited to students who are citizens, who are "not less than fourteen years of age" and whose bodily condition indicates that they are physically fit to perform military duty, or will be, upon reaching military age. Here, as in the regular army the War Department does not care to waste time and money on any but the physically fit, despite its announcements, quoted later, that better citizenship is the object of the instruction given.

By the National Defense Act the President is authorized to appoint as a reserve officer of the Army of the United States any graduate of the senior division whose work has been satisfactory. To receive such appointment the student must take an oath to serve the United States as reserve officer for at least five years from the date of his appointment. Under the authority of this section 3,392 young men were made second lieutenants in the Army of the United States at the end of the school year of 1924.

Many land grant colleges have established R. O. T. C. units under the provisions of this Act. This gives them a fuller measure of government support and better facilities for giving military training than they had under the Morrill Act.

The law further authorizes the Secretary of War to support military training at schools other than those maintaining the R. O. T. C. units. This it does under section 55c. The Secretary of War may issue arms, tents, and other equipment, and may assign officers and enlist men to teach youths, and may prescribe the courses of instruction just as he does for schools having units of the R. O. T. C.

How Many Schools Give Training?

During the last school year, that of 1924-25, military instruction was given in more than 226 educational institutions in the United States. The exact number is difficult to obtain. Two hundred and twenty-six institutions maintained units of the R. O. T. C., but as just explained, the Secretary of War encourages military training in schools which do not establish R. O. T. C. For the school with R. O. T. C. Congress appropriated $3,818,020 and the number of students taking military instruction was 125,504. To these schools the War Department assigned 768 officers and 1,064 enlisted men to carry on training; it paid their salaries. Before 1916 there were no R. O. T. C. units and the number of officers engaged in military in schools was only 119.

Of the 226 R. O. T. C. institutions in 1925, 124 were of college or university rank, 63 were high schools and 39 were what are known as "essentially military schools."

Famous Colleges on the List

It is interesting to note the names of some of these institutions. Many of the best known colleges in the land are on the list. Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell, Leland Stanford, John Hopkins and the University of Pennsylvania are there; Northwestern University and the College of the City of New York are included. Nearly every state university in the country is on the list, including such famous ones as the University of Wisconsin, University of Michigan, University of Minnesota, Ohio State University and others. Among smaller colleges of high standing are Rutgers, Lehigh, Lafayette, Georgetown, Boston University and Western Reserve. The number includes many technical institutes, and practically all of the agricultural colleges. There is a large sprinkling of denominational and semi-denominational schools. In all of these colleges and universities military training is now an accepted reality.

High schools also in all parts of the country are given military training. Among the cities where this is the case, are Cleveland, Washington, Chicago, Louisville, Kansas City, Indianapolis, San Francisco and Salt Lake City. There is drill in more than forty others. Youngsters of fourteen and older drill with rifles and learn the technique of guard duty and patrolling.

Where Will the War Department Stop?

The War Department does not plan to stop with what it has already done. Its purpose, apparently, is to go on, putting military training into one school after another, until all boys over fourteen years of age enrolled in the educational institutions of the United States are being drilled to take part in war.

John W. Weeks, Secretary of War, called a conference in the City of Washington in November, 1922, to discuss ways of "realizing more fully the provisions of the National Defense Act." To this conference were invited many boys' club leaders, educators, athletic directors and others who, in the opinion of the Secretary, might be helpful in bringing more and more youths under the influence of military training. One of the spokesmen for the War Department at this conference was Brig. Gen. William Lassiter. If the main purpose of the Reserve

Relation of Pastor and Church Paper

By W. I. Duker

(Address in the Publication Session of the late General Conference)

TEXT: "That word, I say, ye know, which was published throughout all Judaea, and began from Galilee, after the baptism which John preached.—Acts 10:37.

Our Inspired Word has come to us through the printed page. The thoughts of God have been written down by the hands of man and kept for unborn generations by the continued efforts of those interested in others. Our debt to the printed page is so great that we have not the ability to give any adequate sense of appreciation. Only he, whose intelligence is dulled and whose appreciation is marred, fails in properly evaluating this blessed heritage.

The burdens thrust upon the shoulders of leaders today are too great if they attempt to bear them alone. Our lives are too full of many things for us to act as the source of all information for our flock. The interests of our local congregations are bound up with many things outside of our own little sphere. Our extreme congregationalism is alarming many who think. We cannot be a law unto ourselves. Our interests and our successes, our services and our benevolences are all bound up in our relationships with others. The congregations that find themselves busy in their own local problems to the extent that they are not informed relative to the problems of other congregations, soon have no problems of their own save the problems of their own existence. We must be tied together by some tangible cord or not only lose our pleasant relationships between congregations but our individual life as a congregation. Selfishness here is unpardonable because we be but stewards in our charges.

In our present organization we are not overburdened with the printed page. With but one church paper and that one not at all a large one, it is within the convenience of all to be entirely familiar with its every page. Information essential to the intelligent cooperation of all may be found in every edition. Spiritual food and devotional reading fills each weekly issue and yet we believe we are safe in saying that it, too, like the Word of God, is used to dignify the home not by its reading but rather by its appearance upon the center library table. Certainly it is a welcome guest in a sufficient number of homes to justify its continuance. It is indispensable as a "Binder" and an "informer" and there can be no question relative to its future life. But it is not being used to any degree of service, this service can easily be increased several hundred fold. Homes that do not have it and are not at all familiar with it, should be supplied and homes that have it but do not read it should be interested in it. Not alone for the sake of the homes but rather for the sake of the congregation and thus for the sake of the entire church. Little can be done until we have an intelligent and informed laity. (We may well include our Ministerium). What is happening out in California should be known and appreciated in every home in the brotherhood. How may their strength and loyalty strengthen and inspire our brotherhood unless we know of their faith? What is going on in the extreme East should be talked over at the family altar or at the weekly prayer meetings all over the brotherhood, but how may we know of their love and service else we are informed, and how may we be informed unless we utilize the methods of information now at hand?

Some of us remind others of the boy who insisted on having his pie with his plate full of meat and potatoes. Crying for his pie he is informed by a loving but wise mother that meat and potatoes must be eaten first. The mother well knows that when once well filled with meat and potatoes there is little desire for pie, or at least the desire is lessened and the need entirely gone. Some of us are insisting that we must spend more money on our church paper, and by that they mean that it must be changed and be "made over." But brethren, first let us see to it that it is appreciated as it is and then possibly this desire shall have gone. Certainly any paper must keep abreast with the times but first of all it must be read and appreciated by its readers before any available improvement is assured. In speaking to many of its real friends we have found that those who really read and know it would be displeased at any change because it would be like changing the appearance of an old friend. We would that all of our people might so know our church paper.

Upon whom then does the greater burden of this work fall? Upon the editor, or the contributor? Upon the pastor or the laity? The editor can but print that which he finds upon his desk. The laity cannot be informed until they are interested. Surely it is evident that the pastors who have of their own volition accepted the leadership of their flocks are the "key men" in this matter. How many of us have given a week each year which we may have designated as "Church Paper Week." We have "Mother's Day" and "Father's Week", "Labor Day", and "Saving Week", and yet we have not heard of "Evangelist Week." Surely it might be profitable to spend one week out of the fifty-two in which we might emphasize and enlarge upon the church paper in the minds of our people. We believe we are safe in saying that in some of our pulpits the church paper is not named once during the entire year. At least not in a way that might incite the interest and awaken the desire to make it a welcome weekly visitor. Not long ago we observed one of our brethren making a "stump speech" in which he was not lauding our paper. Rather the opposite was his theme. And yet to my personal knowledge, he had no experience in editing a paper and had made no effort to encourage his people to make its acquaintance. Surely this is not pleasing and should be discouraged. We need the paper but we must have cooperation before this need is supplied.

We learned of a plan some time ago that we can well recommend to others, a plan that was used with profit and pleasure by a minister interested in his people more than he was interested in himself. This minister, after reading one of the sermons found in the Evangelist, a sermon by one of our outstanding ministers, went before his people with this sermon. Holding the paper in his hand he gave the name and church of the minister, told them of his earnestness and service and then read the sermon for his morning service. It was as though that minister from afar, had called and spoken to, that congregation that Sunday morning. There was no effort of sailing under another's colors; in fact it had been announced upon the previous Sunday that this sermon would be read the following Sunday. The people were delighted, the minister was unselfish and the paper had served. We hunt through book-stalls for the latest sermon outlines by men whom we do not know and forget to introduce our well known fellow pastor when we have him right at our right hand all week. In my judgment every sermon that has sufficient merit to find its place in our weekly paper should be given orally to our people at some time during the week.

When we contemplate the infinite value of our church paper, when we think of the work that must be done, when we see the growing tendency of our becoming more and more a number of isolated units, when we recognize the fact that our only success lies in the success of our other local congregations, then are we constrained to feel that the pastor and the church paper are insolubly related, and that this relation must be continued if either will prosper. Our people are clambering for news. They delight in seeing themselves in print. Time and time again have we been kindly remonstrated with by our people and some one has said, "Why don't some one write?" We explain it and they are silenced for a time but our responsibility remains. Indifference must be overcome, a greater attitude of active cooperation must be cultivated and together the pastor and the church paper must come into their own.

Military Training in Schools

Officers' Training Corps, he said, were to produce reserve officers, then "our efforts should be especially directed towards the expansion both in the number of colleges reached and in students enrolled." If, on the other hand, the main purpose were to give the benefits of military instruction to a great number of boys and young men, then "the system ought to be expanded so as to give all young men attending both schools and colleges the opportunity of having this form of training and not confine it" to the institutions then maintaining such courses. Thus, whichever purpose was regarded as primary, the object was expansion. General Lassiter pointed out that "less than one-fifth" of the colleges in the country of the United States had R. O. T. C. units at that time, and plainly intimated that the percentage should be raised. With respect to secondary schools he was even more explicit, declaring that there were "at least 1,200 secondary schools where junior units might be maintained."³

Another spokesman for the War Department, General Pershing, said that it was "our fervent hope" that out of the conference there held might come "plans and policies which could be applied to our public schools everywhere." And General Pershing made an even more significant remark. He seemed to see a substitute for universal military service in the R. O. T. C. and C. M. T. C. "That we have not adopted the principle of universal military service," he said, "renders it highly essential that training which leads up to and, as far as possible includes preparation for military service should be popularized by all available methods." In similar vein Secretary Weeks in an address at Lehigh University spoke of "the gradual development of the idea that it is the proper action for every self respecting young American to give a portion of his time during his youth to preparation for effective service if his country should ever need it."⁴

Training for Citizenship—Or to be Soldiers?

A large part of military training, including the C. M. T. C., is sold to the public or to the college student by much talk about its being training for citizenship. It is better psychology to call it that than to say that it is training for war. Gen. Pershing remarked that it must "be popularized by all available methods." Compare what is said concerning the R. O. T. C. to the American fathers and mothers, to army officers, and to students.

Our Worship Program

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

YOUTHFUL RELIGIOUS DEVOTION—2 Chron. 34:1-7. "While he was yet young," Josiah "began to seek after God." Beginning early he could devote an unwasted life and unimpaired powers to the service of God. In consequence it is not surprising that he became so abundantly fruitful in the moral reformation of the nation. It pays now as much as then to enter upon the divine life in early youth.

TUESDAY

PURGING AND RESTORING—2 Chron. 34:8-13. Josiah followed the illustrious example of Hezekiah in cleansing the house of the Lord. But it was not enough to destroy idolatry; the service and worship of the true God must be restored. Many of our churches need repair, but not infrequently the worship activities that go on within need purifying and spiritualizing even more.

WEDNESDAY

YOUTHFUL WAYWARDNESS—2 Chron. 33:1-10. It is said that Manasseh "did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord." The same complaint is being made concerning many of our present-day youths. But much of youthful waywardness today is traceable to causes similar to those that likely lay back of Manasseh's wickedness, i. e., he came under the influence of idolatrous and wicked men, when he began to reign, at the age of twelve, and was led astray.

THURSDAY

THE PRODIGAL'S REPENTANCE—2 Chron. 33:11-20. Manasseh would not hear the word of the Lord, so he must feel the hand of the Lord in chastisement. In the solitude of imprisonment he had time for reflection. As Micah (6:9) says, "When the rod spake he heard." But his repentance was genuine, as is evidenced by the fact that he tried to undo the wrong he had done. May God make the repentance of every one of us as genuine.

FRIDAY

ISRAEL'S REPENTANCE—Hosea 14:1-9. Israel had sinned grievously and the prophet had appealed to the people to repent and to pray for the removal of their sins,—not part, but all. The people had reached a place where they desired the deliverance from "all iniquity." Too many there are who, when they become Christians, desire to cling to some pet sin, some evil habit, some sinful pleasure or associate.

SATURDAY

THE SUFFERING SERVANT—Isa. 53:1-9. This is a prophecy concerning the character and mission of the coming Messiah, who is the "arm of the Lord" stretched out to destroy sin. He is to be a rejected Christ in that comparatively few will believe on him, and a suffering Christ in that the consequences of sin are to fall upon him.

SUNDAY

THE TRIUMPHANT CHRIST—Isa. 53:10-12. The death of Christ was no afterthought, but a pre-arranged plan of the Father. He did not delight in the suffering of his Son, but it was the only means of saving a lost race. He shall see the blessed fruits resulting from his suffering and feel amply repaid. It shall be the greatest of all victories. All nations shall come under his sway.—G. S. B.

LESSON LIGHTS

(From "Illustrated Quarterly")

Circumstances. Solomon at last had turned from the Lord, the God of Israel, and had not kept his covenant and his statutes (see 1 Kings 11:9-13). The result was that Solomon's people were ready to rebel against him, and the kingdom was honeycombed with discontent, and many were feeling the idolatrous influence of their rulers. Rehoboam, the heir to the throne, was far worse. Nothing was possible to be done except to divide the kingdom in order to save the nation and enable it to carry out God's plan to make Israel the means of proclaiming the true God. Bitter grievances were being felt and resented by the people all through the empire. The burden of taxation was very great, and bore especially hard upon the northern tribes, who, being at a distance from the capital, could not partake of the wealth that enriched the leaders near the throne. Especially repugnant and burdensome was the levy of forced labor for Solomon's great works. An example is given in 1 Kings 5:13, 14.

Rehoboam seems to have been the natural heir to the throne. Judah accepted him. But, as in the case of Saul, David and Solomon, at least in Jerusalem, the people had a voice in the selection of their king. Accordingly, the tribes were summoned to meet at the old northern capital, Shechem, to confirm the successor of Solomon. The northern tribes were determined to obtain a charter of rights that would relieve them of their burdens, as the price of their submission. For Solomon had forced them to give their unpaid labor upon his great buildings, and these free and independent Ephraimites were reminded of their ancestors' slavery in Egypt. They were shrewd enough to send for their brilliant sympathizer, Jeroboam, whom Solomon had banished to Egypt. They were ready to enforce their just demands. Rehoboam, apparently attended by a small force (Kent), went to confer with them. Jeroboam was their spokesman. Rehoboam had every opportunity to continue and increase the prosperity and usefulness and happiness of his kingdom. He could spread abroad among the nations the knowledge of the true God and true religion. He was placed upon a mountain top, whence the light might shine on many nations.

Rehoboam Sought Advice, both of the old and the young; but he was not wise enough nor good enough to make the right, safe and wise choice. One's character, already formed, is a powerful factor in such emergencies. There is no time to prepare a new character. Rehoboam had formed the habit of taking bad advice when it fitted his inclination, and so he took it at his life's crisis. A fire, a railroad accident, a shipwreck, a battle, bring out the real natures of men, just as an unexpected visit discloses good or poor housekeeping.

The Old Men's Counsel was good, because (1) it was right, and the right is always wise. (2) It was good for the people, giving them their rights and making them happy. (3) It would bring the highest prosperity and glory to the kingdom. (4) It would encourage the virtues of the king himself, and keep him closer to personal righteousness. (5) It would bind the people to him in loving loyalty.

The Young Men's Counsel was bad, because (1) it was wrong. (2) It was selfish.

THE NEW FRONTIER

A new magazine was established two years ago which deals with frontier life in every part of the world. The first number of the magazine had a charming bit of verse written by Berton Braley which spiritualizes the adventurous thoughts of the frontier:

"There's always a new frontier.

For the fellow who goes to find it,
Though the boundaries are not clear
And the maps have not outlined it,
It's the place that is just beyond
Wherever you chance to be,
That is touched by a magic wand
Of wonder and mystery!

"There's always a new frontier:

For one it is lone and far;
Another may find it near—
Just a jaunt in his flivver car,
It's the line where the humdrum ends,
The realm where the dreams begin,
Where the blue horizon bends
Over ports where ships come in!

"There's always a new frontier;

And it may be many a mile
Or close to the Now and Here
And bound by a woman's smile.
It's the goal of your heart's desire,
The hope that you hold most dear;
Till your soul has lost its fire
There's always a new frontier."

—Expositor.

(3) It was opposed to God. (4) It would injure his kingdom. (5) It would keep him with bad companions. (6) It lost him his kingdom.

Getting and Taking Advice. "He who was taught only by himself," said Ben Jonson, "had a fool for his master." The more capable a man is of getting along without advice, the more anxiously will he seek it out and the more carefully will he weigh it. He will know that, as Mazzini wrote, "good counsel has no price." But a foolish man, if like Rehoboam he asks advice, does not really want it, but seeks only to be buttressed in his own foolish desires. "It is not advice, but approval, which we crave," said Boufflers; and the poet Hood declared that "to attempt to advice conceited people is like whistling against the wind." This is one reason why severe though wise criticism so often makes the one who is being criticized angry even if he has asked for criticism. Wise advice, if followed, adds another person's experience and judgment to our own; one becomes twice a man, and one's life wins double success.

Turning Points in Life. We all, like King Rehoboam, come to turning points—places where the way of life parts before us, and eternal destinies depend on the choice we make, whether we choose God or the world, Christ or self; to do right and be true in the hour of temptation, or to walk in the brilliant and attractive way of sin that leads to death. And usually we do not realize the importance of the crisis, but only know what is right or wrong. To decide aright is to gain a kingdom; to decide wrong is to lose it. The only way to be ready for the great choices is to choose wisely in small affairs. Be patient in little trials, and you will be patient under great provocation. Be faithful in little duties, and you will be faithful in great emergencies. When God would write the state papers of the universe, he chooses a pen that has written well the humdrum business letters. Opportunities that come to us are unnoticed or unattainable, unless we have been faithfully growing into a power to use them. What is an opportunity to sing, or to be sea-captain, or to open a large business, to one who has acquired no fitness for those things? All the falling apples in the world would not have suggested to Newton the law of gravitation, nor would all the steaming kettles in England have awakened in Watt the idea of the steam-engine if they had not been prepared by previous faithful study and work.

A Heartening Example

Editor Routh gives the following heartening report of the courageous stand which some young Christians in Texas have recently taken:

"Recently a high school boy in a Texas city was invited by some young people to a dance. He said, 'I will not go to dances'. They asked him why. He said, 'I will not go because I don't want to dance and for the further reason that my father is a good Christian man and I do not want to bring reproach upon his good name.' The young people respected his convictions and said, 'Very well, we will not have the dance.' A high school girl asked him to take her to a dance. He gave her a similar answer, she, too, was influenced by his convictions and did not go to the dance. Another high school boy was asked by a committee on entertainment to help an arrange for a dance. He said, 'There will be no dancing if I have anything to do with it.' They did not have a dance. If we can have a multitude of young people like this in our high schools, we shall go a long way towards stopping dancing and other questionable amusements in the high schools. But back of all this was the right sort of home training. The solution of the problems of this generation will be found largely in Christian homes."

Have you seen anything more reassuring in a long while? And isn't it likely true that there are some young people in your

"Every's" for Endeavorers

By Rev. W. A. Redfield

- Every officer should ask and answer these questions:
What is my task?
What are my best tools?
What are the best possible methods?
- Every member of the Executive Committee should know:
What are we constituted to do?
With what do we have to work?
- Every committee should answer intelligently (by doing):
How can we best do our work?
What is our particular task? (What justifies our existence?)
With what are we to do that task?
How can we accomplish our task most advantageously?
- Executive Committee "Every's":
Every committee a plan and programme for every month.
Every committee busy upon every detail of that programme.
Every committee a written report of progress with the programme every month.
- For the Whole Society:
Every officer active and effective.
Every committee at work on its task.
Every task worked at continually, or done.
Every member a job on the society programme.
Every responsibility met, including:
The year's programme outlined and executed.
The budget planned and raised.
State and national programmes incorporated locally.
All regularly scheduled meetings held.
The recruiting and training of new members.
Every work planned, and every plan worked.
Every day in every way our society is growing more effective in Christian Endeavor.

Stories and Poems for Opening Exercises

With a vision, no doubt, of countless beset teachers and impatient children poring over rows of books in search of a story or poem for school or church program, Elizabeth Ohr, who heads the School Libraries Division of the Indianapolis Public Library, has prepared an index called "Stories and Poems for Opening Exercises." It has just been published by the American Library Association.

Not only has Miss Ohr compiled a list of works suitable for delivery at opening exercises, but she has grouped them under some two hundred headings, alphabetically arranged, so that if any exercise of this kind is to fall about February 22, one may look under Flags, Independence Day, Memorial Day, Patriotism or George Washington for material which bears, in some sense, on the topic of Washington.

Other subjects, taken at random, are

Mystery Stories, Love of Home, Bees, Internationalism, Cheating, Nonsense Stories. Nature stories and poems are abundant, as are works on Animals, the Bible, Flowers, Courage, Selfishness, Spring and Wind. All of the ordinary needs are filled, and many of the less usual. Energy is there, as are Advice, Egotism, Frogs, Ingenuity, Good Luck, Loquacity. The important holidays are well observed—the New Year, Valentine's Day, Easter, April Fools' Day, May Day, Decoration Day, the Fourth of July, Labor Day, Hallowe'en, Thanksgiving, Christmas.

A key lists forty-one books in which the recommended selections are to be found.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Zacchaeus, a Public Officer Who Entertained Jesus Luke 19:1-10

Once upon a time there lived in the city of Jericho a little short man and his name was Zacchaeus. When Zacchaeus was a young man he wished, Oh, so much, that he might be rich. He felt that if he could have lots of money he would be very happy. Now the truth of the matter is that having money doesn't really make people happy but Zacchaeus did not realize that and he kept wishing and wishing that he might be rich. Finally, Zacchaeus succeeded in getting a job that gave him a chance to get rich. He became tax collector. Now Zacchaeus knew that tax collectors often became rich by collecting more taxes than they were supposed to collect. So Zacchaeus said to himself, "If the other tax collectors cheat the people that they are taxing, why should not I do the same? It will make me so happy if I can become rich. I shall do just like all the rest of the tax collectors. I shall collect the money for the government but I shall add some to the amount that the government needs and all that I add I shall keep for myself."

So several years passed by. Zacchaeus kept getting more and more money for himself and as he got the money he invested it. His bank account became larger and larger until he realized that he had done the thing that he had thought that he wanted to do. He had become a rich man. But somehow as Zacchaeus sat in his big home that he had built, he did not feel a bit happy. He did not even feel as happy as he had felt when he had been a boy wishing to be rich. He sat in his home and looked at the beautiful carpets and the beautiful draperies that he had bought but they did not make him happy. Just when he thought that he was going to enjoy his wealth the most he would remember some of the people from whom he had collected that money. He knew that they needed it, yes, many of them needed it much worse than he did.

One day when Zacchaeus was down town in the city of Jericho, he saw that there was a very great excitement of some kind among the people. He called a man that he knew and said to him, "Why are the people so excited?"

The man said, "Why, haven't you heard? A wonderful teacher and preacher is passing through our town today and everyone wants to see him. His name is Jesus and he is coming along this road before long."

Zacchaeus had heard of Jesus before and so he became interested at once. He kept thinking, "I want to see Jesus but how can I do it? The road is so full of people and I am so much smaller than the other people." As he walked along thinking, suddenly a bright idea came into his head. He decided to climb a tree that stood by the road. Then he would be able to see Jesus as well as anyone else. He found a tree and it wasn't long before he saw a crowd of people coming, so he climbed up in the tree. Oh, how he wished that he might be with those people who were near the Master, hearing him speak and seeing the many wonderful things that he did. He felt lonely, for he realized that with all his money he had no friends. He had not been honest with people so how could he expect them to be his friends? So as Zacchaeus watched Jesus draw near, he was feeling very unhappy and wishing that he had friends who loved him.

As Jesus drew near to the tree, Zacchaeus looked and looked at the Master's face and Zacchaeus saw so much love and kindness in that face that he wished more than ever that he might talk to Jesus. Jesus reached the tree and Zacchaeus was just beginning to think, "Now I'll never see him again" when Jesus said, "Come down out of the tree quickly Zacchaeus, for I am going to your house."

Then Zacchaeus was truly happy. He was so glad to have Jesus go to his house. So Zacchaeus had his chance to talk to Jesus and to enjoy the friendship and love of Jesus. Having Jesus so kind to him made Zacchaeus want to be kind to others, too, so he said, "Lord, I am going to give half of my goods to the poor and I am going to give back the money to those from whom I have taken too much taxes. Only instead of just giving the money I got from them I am going to give them four times as much as I took."

Then Jesus was happy because Zacchaeus had changed his way of living, and from that day on Zacchaeus was happy because Jesus was his friend. Then many others became his friends also, and so Zacchaeus found that it was friends instead of money that bring happiness.

August 21, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Again have I been tardy in compiling for you letters from the field.

Under date of May 28th, Mrs. Hathaway writes, "You will notice by the heading that we are at Bossangoa during the absence of Brother and Sister Sheldon. We have now had an interval of seven weeks without mail, consequently it has been a long time since we have heard from you.

"Everyone at Yaloke was well when we left." "We are at present at Dantona which is about half an hour by tepoi from the Bossangoa concession proper. We have decided it would be better to move on the concession, occupying the store-house. Thus Mr. Hathaway will be closer to his work, will spend less time upon the road, and we will have more time together. We will probably finish moving Monday. We shall probably be at Bossangoa several weeks.

"Shortly now you will, we trust, be on your way back to us. How we shall rejoice at your coming. Literally we hope to kill the fatted calf!

"We are praying for you and trust the Lord will undertake for you, supplying your every need."

Under date of June 7th, Mrs. Hathaway adds, "It is several days since I wrote to you, thinking I would have a chance long before this to mail your letter.

"A Kare runner has just come in, and is going on to Bossangoa. He brought us news of the birth at Bassai, June 4th, of Kenneth Everett Sheldon, weight 8½ lbs.

"We are now living in the storehouse on the Bossangoa concession, having screened it for temporary occupation. The Lord has richly blessed us while here and we have been very happy. This is a beautiful place, and the longer one is here the more one appreciates the beauty. The large Ouahm River which borders the concession makes it very attractive.

"Fish and hippopotami are plentiful.—There are numerous deer.

"We trust that you will be strong for the voyage, and that the Lord will raise up some one to come with you. I don't like to think of your traveling so far alone. But he always has undertaken for you in the past, and I believe will this time. I know one of your favorite texts is "He is faithful."

Mr. Hathaway writes from "Bellevue" (which we presume to be the name of the Bossangoa concession) under date of June 14th:

"The four room house at this station is now about completed, but it must dry a month or so before Brother and Sister Sheldon can return from Bassai," bringing the baby into it. I have just written them to this effect.

"The house is built of brick clay by putting up about a foot per day without poles and sticks as is customary.

"Brother Sheldon will plaster it with shell lime, gathered from the river. This is the regular lime used in Bangui. The house has a beautiful foundation of real stone with a cement base, so that the white ants cannot enter the wall without being seen.

"We rejoice in the fact that you are soon to be here. We are counting on God's grace and strength to bring this to pass."

Under date of June 5th Sister Jobson writes from Bassai,

"Little Kenneth Everett Sheldon arrived on June 4th. Mr. Jobson and I remarked on its being the fourth anniversary of Brother Gribble's death.

"Our school opened June 1st with 51 in attendance. We have thirty-five on the station but the food is quite hard to secure. We have a special class for the evangelists and they are making wonderful progress.

"We are so happy to hear that the money has been supplied for the Bassai church.

"Brother Kennedy is building a chapel in Yoforg's village and is exposed to the sun, hence is suffering somewhat.

"We hear every mail concerning our children. They are well and happy. God is good. We often wish for the children, but it is for his sake that we are separated. What a glorious day it will be when we shall know no separations! How much grace you will need to part from Marguerite after having had her again!"

Mrs. Tyson writes from Yaloke under date of June 19th:

"The school boys in one year's time have made wonderful progress. It has certainly been the wonderful blessing of the Lord upon the work."

"Leprosy is on the increase around Yaloke, not only the anaesthetic but also the tubercular type.

"It has been for some time my privilege to teach the evangelists. I enjoy the work so much. I am using Dr. Torrey's book, 'What the Bible Teaches.' I have faith to believe that the hearers will be strengthened by his word, for we have his promise that it will accomplish that whereunto it is sent.

"The boys seem so burdened when they pray for you, especially when you are on the BIG BOAT.

"May the Lord keep and guide you until you reach your desired destination."

A brief card from Brother DeLozier, written from Marseilles tells of his plans for visiting Spain and Italy.

Meanwhile we are expecting the arrival of Brother and Sister Taber in September. There is a great void for them to fill in this little apartment for Marguerite and my sister left eleven days ago. They will not arrive in New York before the 26th. I shall turn over the apartment to Brother and Sister Taber when they arrive, rent an adjoining room for myself during the brief time that we shall be together, and leave in time to finish my outfitting and packing at the post. From the latest letters from the Board, I infer that the date of October 15th will be acceptable for my sailing. I presume this will be from Antwerp, as the Nile route is too expensive, and the automobile route via Douala not yet fully completed. These circumstances seem to shut me up to the Congo route.

My address will continue to be 42 Rue Pierre Nicole, Paris, Vme. All letters written before October first should be addressed here. As Brother and Sister Taber will have the same address, I might speak also for them. They will forward my own letters which arrive while yet in Europe to my port of debarkation. Letters written after October 1st should be addressed to me at Yaloke par Boali, par Bangui, Afrique, Equatorial Francaise.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

"WE AIN'T GOT NO BIBLE AT OUR HOUSE!"

W. W. Bradshak, missionary of the American Sunday School Union, had the following experience in the mountains of Kentucky:

One day a boy asked me to ride with him. He told me that he was hauling the mail to the next village, and that he was paid $12.00 a month for his work.

"How do you spend your money?" I asked.

"Well, I help support my mother and sister, and the balance I am saving to buy me a rifle."

"The day I get it I am going to kill old man Yelvington. If he should die, I am going to shoot his oldest son; and if he jumps the country, I will kill the next."

"What in the world do you mean, my boy?" I asked in amazement.

He replied: "Just what I tell you! Old man Yelvington killed my father, and the day of the funeral I swore I would fix him. I have nearly enough money to get the rifle, and when I do, something is going to drop over yonder; you know what the law of revenge is."

I was nearly speechless with astonishment. "My young friend," said I kindly, "don't you know if you kill that man you will have to fly from your home, go to prison, or be hanged? Do you know what an awful thing murder is? What does God's Word say about it?"

He answered, "We ain't got no Bible at our house."

I talked earnestly and tenderly with him, bringing out the gospel rule of forgiveness. He was deeply moved, and tears were in his eyes. Before we parted he promised to give up the dreadful plans. I took a Bible from my bag, wrote his name in it and gave it to him. Some months after it was the means of a conversion; also that of his mother and sister. It pays to teach the children God's Word.

That little Bible saved the old man's life, it saved our State a murder trial, it saved a boy from becoming a criminal; and it cost twenty-five cents. One good book, one kind word, often saves a child from the downward career.—Selected.

Our faith is not the condition of the Savior's love, but it is the condition of our joyful participation in his love. It is not a condition imposed from the outside by some despotic authority, but a condition in the very nature of the case. It is not that Christ will not love unto the end unless we are faithful unto the end. It is rather that such enduring love should create in us enduring faith and hope, if we apprehend and accept the love.—Hugh Black.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Our National Organizations Back Ashland Endowment Campaign

We have come to the place that all our church organizations and churches realize that the future of our church is inseparably related to our College and Seminary.

THE FUTURE LEADERSHIP OF THE CHURCH DEPENDS ON ASHLAND AND THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH DEPENDS ON GOD AND THE MEN WHO ARE TO LEAD.

Both the National Sunday School Association and the Woman's Missionary Society are and have been giving splendid aid to the school. The W. M. S. in paying the salary of Dean Miller and the Sunday school $1500.00 a year toward the salary of Professor Stuckey.

Last year the W. M. S. gave $500.00 in cash toward the endowment and this year a note for $500.00, making their total gift $1,000.00 to the endowment.

The National Sunday School Association is giving $1,000.00 to the endowment. These organizations should be given the fullest support by all our churches, as they are contributing much to the work of the church, both in the homeland and the foreign field. IT IS OUR WORK AND WE ALL SHOULD SHARE IN IT.

The National Ministerial Association, which is composed of the ministers of our church, stands solidly behind the campaign. There is no one group in the church more concerned in the success of this campaign than our preachers. They realize the importance of the college to the church.

I WANT TO SAY RIGHT HERE, THAT I AM PROUD OF OUR MINISTERS AND WE NEED to give courage and encouragement to them in the hard task they face in these days. I have been given the fullest support and it is to them all honor is due as far as the success of this campaign to date is concerned.

The National Association is giving $1,000.00 to the endowment as a memorial to the school and a witness of their faith in the college and an appreciation of what the school means to our work.

The cash gift of $500.00 by the W. M. S. was reported last year, so that the total boost given to the dial by our National Societies is $2,500.00. W. S. BELL

PARIS TO MARSEILLES

It is Sunday afternoon and I am sitting in the park of Allees Meilhan, Marseilles. Here I am sheltered from the dazzling and penetrating sun of the "Midi" or south.

After one month at the Sorbonne in Paris, during which time I had the privilege of listening to France's best educators who were interpreting to us foreigners from nearly every nation, what the Sorbonne calls: "La civilization francaise."

Our lectures consisted of literature, art and history. Our afternoons were spent in gleaning French civilization from the cathedrals, the museums and many other places of interest in which Paris abounds.

At every turn Paris speaks the language of history. Her streets are so named as to almost constitute a course in history. Our system of numbering our streets seems both absurd and stupid to the French.

I had also the privilege of visiting the catacombs of Paris where repose the bones of three millions of people, many of whom died in the various street riots which were incident to the revolutions and changes of the government of France.

Having frequently taken my classes through Les Miserables, I was also glad to live a part of that great classic by a visit to the Paris sewers, and still another part later by my visit to Digne.

At 13:17 o'clock on Saturday, July 30th, I took P. L. M. train and 'dropped' south to Dijon where I remained a day and a night, going on to Lyons. Here I spent a little time seeing the city, especially from the basilique de Notre Dame-de-Fourviere which stands on a high elevation overshadowing the city at Westmont rises above Johnstown. On top the basilica is a circular enamel map explaining all the surrounding landscape including the snow-capped Mont Blanc 200 Kilometers away. A high power telescope mounted on a circular track enables one to bring everything into view on a clear day. Following the basilica I ascended to the top of the "Tour Metallique" which is modeled after the Eifel tower in Paris. The wind was blowing a gale and the tower swayed. My thoughts went back to the old U. S. A. and a bit of fear stole into me and I sure felt better when once more on solid ground.

I "dropped" on south to Grenoble and found myself in the midst of the Alps, the most beautiful mountain scenery thus far in my life. Great high peaks, chimney-like rocks, great massive overhanging boulders! A storm came up while I was there. A clap of thunder in what seemed an exceptionally angry tone, announced the coming of the storm. It was long in coming. Great black clouds gradually snagged themselves across the high elevations and I could almost imagine them as angry because of their wounds, and when it thundered I was made to think of Renan's description of the storms of Sinai.

The rain over, great banks of cumulus clouds hung in the high recesses of the rocky peaks. I took a picture, but alas, the light of the "midi" demands new ideas of kodak adjustment and so my picture only very imperfectly represents what I saw.

Very early one morning I started for Digne. Alps! Yes, I was just getting into them at Grenoble. Tunnels, loops, viaducts! At one place we looked down upon the cloud line and as we descended we passed through a mist which I think must have been the clouds.

Reached Digne about 1 P. M. or 13 o'clock, according to railroad schedules over here.

M. and Mme. Contesse soon showed their remarkable ability at making one welcome. I occupied a cot in the dormitory under the roof of the Gospel Hall.

There were 16 cots in the one room, occupied by 7 nationalities. We soon found a name for our sleeping quarters which during our stay there were known as "la caserne" or "the barracks."

There we talked, we read the Word of God, we prayed. Men poured out their souls in behalf of France, Africa, Belgium, but especially for France.

The addresses of the convention sounded what seemed to me to be the deepest spiritual note I have known.

With the great overshadowing system of Romanism and the great stone wall of free-thinking and indifference, I say, face to face with these obstacles, a French Protestant takes his religion seriously. It has a meaning. Many at the convention wore the Huguenot cross and they told me of the murder of a grandfather or of some other near relative, all martyrs to the faith after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

Standing thus on the very edge of the period of the martyrs, one senses a deep, true-ringing note of spirituality.

A prayer here becomes an agony, an outpouring of the heart. Little wonder then if occasionally even a man closes his prayer in sobs.

French Protestantism has a struggle and my "hat is off" to the promoters of such an oasis as Digne and Nogenet.

I spent a day at Digne and saw where Jean Valjean (Les Miserables) came into contact with the bishop and had a new chance at life. But . . . that picture of the Roman Catholic bishop, like the one in l'Abbe Constantin is a bit utopian, unless my observation tricks me.

From Digne I came on to Marseilles, accompanied by M. Kiener, a Swiss who is engaged in colportage work in France. We were met at the train by Mr. Bidmead, an Englishman who directs a colportage work in Marseilles.

Yesterday morning Kiener and I went to the Quidi des Belges, i. e., the wharf along the Mediterranean. Many gasoline launches were there and we got on "Charlot"—Charlie Chaplin. We were on our way to Chateau d'If seven kilometers out in Mediterranean. The sea was rough and Charlie cut up some real pranks not found in movies. (I don't know for sure, as I don't go to cinema). I wish I weren't in that boat which reared at an alarming angle and then nose dived at a still more alarming one, spraying us completely at the same time. My lips tasted quite salty the rest of the day.

But . . . alas, the engine stopped.

The boat soon turned into the trough and then we rolled and rolled and rolled.

The engine was started again, but soon stopped and thus we struggled with about 10 stoppings and crankings. Meanwhile one lady was feeding the sardines and shouting: "My God! what shall I do?" She lay flat in the bottom of the boat and grew as pale as death.

Two other ladies begged the boatman to turn back because they were scared nearly to death. But we finally gained the rocky shore of the island and climbed to the castle.

Here we lived over a part of the story of Alexander Dumas' "Monte-Cristo." We saw the hole which the prisoner was seven years in making by scratching rock and dirt with bits of dishes that he broke off. He reached shore "a la nage" as the guide put it, i. e., He swam to shore. But I hope the sea wasn't as rough as for us.

I have gone over quite a bit of the city here and have already learned that 132 francs and 20 hours of time will land me in Barcelona on the Spanish steamship line, Ibarra and Co. I plan to be in Barcelona, Wednesday, August 17th.

By the time this reaches you I should be somewhere in Italy or Switzerland or Belgium on my way back to Paris to make up my baggage and arrange all affairs for my embarkation on the Majestic September 14th.

I am thankful to our Heavenly Father for the safety, and for all the fine "coincidences" (which after all I interpret as his leading) which have thus far attended my journeys.

EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT of the EVANGELISTIC AND BIBLE STUDY LEAGUE

In looking over the work of the League for the past eight years we find that more than three thousand persons have publicly confessed the Lord Jesus Christ as their personal Savior and many lives have been rededicated to him for definite work, in meetings held by an evangelist working under the auspices of the League.

The past year we did not have an evangelist employed for full time.

Rev. A. V. Kimmell, president of the League did excellent work for the short time he was on the field.

Arrangements have already been made with Dr. J. C. Beal of Sunnyside, Washington to enter the evangelistic field immediately after close of our conference.

Any churches desiring a Bible conference or evangelistic meetings can arrange for same by seeing the president or secretary. Brother Beal needs no introduction to our people, as his years of service among us have proven him to be an able Bible teacher and preacher.

As a result of the recent election the following were elected as officers of the League:

A. V. Kimmell, President; J. Allen Miller, 1st Vice President; Orion E. Bowman, 2nd Vice President; Martin Shively, 3rd Vice President; N. H. Nielsen, Treasurer; Henry V. Wall, Secretary.

Directors

Louis Bauman, 3 years; R. Paul Miller, 3 years; Geo. C. Carpenter, 3 years; Chas. A. Bame, 3 years; Willis E. Ronk, 3 years.

A. E. Whitted was elected to fill the unexpired term of M. A. Witter (deceased), and H. M. Oberholtzer was elected to fill the place of A. E. Thomas.

The following men are directors of the League as a result of a former election:

Alva J. McClain, Chas. H. Ashman, W. S. Bell, Wm. A. Gearhart, Ed. L. Miller, Horace Kolb.

We desire to thank all who have made the work of the League possible, and earnestly request that you continue your prayers for The Evangelistic and Bible Study League that God will use it to glorify himself.

REED AND HEARST

Orville S. Poland, head of the Legal Department of the Anti-Saloon League of New York, issued the following statement:

The Hearst papers are publishing what they choose to call an expose of the efforts of the Anti-Saloon League to aid the cause of good government, to uphold constitutionally established law and to promote its enforcement. It is unfortunate that such purposes are foreign to the Hearst sympathies and evoke Hearst's condemnation. It is lamentable that the Hearst publications are not only anti-social but that they also exhibit an active hostility to men and movements that are social or civic in their purposes. Only Freud can explain the Hearst antipathy to altruism.

The source of Hearst's information about the Anti-Saloon League and his purpose in using it are worthy of mention. While it is true that nothing which Hearst has printed has been derogatory to the League, except his own conclusions, it is also true that the League did not furnish him with the information. Where then did he get it? Various League offices, including those in Washington, have been recently burglarized and rifled not once but several times. It has been necessary to invoke police protection of the files. It is of course possible that Mr. Hearst may have been a receiver of stolen documents, but I prefer not to credit this possibility.

I am forced to the perhaps more complimentary explanation that he got his information not from a burglar but from Senator Reed. The Reed Committee has had all this information; it was furnished voluntarily and without even questioning the right of the committee to information so foreign to the purpose of its investigation, that is, senatorial expenditures. The Anti-Saloon League felt that there was no more occasion to withhold information from this committee than would any similar organization such as the Red Cross or the Salvation Army. It is very clear that Senator Reed has released, for publication through the Hearst papers, the files of the governmental committee of which he is chairman.

Why then did he do this? It could scarcely be animus against the Anti-Saloon League because the Anti-Saloon League is against nobody but the bootleggers. Senator Reed, of course, has no reason for being against the Anti-Saloon League. But Senator Reed would like to be President and Mr. Hearst would like to have him. Hearst has of late been forced into a reluctant, unwilling and distasteful but grudging support of Smith. Hearst now knows that Smith has passed his crest and is on the down grade. It is a good time to kick him further down.

Even Tammany Hall is getting fed up on Al. Like a boy with a bag of gum-drops—the first few are powerful good, but enough is enough, even of gum-drops. Hearst knows the feeling of satiety which is permeating Tammany's headquarters. This is Hearst's chance to profit; he hasn't anything against the Anti-Saloon League; he can't really find any fault with any effort of the League to influence Congress in behalf of the people. For thirty years he has been bludgeoning Congress in behalf of Hearst.

Hearst finds in this occasion, that is, the disclosure of confidential governmental files by Reed, the chance to further the political fortunes of a willing Hearst tool.

It is not such a far cry to 1922 when Reed and his life and death fight for reelection to the Senate, and had to get, it is said, the financial support of Hearst in $5,000.00 lumps. It is even reported that he came clear to New York for one installment. From then out, as everyone knows, Reed has been Hearst's senatorial loudspeaker. Even now, Senator Reed with charming inconsistency is objecting to Frank Smith's profiting by the support of Mr. Insull in the same way that he, Reed, is said to have profited by the support of Mr. Hearst.

There have been those so short-sighted as to suggest that the publication by the Hearst papers of the "Ford Retractions" was in order to promote Mr. Ford's presidential ambitions. Such political prognosticators have overlooked the fact that Jim Reed is Ford's counsel and that Reed's is the labyrinthine intellect which directed the release of Ford's retractions under the Hearst auspices.

Were any further evidence of the new Reed-Hearst Entente necessary reference need but be made to the Hearst papers. Senator Reed goes to Texas and makes a speech of possible but dubious importance and yesterday it was reported to the extent of a full column in the New York member of the Hearst chain. Today one of the ubiquitous Hearst staff correspondents wires in from Black Hills, not that President Coolidge has caught another trout, but that "There is much of the Roosevelt in Jim Reed and the West likes him because he is a strong man."

I want to take this opportunity of expressing my thanks to Mr. Hearst for the publication of these articles. For the careful reader they emphasize the high purpose of the Anti-Saloon League, but that of course may be conceded. The more important thing is the evident and unmistakable attempt by Hearst to corral the wet support from the expiring Smith candidacy and transfer it bodily to Reed.

NEWS ITEMS OF THE NEAR EAST

International Goodwill was given an impetus when representatives of nine nationalities served on a committee of which Mr. Wilson, the American minister to Bulgaria, was chairman, for the purpose of distributing a consignment of clothing and an appropriation of $5000 from Near East Relief to needy refugees now living in Bulgaria. Members of the committee represented the following nations: Bulgaria,

GOD TAKES CARE OF EVERYTHING

*Everything our eyes can see,
Op'ning flower and buzzing bee,
Happy birds that sweetly sing—
God takes care of everything.*

*Sunbeams dancing all around,
Raindrops falling on the ground,
Wind that blows and nests that swing—
God takes care of everything.*

*Father, mother, children dear,
All the people far or near,
Thanks and praise for this we bring—
God takes care of everything.*

America, Great Britain, Italy, France, Belgium, Germany, Hungary, Sweden, and also the Anglo-American Society of Friends.

50,000 pairs of used shoes found to be wearable without repair, which had been contributed to Near East Relief were turned over by that organization in response to the appeal of the local Red Cross Committee in New Orleans to be used for Mississippi flood sufferers.

Tradesmen unable to secure employment in Greece number 60,000 out of a total of 265,000 workers. This is approximately 22 %, as against 14% unemployed in 1900 before the influx of Greek and Armenian refugees from Turkey.

The French mandatory Government in Syria has, unsolicited, made a contribution of 30,000 francs for the education of children in the Near East Relief School for the Blind at Ghazir on the Lebanon mountains near Beirut.

The recent announcement made by the Rockefeller Institute that the trachoma bacillus has been isolated is of great interest to Near East Relief workers since one of the most difficult tasks they have faced has been that of combatting trachoma, the disease which from Bible times has been the cause of much blindness in the Near East.

In Greece, the Ministry of Agriculture has invited Near East Relief to take over an estate of fertile land near Patras for the possible development of an agricultural school or demonstration center, offering to share the expense, with an additional offer from the city of Patras, of approximately $5,000 a year.

"You who have spoken for and you who have given to the Near East Relief work will be glad to know how splendidly it is functioning today in Athens.

Some of our tourist party broke away from the tour of sight-seeing and visited this Near East Relief Home, where they were entertained by the little children with songs and other exercises. They came away feeling that if America could only see the need that continues here, there would be no trouble to get the funds to carry it on. When these children grow up they will know that it is America to whose generosity they owe their lives.

I asked a number of people in Jerusalem what they thought of this work, and they all praised it in the highest terms. America has never done anything that has aroused the respect and admiration of the world more than this shelter given these child victims of persecution."—Ralph Parlette in The Lyceum Magazine.

Rev. John R. Voris is spending the summer months in the Near East for the purpose of promoting the religious educational work of the Near East Relief orphanages and of securing continued and increased co-operation in this work on the part of the Eastern churches. He will also give special attention to a post-orphanage program which provides for an organization for older girls and boys, formerly cared for in the orphanages but who have now gone out to make their own way in a not too friendly environment, because of the prevailing economic conditions.

Through the organization, which is called the "Near East League," the young people formerly in the orphanages endeavor to assist and encourage each other, and to aid those of their number who are ill or out of employment.

"Appearances are deceitful." How often we find them so! Our very seeming selfishness may have a noble explanation, like the workman of Paris whose friends abused him for not using his wages to buy drink to share with them. At last they found out he had a crippled child and was saving his money to give her hospital treatment. When they did find out, no liberality and appreciation could have excelled theirs, but think of the years of suffering their friend endured in silence until they came to understand!

Some scientists tell us that souls are sensitive to certain sins, like envy, jealousy, selfishness, suspicion, pride, etc., they suffer terribly from these things. The cure is God. He can make us immune from sin.

very community who are doing this very thing? We hear about the ones who go wild and wind up in jail, but do we commend the ones who do the less spectacular thing of living right? We wish every pastor and every B. Y. P. U. president in the state would commend the example of these Texas young people to their own young men and women. Likewise, we wish every father and mother would call attention to this example. It will help. It is a worthy way to strengthen the stalks.—The Christian Index.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

Family Cares

By Bertha Inwood Michael

*Oh, dear, I have so much to do,
My kitten wants to play,
But every time I put her down
She tries to run away.*

*The Toby dog is very cross
Hhe whined and barked until
I gave my Noah's ark to him
And coaxed him to be still.*

*And then he shook the animals
And chased them all around,
Until the elephant ran off,
At least he can't be found.*

*My dollie is most awful sick
And is in bed upstairs;
Oh dear, but I am very tired
With all my family cares.*

An Ojibway Legend

AN old man was sitting in his lodge, by the side of a frozen stream. It was the end of winter, the air was not so cold, and his fire was nearly out. He was old and alone. His locks were white with age, and he trembled in every joint. Day after day passed, and he heard nothing but the sound of the storm sweeping before it the new-fallen snow.

One day while his fire was dying, a handsome young man approached and entered the lodge. His cheeks were red, his eyes sparkled. He walked with a quick, light step. His forehead was bound with a wreath of sweet grass, and he carried a bunch of fragrant flowers in his hand.

"Ah, my son," said the old man, "I am happy to see you. Come in! Tell me your adventures, and what strange lands you have seen. I will tell you of my wonderful deeds, and what I can perform. You shall do the same, and we will amuse each other."

"I am Peboam, the Spirit of Winter," said the old man. "I blow my breath, and the streams stand still. The water becomes stiff and hard as clear stone."

"I am Seegun, the Spirit of Spring" answered the youth. "I breathe, and the flowers spring up in the meadows and woods."

"I shake my locks," said the old man, "and snow covers the land. The leaves fall from the trees, and my breath blows them away. The birds fly to a distant land, and the animals hide themselves from the cold."

"I shake my ringlets," said the young man, "and warm showers of soft rain fall upon the earth. The flowers lift their heads from the ground, the grass grows thick and green. My voice recalls the birds, and they come flying joyfully from the Southland. The warmth of my breath unbinds the streams, and they sing the songs of summer. Music fills the groves wherever I walk, and all nature rejoices."

And while they were standing thus a wonderful change took place. The sun began to rise. A gentle warmth stole over the place. Peboam, the Spirit of Winter, became silent. His head dropped, and the snow outside the lodge melted away. Seegun, the Spirit of Spring, grew more radiant, and rose joyfully to his feet. The robin and the bluebird began to sing on the top of the lodge. The stream began to murmur at the door, and the fragrance of opening flowers came softly on the breeze.

The lodge faded away, and Peboam sank down and dissolved into a tiny stream of water, that vanished under the brown leaves of the forest. Thus the spirit of winter departed, and where he had melted away, there the Indian children gathered the first blossoms, fragrant and delicately pink—the modest Spring Beauty.—Selected.

FARE FORTH

BY WILLAM A. QUAYLE

*Fare forth, my Soul! where ocean rocks
In wide bewilderment of storm,
And where the drenching salt wave shocks;
And mutilating breakers form.*

*Fare forth, where all the night is dark
And blindness takes thee by the hand,
Where the unkenned tempests bark
And crush thee backward toward the strand.*

*Fare forth! Embark on creaking ship
That wallows in the ocean brine,
Nor suffer fear to whiten lip
Nor once forget thou art divine.*

*Fare forth! Fare forth! The tempests call.
Fare forth and far, where wild winds wail.
Fare forth to meet the crush and fall
Of plunging waves. Fare forth, nor fail!*

Christian Endeavor and Its Leader

Having just received our copy of the printed report of the great Cleveland Christian Endeavor Convention, our mind is refreshed concerning our impression as to the greatness of its leader. And we use the term "its leader" advisedly, for though there were many splendid leaders in evidence at that convention, we were impressed with the fact that there was one man whose personality, passion and eloquence dominated (without his aiming it) and electrified the convention and whose leadership pervades the Christian Endeavor movement, and that is Dr. Daniel A. Poling. Every great and successful movement is built around a person, and in Christian Endeavor that person was Dr. Francis E. Clark, who both originated and moulded the organization and directed its destiny for more than forty years. But once his personality was gone, Daniel A. Poling fell heir to Francis E. Clark's responsible position, to his beautiful spirit and organizing genius, and to the confidence and affection of millions of Endeavorers. And from now on Dr. Poling's name will be inseparably linked with Christian Endeavor. He has not assumed such a place, nor does he claim it, but he occupies it. He is not officious nor autocratic, rather he is meek and generous. But he is a born leader and gifted beyond most of his fellows, and he has a great passion for youth and is a dynamo of energy. His leadership of Christian Endeavor seems the most natural thing in the world; he seems to have come to the kingdom of youth for a time like this. And the movement will be both safe and successful in his hands.

We have been glad to note that our impression is not unique in this respect. "The Presbyterian" speaks its confidence in Dr. Poling and in the future of Christian Endeavor in the following words, which we pass on as a re-enforcement of our testimony:

Perhaps nothing suggests a finer element in the present leadership of the world Christian Endeavor movement than the tribute paid to Dr. Francis E. Clark by the present president, Dr. Daniel A. Poling, at the Cleveland Convention. Instead of the tempting assumption that he himself is the man of the moment, he frankly declares that Dr. Clark has no successor. That negation of himself is followed by a thrilling resolution to the effect that while this Society exists, it is pledged to attempt the enforcement of the Eighteenth Amendment, and to make itself felt as a power for righteousness in the land. Many holy ambitions perish because they are not linked to definite acts. Christ joins the rest which he brings to the yoke which he offers. The knowledge of Christ must be followed by the service of Christ; otherwise religion fades into a mere pious sentiment. It is only as we retain the harmony of truth that we can see the unity of truth.

While Dr. Poling declines to be regarded as the successor of the founder of Christian Endeavor, the friends of religious youth are free to regard him as a sane, able leader, whose full rich gospel and vigorous intellect and inspiring leadership will preserve the Society from mere trivialities or uncertainties in the great religious programme of life. We would follow him and his young army with our earnest prayers.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

It was an inspiring moment when Brother and Sister Floyd Taber appeared on the General Conference platform and told of their purpose to serve God in Africa. They are sailing immediately for France where Brother Taber will begin his medical course by which he hopes to fit himself for medical missionary work in the Oubangi-Chari district of French Equatorial Africa. Mr. and Mrs. Taber are both graduates of Ashland College and are keen minded, consecrated young people.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, reports his canvass of the Michigan churches—only two of which are having services. The stronger of these two being the faithful group of Brethren near Lake Odessa, known as the Campbell church, of which Brother R. I. Humberd is pastor. The other is the New Troy church of which Brother J. H. English is pastor. The combined gift of these churches was $569.95, which advances the total fund to $121,392.37.

The efficient General Conference Secretary, Brother O. C. Starn, gives us a report of the business sessions of the late conference, which will be of interest, we aver, to attendants as well as to those who were not privileged to attend. All should be interested in looking over the various financial reports which are, generally speaking, very encouraging. Those who were not in attendance ought especially to read the minutes in order to be informed as to the actions of Conference and the trend of events in the church.

Dr. Charles A. Bame gives us an interesting report of his trip to the mountains of West Virginia, telling of the beauty and inspiration of the scenery, the character of the people and of the success of the revival held at Mathias. Brother Arthur Snider is the highly respected pastor of this church, which contains as large a number of school teachers and other persons of training as any church of its size we know of. Evangelist readers have frequently enjoyed articles written by some of the talented folks residing in or having originated in this valley.

Mr. and Mrs. Grant McDonald, for some time students in Ashland College, were appointed by the General Home Mission Board as missionaries to the Kentucky field, Brother McDonald to teach Bible at Riverside Institute and Sister McDonald to teach music. They are splendid young people and are worthy of the confidence that the Mission Board thus expresses in them. Sister Grace P. Srack, who has been teaching Bible in that institution, is to continue her work among the churches, giving lectures on the work in Kentucky and also promoting tithing and Bible instruction wherever she can be of service.

Two district conference programs—the Indiana and the Illiokota—are to be found in this issue. The Indiana conference will convene at Loree, October 4 to 6 and the pastor of the entertaining church, Brother C. A. Stewart, gives some instructions as to how to reach the place. The Illiokota conference will be held at Leon, Iowa, October 4 to 7. Also the Pennsylvania conference is announced to meet in the First church of Philadelphia, October 4 to 6. A statement is made by the pastor of the entertaining church, Brother Paul Miller, who appeals for a large attendance. We bespeak in behalf of these several conferences a loyal attendance and participation.

One of the very inspiring events of General Conference week was the ordination of three young men to the Christian ministry Raymond Gingrich, Delbert Flora and Elmer Keck. The latter graduated from Ashland Seminary last spring and is now serving as pastor of the church at Jones Mills, Pennsylvania. The first two are both still engaged in school work at Ashland and preaching at nearby churches. Delbert Flora is a grandson of Elder B.

H. Flora, who assisted in the ordination and gave some words of counsel to the young men. Raymond Gingrich is a brother to Rev. J. L. Gingrich, pastor of the Third church of Johnstown, and who assisted in the ordination. May these three young recruits to the ministry be faithful, worthy and efficient messengers of the Gospel until relinquished by the Master who gave them the call.

On August 31 occurred the wedding of one of our most promising young theologs of Ashland Seminary, Raymond Gingrich, and Miss Edith Garber, who has been prominently connected with the work of the W. M. S. and the S. M. M. The groom, who has completed his college work at Ashland, is now pursuing his seminary courses and is preaching at a church near Ashland. Mrs. Gingrich also graduated from Ashland College last spring and expects to teach in a nearby high school this year. The young couple was married at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Garber, of Leon, Iowa, and by the bride's father, who is a minister in the Church of the Brethren. The Evangelist extends congratulations and best wishes for many years of happy, successful service together.

During the inspiring Foreign Mission session on Saturday afternoon of General Conference, Brother Egidio Romanenghi, who for several years has been in school at Ashland College, was ordained and set apart as a missionary to his home country, Argentina, South America. His wife, who was Eleanor Yoder, and he are soon to sail for what they call their "homeland" and where they are anxious to get into the arduous task of bringing the light of the pure Gospel to the stultified souls of the millions who have for so many generations been enslaved by Romanism. Brother and Sister Romanenghi have shown themselves keen and faithful students and have always been ready for any service they were called upon to do during their college days at Ashland, and their many friends will look forward with confidence of success in the work in which they are now about to engage.

The leadership of Brethren Christian Endeavor has fallen on new shoulders, though not inexperienced shoulders, with the election of Rev. E. M. Riddle as president to succeed Prof. J. A. Garber. Brother Riddle has been a close and constant student of Christian Endeavor for a number of years and has been steadily rising in leadership in its circles, having occupied a divisional superintendency in the Ohio Christian Endeavor Union for several years. We predict that Brethren Endeavor will go steadily on, increasing in favor and usefulness under his leadership. As his associate another young and enthusiastic Christian Endeavor pastor has been called into leadership in the person of Brother Lester V. King. The general secretaryship continues in the efficient hand of Miss Gladys Spice. The entire list of officers for the ensuing year will be found on the Christian Endeavor page, which, we are assured, will be kept alive with fresh material of interest to Christian Endeavorers.

Our correspondent from Elkhart, Indiana, tells of the progress of the church there under the aggressive leadership of Brother W. I. Duker. Every department of the church's work is advancing and the membership is on its toes, getting ready for the dedication of their new church the second week in October, at which time Dr. G. W. Rench is engaged to officiate. It is a great work that these people are about to consummate and the sacrifice and hard work with which they have brought this accomplishment to pass should inspire those who may be less venturesome in the Lord's work. As a rule we are not willing to venture enough in our spiritual endeavors. We are overly cautious, possibly we should be frank enough to say that we often lack faith, and so retard the progress of the Kingdom. We have great faith in our ability in other matters and we are willing to make long ventures in our private business and undertakings, and so we get ahead. Why should we not be as aggressive and venturesome and faith-possessing in the work that is spiritual and that builds for eternity?

The increasing emphasis on Home Missions as expressed in many ways and on various occasions during General Conference and the determination with which not only the Mission Board but the delegates seemed ready to set themselves with greater aggressiveness to the task, give encouragement with regard to the church's future. We have not in large enough numbers been awake to the importance of this phase of the church's work, in fact, in some quarters we seem to have been quite indifferent about the matter. We have been too much at ease in Zion and have not realized the urgency of the call of the homeland, the obligation that rests upon us for the spread of the whole Gospel, nor the importance of a more rapid building up of churches to the perpetuity of our denomination. It is not too soon for pastors and people to begin to pray and plan to do the thing that is necessary to a more aggressive program in Home Missions. New and very promising mission points are to be undertaken and that calls for increased offerings. The vigor with which the work can be prosecuted depends much upon the readiness and generosity with which the people lay their gifts upon the altar of sacrifice and service.

The National Sunday School Association has grown to be one of the brotherhood's most useful and highly efficient agencies under the leadership of Drs. Beachler and Garber as they lay down the reins, it is fortunate that there have been found such worthy successors. Prof. W. Irwin Duker, public school principal of Goshen, Indiana and pastor of the Elkhart church, is well equipped by training and experience to become the directing head of the organization. He has been a member of the Sunday School Board for a number of years and we venture that the Association will not, under his presidency, lose any of the public confidence that it has so deservedly enjoyed in the past. The second in command and a new face among the officers of this Association is the energetic and capable pastor of the church at Maurertown, Virginia, Rev. E. L. Miller, a man who adds strength to the directorate. As general secretary of the organization another pastor, a young man with a broad Sunday school vision and a rapidly enriching experience, has been selected in the person of Rev. O. Clayton Starn of Gratis, Ohio. As head of the important Educational Department, which has to do with Teacher Training and Graded Instruction, a young man has been in training for such a time as this and has already become widely known in the brotherhood while serving as Field Secretary of the Association. Prof. Melvin A. Stuckey will not find the duties that fall to him in this position entirely strange and we predict the Sunday schools will find in him a capable servant. Other officers and divisional superintendents, we believe, hold over from last year, and the entire list may be had by reference to the Sunday school page, where Brother S. M. Whetstone makes a full report.

We wish to call the attention of any pastor or other church leader desiring to launch a campaign to enlist tithers, to a generous offer made in this issue by The Layman Company of Chicago. Free literature may be secured on conditions stated in the announcement. We recommend a wide use of this opportunity for the good of the cause. One of our denominational weaknesses, and not of ours only, is that we have not learned how to give as the Lord prospers us. That delays the progress of every interest of the church. The College Endowment campaign is going slower than it ought to go and slower than it would go, if we only knew how to give to the Lord that which is his due. The cause of missions at home and abroad is being hindered for lack of funds. New fields are calling for workers and new workers are waiting to be sent, if we only had the money to send them. The church will not grow more rapidly until we learn to give more generously and systematically. The circulation of the church paper is being greatly restricted because churches say they are too hard up to put the Evangelist on the budget, and occasionally one that has been on the budget is dropped because money is scarce. Why is the money so scarce for matters that pertain to the Kingdom while our people have money for fine automobiles and radios and every other luxury that modern ingenuity provides? Why must the church interests lag because God's people are "hard up" when those same people have not begun to draw in on personal expenditures? It is because they have not learned the lesson of Christian stewardship. That lesson is one of the most essential to the progress of the church and at the same time one of the most vital to the spiritual quickening of the membership. It ought to be given the earnest attention of all those who wear the name of our Lord. Until we learn it we will continue to be severely hampered.

GENERAL ARTICLES

A Symposium on the Late General Conference

As the Program Committee Saw It

By A. V. Kimmel, Secretary Executive Committee

As I speed along on the train bound for the Golden West I am complying with the Editor's request in jotting down a few notes on the General Conference just closed at Winona Lake, Indiana. Only a few points can be taken up and these will be from the viewpoint of the program committee.

The Speakers

Having had in charge the getting together of the program it was natural for me to note how nearly it was carried out as printed. Most of the men and women assigned parts as speakers or devotional leaders were right on the job when the time came for them to do their parts. Some had to make long drives by auto, even encountering different kinds of trouble along the way, others shortened their vacations several days or denied themselves other personal pleasures but they were there. That is the point—They Were There. We are giving this special mention so that in succeeding conferences each one having a part may realize the importance of keeping the appointment at any cost. Three of the speakers assigned places on the main program were absent on account of sickness according to reports sent the secretary. Some changes were made in the auxiliary meetings but those who supplied did exceptionally well. Faithfulness is a strong feature of any program.

Preparation

Having studied, in advance, the subjects the speakers were to use so that we could judge the "balance" of the program we were interested greatly in the presentation. We can say truthfully that every address we heard carried the conviction of careful preparation. Even those who supplied in the places when necessary gave something that had been well thought out and did not rush up with something on the spur of the moment.

There is a purpose in mentioning this also and it is to insist that a strong program must have addresses that are thoughtfully and prayerfully prepared. Many said that this was a strong program. The slogan of the church, "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible" was put to the front by a number of speakers and even more than in former years was the call to the faith of our fathers sent out as a worthy challenge.

A Growing Denomination

That our church is growing was easily gathered from the reports that were given, growing in quality as well as quantity. It was suggested several times that the going forth of those who were not sufficiently Brethren to stand the test of the times was not weakening to the cause which is so close to our hearts. Activities at home and abroad were never more flourishing; our institutions, missions and even the statistical report for this year proves this. This gives confidence and a feeling that victory and not defeat is ahead and it puts courage in the hearts of both preachers and laymen. The general conclusion seems to be that we have a great year before us and that the church is called of the Lord for a time like this. Therefore let us spread the gospel to both saint and sinner. To the former that they may be strong in the Lord and to the latter that they may be saved. "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek."

An Appreciation of Dr. White's Lectures

By L. V. King

I have been asked to write an appreciation of the lectures given at our National Conference by Dr. Wm. P. White on the subject, "Thinking Through the Scriptures." I shall do so from the minister's viewpoint.

He gave in his lectures a brief syllabus of the Bible by Books, dividing them into eight groups as follows: Foundation Books, Nation Books, Books of Experience, Books of Expectation, Books of Manifestation, Book of Transition, Books of Realization and Book of Consummation. He said: "The Book is a logical system of Divine truth. If you know the man of the Book you can get the Book together."

The continual "Amen" responses given throughout his lectures give us some idea of how our ministers appreciated his messages and how well they agreed with him in his interpretation of Biblical truth. From the viewpoint of the Brethren ministry he was true to the Book. That this was one of the best Conferences we have ever held seemed to be the general opinion of all present. I am sure that the lectures of Dr. White helped to make it such. In these days, when many are denying the authority of the Word and giving all sorts of interpretations to Truth, it was encouraging to hear a man of such wide practical experience give such a sane, sensible interpretation of the true Word. Besides the inspiration to a purer Christian life I am sure that we ministers have sensed anew the importance of preaching only from the Book. "For the Word of God is the power of God unto salvation to all who believe", should have a new meaning to us. We have been led anew to the fact that men are hungry for the bread and that they will listen when the bread is thrown out. "Preach the Word, omitting nothing, for the world is hungry for the bread. Break it and pass it out to the hungry multitude", was his constant appeal.

Conference Vespers

By Freeman Ankrum

The evening sessions of Conference this year were intended to be totally inspirational. The heavy work of the day was laid aside and the feeding of the deeper spiritual devotional side of man was planned.

The keynote of the Conference was struck by Rev. R. Paul Miller in the Vice-Moderator's address on the opening evening of the Conference. The fundamental claims of the "old book" were set forth in a fine spirited way, and while it is not possible to mention the other men who followed because of lack of space in this article it is fitting to state that they followed unerringly in the path that was indicated at the first of the program. There have been times in the not far distant past when the Brethren church was divided on many things which in the majority they are unmistakably firm in at the present time. We have come safely through the maze in which so many churches and men have lost themselves, and are losing themselves at the present time. The Conference was closed by Rev. Ed. Miller in a forceful message given as "Brother Ed." always does. He accented the messages given in part during the Conference and gave a forceful admonition to "Go Forward." With the Conference opening with a Miller, a Miller bringing the last message and Dr. Miller closing with the benediction and good speakers in the interim no wonder people were saying that this was the best Conference that they had ever attended. With the inspiration of the messages ringing in our hearts and ears let us in the words of the last speaker, go forward to Ashland next year with even greater plans and ambitions.

A Few Words Regarding the W. M. S.

By Mrs. U. J. Shively, National President

The 1927 Conference is now history and the reports from W. M. S. are quite gratifying. We must profit by our failures and not get puffed up over our successes.

This is the first year we had undertaken the support of the workers at Bassai Station in Africa and District W. M. S. groups responded nobly. Besides the support of the workers, $400.00 has been given for permanent buildings. We must not expect our representatives on foreign fields to live in any old shack, but for health's sake, at least, they must be properly housed. The W. M. S. realize this and are glad to give toward permanent buildings.

Native evangelists are to be sent into the field this year. $2.00 per month, or $24.00 per year will support a native worker. Consecrated native workers can do more than foreigners.

There are needed village chapels, places in which our missionaries can hold services as they journey from village to village, and be protected from sun and rain. A chapel costs $32.00.

Here are opportunities for individuals or organizations to be busy for the Master by supporting a worker or providing a chapel.

One of this year's results was the establishing of many new family altars. The definition of a family altar as accepted by our W. M. S. in 1927 Conference is: "Some form of daily worship including the reading of the Bible and prayer, with as many of the family participating as possible." Understanding this there ought to be many new altars established in our homes.

May our service for him surpass any previous year.

The Morning Prayer Meetings

By N. V. Leatherman

The morning prayer meetings were better attended this year than any former years, according to the memory of the writer. We may not be able to account for this, and it may not be necessary to account for it, yet we cannot help mentioning that in our opinion there were two chief causes for this larger attendance. First, the shorter time given for the meetings. Folks learned they would not be held longer than a half hour at these early meetings. This gave more time for them to get around to the meetings as well as attend to their personal duties elsewhere. Second, the definite interest created by the sequential order of the subjects drew the Brethren to the meetings.

On Tuesday morning, "The Need for Men Who Can Pray", was emphasized. We learned at this meeting that we had men who could pray. For certainly there was a zeal and earnestness in the petitions that were offered.

On Wednesday morning, "The Need for Men Who Will Pray", was presented by Brother James S. Cook. He told how God does hear and answer prayer by saying that he was present that very morning because God had answered his prayer in a marvelous way in furnishing for him and his family the means to attend the Conference.

"Why Prayer is Unanswered," was the subject discussed at the Thursday morning session. We heard one lady mention particularly, that she attended this meeting because of her interest in the subject. She mentioned her appreciation of what was said and of the spiritual atmosphere there.

Friday morning, "Prayer as Supplication", was the subject of our meditation. Saturday morning it was, "Prayer—Talking to God" that held our attention. And Sunday morning, "The Prayer of Intercession" was not only talked about but exercised, even as it had been all through the week.

These prayer meetings gave tone to the entire Conference. Surely the Lord heard and answered prayer in a mighty way. We believe the pulse of the church could be felt here. Many of us left this conference feeling that no longer should we question the merits of our position as a church; and that we should assume a positive attitude in the progress of our task.

Lamps that Burn and Shine

By W. S. Crick

In seeking to evaluate the Thirty-ninth Annual Conference of the Brethren church, after but a few days to assimilate impressions, there stand out in bold perspective six or seven personalities, or groups, whose radiant messages and glowing souls gave the sessions a distinctive brilliance.

There were the inspirational and devotional series of Bible lectures brought by Dr. W. P. White. With the challenging messages delivered by Mrs. Josephine Stearns on the theme of "Woman's Place in the Master's Program of Kingdom Building", two widely differing angles of the believer's duties and privileges were presented.

Then the encouraging words brought by Dr. W. S. Bell, setting forth the progress and promise of the ultimate success of the Ashland College Endowment Campaign, found a hearty response. The intrinsic value of the College to the church was shown in the scholarly address of President Jacobs on the subject of "Christian Education."

It was an inspiration to meet the workers, and listen, as the problems and possibilities of the Kentucky work was presented by Bishop Gray, Mr. Kinzie, Mrs. Srack, Mrs. Drushal and Mr. Henry. Brother and Sister McDonald, the new additions to the faculty at Riverside, merit our prayers.

Surely every heart was made to glow with greater enthusiasm as three young men, Raymond Gingrich, Delbert Flora and Elmer Keck, were inducted into the Christian ministry, in the presence of delegates assembled from the length and breadth of the brotherhood.

The splendid vision and consecration of Brother and Sister Floyd Taber, in their decision to prepare for medical mission work in Africa, called for highest commendation, and thanksgiving. Many eyes were moist when the precious little children of Brother and Sister Orville Jobson were brought to the platform, and the incalculable sacrifice their parents are willing to make to win souls in darkest heathendom, came home to us! It was but another demonstration of the supreme love of Jesus Christ that makes it possible for Sister Gribble and Marguerite to separate.

Even greater rejoicing, zeal and efficiency will characterize the South American field when that splendid couple, Rev. and Mrs. Egydio Romanenghi return to the field they so affectionately call "home"! May God speed them and their consecrated co-workers, Rev. and Mrs. C. L. Sickel, on their way.

The piece of work that impressed this writer as being most constructive and tangible, is that being done by the three thousand members of the Woman's Missionary Society. With cash assets totaling almost $20,00.00, with the establishment of ninety-four family altars during the year, and with a vast amount of local work accomplished by these women, surely every pastor should heed the exhortation of the Apostle when he wrote, "Yea, I beseech thee also, true yokefellow, help these women, for they labored with me in the Gospel . . . (Phil. 4:3).

The vision, consecration, ability and sacrifice, and varied appeal represented by these "lamps that burn and shine" (John 5:35) characterize the conference just closed as superior to previous conferences in many respects.

An Appreciation

By W. C. Benshoff

The recent National Conference will be remembered as one of the best in the history of the church. Its work was constructive and unifying; its teaching edifying and inspiring. Outstanding among the special features of the Conference was the series of Bible lectures delivered by Dr. W. P. White. Dr. White came to us through the Moody Bible Institute and upon the recommendation of those who had heard him. These lectures are an illustration of the fact that even in these days of apostasy there are many people who are eager to hear the Word. The attendance and interest increased with each lecture.

The series consisted of six lectures and were based upon the general subject, "Thinking Through the Scriptures." Dr. White is a man of exceptional ability and gave to us his best. He is a man of wide practical experience. His exhaustive study of the Word, his knowledge and apt use of the methods of teaching, his close contact with humanity and its needs makes him outstanding among the Bible teachers of today. The use of wit and humor came naturally and were used with moderation, sufficiently to rest the hearers and to illustrate the thought.

As suggested by the subject above mentioned, the series carried us through the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, from the beginning to the consummation of time. The general theme developed was the redemption of the race, or the reconciliation of a fallen humanity to the great and living God. The logic of the Bible demands the restoration of the mark lost through sin; it demands the restoration of fellowship with God the Father; it demands the restoration of the reign of righteousness. The truth was taught that all the Bible is for us but not all is to us. Some things were written to the Jews, some to the Gentiles. Some things were spoken to individuals or to groups. One point to illustrate. The command to tarry in Jerusalem for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit was to the apostles. It is not to us. Why should we "tarry" for him who is already here? But all Scripture is for us and is profitable (2 Tim. 3:16).

There was that in Dr. White's teaching which once burned in the messages of great preachers. He spoke as an evangelist, a prophet, a messenger, a herald of God's message of redemption. The whole series was a plea to the church for a restoration to the preaching that moves men mightily, stirs them profoundly, and makes them into new creatures in Christ Jesus. He proclaimed God's grace as one who has been passioned by its divine power. The point was emphasized that we are living in the apostasy. This is an age full of moral shallowness and spiritual darkness, but this is no reason for despair. This is rather the church's opportunity. The church is passing through an unparalleled crisis and needs just such teaching as perhaps never before.

Moderator's Address

By Rev. Charles H. Ashman

The Christian Ministry

In the keeping of the stream of doctrine pure, in the development of the spiritual life of the Christian, in the promotion of a scriptural program of evangelism, the key man in every church is the pastor. Involved in the care of all the churches is the preacher problem. Paul realized that and gave much space in his letters to instructions to pastors and elders. Grave and acute is the situation we face. Dr. Miller, Dean of our Seminary, recently made this statement, "We have fewer students for the ministry in school now than we have had for twenty years. I have given much time and labor to the study of our ministerial problems. Several points stand out in great prominence. The first is the rapidly changing personnel of our ministry; the second, the comparatively few young men of high character and ability offering themselves for this work; and the third fact is the demand of the church for efficiently trained pastors. What can be done to meet this emergency?" We too have given much time and prayer to this situation. It seems to us that there are three major causes for it. We present them to you, not in a critical nor censorious vein, but in a sympathetic and constructive spirit.

In the first place, our Seminary must be made more distinctive, prominent, and challenging. The new arrangement of the Seminary courses has accomplished much in this direction. But, we ought to have a Seminary building with dormitory rooms for Seminary students. Enough of the income of the endowment ought to be set aside so that these rooms could be given free to deserving students. Our teaching staff in the Seminary ought to be doubled so that our teachers would not need to come before their classes worn out, but fresh from prayer and the study of the Word. Each teacher ought to be a specialist in his line and stick to his line. Our Seminary must be exalted to a higher place of dignity and prominence if we expect to challenge the youth of today. The Brethren church will never be stronger than her ministry.

In the second place,—the individual churches must carry on a program of education leading up to an appeal for definite decisions for enlistment in the ministry. If one-half the emphasis would be placed on the call of Christ for definite service as is placed on worldly methods of money making and entertainment in our churches, we would overwhelm the Seminary with students.

In the third place,—the home must somehow change its point of emphasis. We believe that the home is responsible more than the church or Seminary for the decrease of volunteers for the Christian ministry. If Christian parents would dedicate their sons to the Lord and then be willing to stand by such dedication when the Lord calls; if they would treat their pastor with proper dignity and respect in their conversation in the presence of their sons; if they would ever keep before them the superior claims and opportunities of the ministry, our problem would be soon solved.

Church Polity

Moreover, in the "care of all the churches", there is involved the question of our church polity. We are congregational in church government—sometimes to a vengeance. The extreme exercise of this form of polity many times results in embarrassment and injury. Especially is this often true in the calling and dismissing of pastors. The practice of calling in a different candidate each Sunday for as long as they last and then choosing one in this competitive manner is an insult to the dignity of our ministry. The practice of calling the pastor annually with its period of uncertainty and opportunity for a minority to create dissatisfaction and diversion is equally injurious. Many, many times in our church a pastorate is terminated before it ought to be because of these practices. Many such terminations leave the church in an uproar requiring the major part of a year of the life of the new pastor to quiet. Somehow, Brethren, there must be effected a change in the methods of calling and dismissing pastors. We recommend to the churches and pastors the method employed by the First church of Johnstown, Pa. This church calls her pastor as pastor. He is not voted for each year, but continues until he desires to leave or the church desires him to do so. Then six months' notice is given. This corrects some of the evils involved.

Another serious problem involved in our church polity is that of a clearing house for pastors and churches. We have known of able and consecrated preachers being idle for several months because no church called them. Yet at the same time, there were churches seeking pastors. The pastors did not know the churches nor the churches the pastors. It is rather humiliating for a pastor to serve notice on the brotherhood through the Evangelist that he is out of a job and would appreciate it very much if some church would rush to his rescue. It is equally humiliating to a self respecting church to thus serve notice that no one wants it. There ought to be a clearing house established where in an impartial way pastors and churches could quietly and with dignity be put in touch with each other. Realizing that this problem touches most vitally methods of church government of long standing, we do not present a definite plan for its solution, although we have one outlined in our own mind, but we do recommend that this Conference appoint a committee of three who shall carefully and prayerfully study the problem and bring forth a definite and practical plan to the National Conference of 1928. Last year the National Ministerial Association appointed a committee to study this grave problem. This committee will report this year and may have a constructive program outlined. However, this recommendation is necessary because the Ministerial Association is mutual and not authoritative.

Finally, Brethren, in the "care of all the churches," we must face the future with an optimistic and constructive spirit. The Brethren church has a future! What that future will be depends upon us! Our children will inherit the kind of a Brethren church we bequeath to them. What kind of a church will that be? If the Lord tarries in his return, we believe the future of the Brethren church on earth will be most glorious! There is no place in the ranks of our ministry for down-in-the-mouth, discouraged, disgruntled preachers. They are millstones about the neck of the church, retarding her progress. The imaginery story is told of the devil going out of business and having an auction sale of his tools. Among them was one that showed much usage. Yet, it was priced the highest of all. It was a blunt, ugly instrument. When asked concerning its high price, the devil replied, "That is the tool of discouragement which I use on preachers. It is the most valuable one in my business." This hour demands Elijah to be at Mt. Carmel challenging the foes rather than under the juniper tree, afraid of Jezebel. It commands Jonah to walk the streets of Nineveh, calling the city to repentance rather than to be pouting under the gourd vine because God works differently than narrow selfishness desires. The habit of apologetizing for the Brethren church must stop. We must quit our whining about our smallness. It is poor psychology and publicity. We must face the future with unfailing, apostolic optimism. If preachers, teachers or laymen surrender their heritage of the whole Gospel in forsaking the church,—instead of behaving as if the future of the Brethren church depended upon them, we ought to put this epitaph over their tombstones, "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us." 1 John 2:19. We believe that the Brethren church is at the threshold of progress, prosperity, and perpetuity. This hour demands vision, vim, vitality, and vigor. Let us "quit ourselves like men, be strong." Let us face the future with our faces "set as a flint." Let us be "stedfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord." We will "occupy till he comes." "If God be for us, who can be against us?"

Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

THE ATTRACTION OF THE CHURCH

If the church is actually the supreme inspiration to faith in moral and spiritual realities, if it is the great nourisher of Christ-like character, if it is truly making a more brotherly community, if it is enriching all aspects of human life by suffusing them with the spirit of Christ, if it is giving voice to prophetic messages of social righteousness, no one need fear for the future of the ministry or of any other vocational service in the church. The one great way of assuring the needed leadership for tomorrow is to make the church of today what the church at its best has always been—a center of attraction for the noblest and most heroic souls. —Samuel McCrea Cavert.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Greatest Tragedy of the Ages

By Sylvester Lowman

TEXT: And when the centurion, which stood over against him, saw that he so cried out, and gave up the ghost, he said, Truly this man was the Son of God.—Mark 15:39.

Here in the fifteenth chapter of Mark we have described the greatest tragedy of all time.

What is a tragedy? The dictionary says it is a fatal event, or course of events, or dramatic incident, or subjection to extreme and protracted suffering. Let me illustrate. A few days ago a terrible tragedy occurred when the small boat "Favorite" toppled over at the Chicago pier and almost a half hundred small children and adults perished in the murky waters of the lake. Of all the elements that enter into the making of a tragedy, there was none left out in this case.

But the greatest tragedy of all time was not that, terrible as that was. Come with me and see a man led from the trial court. Let us follow him across the city, go with him and see the soldiers as they lay a heavy wooden cross upon his back. Then they bid him march amid the thieves, and we hear the hooting, jeering mob of Jews and others as they marched through the streets of the Holy City. The shame was such that the very rocks under his feet must have wanted to cry out against it. But why should he bear all this? He was giving the world a glimpse of the greatest tragedy of all time. And he did it just for the sake of making possible and showing men how to live and how to die.

The following story will help to illustrate my point. During the civil war, at the battle of Fredericksburg, there was a small patch of ground between the contending forces that was covered with the dead and dying men, and all through the afternoon of the weary day the cry of "Water, water" was heard. A Southern soldier begged his captain to allow him to answer the cry, but he was met with refusal. The captain said, "It would be sure death." But the soldier persisted, saying, "Above the roar of cannon and the cracking of musket I hear the cry of 'Water, water'; let me go." He set out across the field with a bucket of water and a tin. For awhile the bullets sang around him, but he seemed to have a charmed life. As the soldiers across the field saw his purpose, they ceased firing and permitted him to go about his mission in peace and safety.

This, it seems to me, illustrates the motive of the greatest tragedy of all time. With sympathetic heart Christ the Lord came out upon the battle field of this sin-cursed and struggling old world to give the cup of the cool life-giving water to as many as would receive it, even as he told the woman at the well.

Now, let us go out to Calvary, the place of the Skull, with him, where the tragedy is continued. I see a great crowd gathering. Some are Turks wearing their fezzes, others are dressed in all kinds of colors. They make a motly crowd. The Jews were now to see their Messiah put to death amid thieves, and the Gentiles were to see their Savior and Lord smitten and his blood flow for the cleansing of sin. It was not for a few only, but for all men who should afterwards believe on him and accept his finished work of grace. Men of every race and color—white men, red men, black, brown and yellow.

Very likely most of his eleven disciples were in that crowd, but they were not to be seen. But look, over there is his mother and a group of women from Galilee watching what was about to take place. They need not watch long. For step up with me among the soldiers and see that big fellow over there with a basket of rough spikes. The crosses are quickly placed in position with the foot near the hole already dug. The victims are brought one at a time and stripped of their clothing, leaving only a small cloth about the loins.. O what a shame the Son of God must endure! He is placed on the cross and is held fast while a burly Roman soldier takes a hammer and places a nail in the palm of his hand and strikes with his heavy hammer. It crashed and tears its way through his tender hands, and then through his feet. Oh, how horrible! Tragedy of tragedies! The greatest tragedy of all time enacted here before our eyes!

"It is finished", he said. Thank God it is finished. The price is paid for you and for me. He is my Savior. Is he yours?

"Lifted up was he to die;
'It is finished', was his cry;
Now in heaven, exalted high;
Hallelujah, What a Savior!"

Do we care that the Lord Jesus died? Do we show it? Does the world care? Not much, it seems. As it rushes madly on, it scarcely sees him lifted up. It seeks a pleasanter sight. But there is life for those who look. Thank God. Hallelujah, what a Savior!

"Cast Thy Bread Upon the Waters"

By Mrs. Edna Nicholas

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." (Eccl. 11:1). This text is usually associated with charity—alms-giving, but it is capable of being used in a larger way—our duties and our hopes in our relations to God and man.

It teaches obedience to present duty and patience as to future results.

There is a sowing done by each of us—a sowing to the flesh or else a sowing to the Spirit. As you sow so will be your harvest—one of happiness or one of misery.

We all know sowing to the Spirit is a slow process and requires patience; if we look for immediate results we must be disappointed. It is only "after many days", or as Paul puts it, "In due season we shall reap if we faint not."

One great part in sowing to the Spirit is our conduct toward God, the other is our conduct toward one another.

Possibly you may decide to seek God which is the most vital thing for every one until he is found. But God never led you to believe that the whole process of salvation is found in a moment, that there is nothing more for you to do, that in a few hours of anxiety you can set at rest all concern and effort and have guaranteed to you the whole future prospect with ease. He tells you in his word to diligently and continually seek him, and then he assures you that he will be continually found, a ready helper in every time of need. He asks you to trust him and to practice his presence even though he is unseen and the material things may seem more real. Many of us miss blessings we would otherwise enjoy because we fail to seek and wait and trust. Your life will be enriched by waiting on God. Your reward will come in his good time as you trust him. Your comfort will come in hope deferred. "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days."

The second part in our sowing to the Spirit is our conduct toward man. Withhold not one word that is for your brother's good. It may be spoken humbly, quietly and lovingly, if not it will lose its influence and you have failed in your obligation to your brother.

One word kindly spoken, or one thoughtful act may be the turning point for an immortal soul, hovering between life and death. Great will be your joy hereafter of having been the means of bringing hope and salvation to even one sin-worn soul. "Cast thy bread upon the waters."

The charge is "cast thy bread upon the waters." The first thought is with reference to the bread, or seed, which is the word of God. The second is with reference to the sowing—"Cast thy seed." Weeds are self distributive and grow rapidly without cultivation, but the good seed, the Word, must be carefully sown and cultivated. Hence fruits are God's blessings on labor. The winds scatter the thistle-down of sin but it requires a skilled hand, a hand of intelligence, to sow the seed of Truth.

The third point is with reference to where the seed is to be sown, "Cast it upon the waters." The natives along the Nile waited for the overflow of the river to sow their seed; when the river receded the seed took root and grew unto harvest. Hence the phrase, "Cast thy bread upon the waters." As the seed fell upon rich soil, so your kind words and helpfulness may drop into receptive natures.

The seed you sow must have time to germinate and grow and mature before it bears fruit. The seed dropped in the human heart must pass through some kind of mental process. There are other influences with which it must mix—it often passes through a dormant state, a state of silence ere you see results. You are not to grow weary because you are not seeing results, rest your faith and hope in "after many days."

As we review our life and anticipate a harvest from the seed sown, we grow faint-hearted and often question if we have wisely selected our seed and chosen our ground for sowing, but with the hope of God's promise, "we shall reap if we faint not," we take new courage and continue casting bread upon the waters and trust the harvest to God's own good time.

Were it not for the hope, "after many days," how many mothers would despair, working, hoping, praying for their sons and daughters that their lives may be kept from sin and saved for heaven.

The charge teaches obedience; the promise tests our faith; the immediate effects of the charge lead us to sow the right seed,—the right seed, the Word, centers in Christ, the Savior of sinners. Having selected the right seed we aim to find the best way of sowing (teaching). Always seeking the good seed and the best way of sowing, we must see that our soil is rich and fertile, that nothing be lost in the scattering of seed—"after many days." God always sends a harvest if we obey the spirit of the charge and rely on the promise.

Every sower (teacher) must know how, when and where to sow. It is a duty to obey the charge and meet the promise of our text in the daily routine of life. Do that which is right and true always. May acts of love and kindness be freely scattered.

The seed always fruits somewhere, sometime. You may lighten another's burden by a kind word or a cheery smile. Who can fathom the depths of a smile as it goes from one life to another? Keep faith in the promise, "after many days;" God will take care of the results.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

GOD'S HIDDEN GLORY—Exod. 33:17-23. The whole earth is full of God's glory, much of it hidden from human eyes. Is the veil that hides it placed by our dullness and ignorance, or by divine mercy? It makes a vast difference. Let us pray that God will show us his glory. "Then shall we all with unveiled face, beholding as in a mirror the glory of the Lord, be changed into the same image, from glory to glory."

TUESDAY

GROWING AND HOLDING—Acts 20:17-38. Healthy growth is the normal and natural state of every life. If we do not grow there is something wrong. Not only is growth essential, but the gains we made must be conserved. The gathering harvest must be carefully guarded. If growth and strength are to be maintained the means of grace God has bestowed must not be neglected.

WEDNESDAY

DWELLING IN UNITY—Gen. 11:1-9. "Therefore is the name of it called Babel." There can be no unity among people who are ever speaking different languages. And that means more than different racial tongues. It means that men who speak the language of war and those who speak that of peace cannot dwell harmoniously together. Those who speak of things that are seen and earthly cannot agree with those who speak of the unseen and spiritual. The secret of unity is to be found in God.

THURSDAY

CULTIVATING FRIENDSHIP—Rom. 16:3-13. "Greet the friends by name." Rev. Fred Smith has said, "Christianity is for friendship as well as for faith. In its atmosphere friendship comes to flower. And life is not only made forceful through faith; it is made fragrant through friendship."

FRIDAY

THE LAW OF KINDNESS—Matt. 18:3-6. "Except ye * * * become as little children." Children are generous; they are forgiving; they are guileless; they are not haughty and arrogant until taught by older folks to be so. The truly kind heart must embody these characteristics. It is most natural then that in children the most natural and genuine kindness is to be found.

SATURDAY

THE WAR OF ESCAPE—1 Cor. 10:12, 13. The way is not one of magic. It is the way of trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ and giving place to the indwelling of his Spirit, which causes sin to lose its fascination. The Holy Spirit not only casts out sin, but the love of it as well. That does not mean that there will be no hard fighting, but that there will come both the disposition and the power to make a successful fight.

SUNDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S HIGH AIM—Matt. 17:1-8. On the "Mount of Transfiguration" the disciples were permitted to see the ideal, the great spiritual aim and at the base of the mount they were brought face to face with the great task that lay before them—that of bringing the sinsick and suffering world up to that great ideal. It is not far-fetched. Every Sunday brings its vision of the high spiritual aim set before mankind and then on Monday we are challenged with the task of matching the ideal with the actual.—G. S. B.

Review: The Early Kings of Israel

Devotional Reading—Psalm 105:1-8.

Golden Text—Jehovah hath established his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all. Psalm 103:19.

LESSON LIGHTS

I. Saul Chosen King. 1 Sam. 9-11. The darkest hour is said to be just before the dawning. Samuel was old and no judge appeared to take his place. His sons had disgraced their father as Eli's had disgraced Eli. The nation was one of confusion and weakness, while neighboring nations, Ammon on the east, chs. 11 and 12, and the Philistines on the west, chs. 8 and 12, continued their warlike invasions and gave backsliding Israel little peace. In this condition the people desired a king in whose military leadership and established rule they could trust. But they insisted on having their own way about it. They did not humbly seek the mind of the Lord and obediently wait his time and choice of a king. They demanded Samuel that he "now make us a king to judge us like all nations." (8:5). God had designed and appointed that Israel be unlike other nations. They abused their high spiritual privileges and learned a hard lesson by conquest and suffering.—Ex.

II. Samuel's Farewell. 1 Sam. 12. Samuel resigns the government to King Saul before the people assembled at Gilgal. (1) He frees himself of any suspicion of maladministration by the witness of all the people (vs. 1-5). (2) He reminds the people of the great things that God had done for them and their forbears (vs. 6-13). (3) He sets before them blessing provided they are obedient (14, 15). (4) To awaken their regard for his rebukes and warnings, he calls for thunder and rain in an unusual season (16-19). (5) The people being convinced, he encourages them that things should yet go well, if they took heed to their way, but if not they should look for ruin to themselves and their king. (20-25).

III. Samuel Anoints David. 1 Sa. 16:1-13. The 16th chapter begins a distinct section of First Samuel which extends to the close of the book. This division may be called: the Decline of Saul and the Rise of David. From this point onward David and not Saul is the central figure of the history. From the human standpoint it was a beautiful sight to behold Samuel mourning for Saul: although displaced by the king, yet he did not triumph in his downfall. How many Christian workers today would feel no temptation to exaltation over the failure of a successor! But it was disloyal to mourn over a man whom the Lord had rejected; what the Lord wanted was not sentiment, but obedience. So the prophet was commanded to go and anoint Saul's successor.—Pardington.

IV. David and Goliath. 1 Sa. 17. The devil's warriors always look large and irresistible to those who lose sight of God, vs. 4-11; Nu. 13:33. Notice the indirect ways by which God gets his champions to the front: David who is simply carrying cheeses today may be fighting Goliath tomorrow, vs. 17, 18. They who have fought well obscurer battles shall be ready to win public and glorious victories, vs. 32-36. Faith in God is the foundation of true courage; and deliverances in the past should make us surer of deliverance in future, v. 37; 2 Co. 1:10. A simple weapon in a lad's hands, if it be on God's side, may overthrow the mightiest champion of evil; one text of Scripture in a child's mouth has silenced a boasting infidel, vs. 40-50. By and by God will turn the enemy's own weapons against him, v. 51; Ro. 16:20.

V. David and Jonathan. 1 Sa. 18, 19; 2 Sa. 1:17-27. Jonathan and David present the most wonderful illustration in history of mutual love, uninfluenced by the pride of station. Jonathan labored to identify the youthful shepherd with his father's house, and to raise him to a perfect equality with himself. David's conduct was marked by universal wisdom, and God gave him favor with all classes of people. Music and song were put in requisition to celebrate his excellencies; but the conduct of the women in these respects was more generous than prudent. King Saul was mortified at the superiority ascribed to the youthful stranger, and he "eyed David from that day forward." Nothing can more impressively demonstrate the sincerity of David's past professions of regard to Saul than the depth of sorrow on the present occasion. The death of Jonathan was the heaviest blow David had yet received. No two hearts were ever more closely united. The affection which obtained between them might be viewed as a foreshadowing of the unity of "the spirits of just men made perfect." He. 12:23. But the Gospel is capable of producing among all believers an affection even purer and stronger than that which knit the hearts of Jonathan and David. (John 17). The whole human race, once baptized with the Spirit of the Lord, will exhibit such a unity.

VI. David Spares Saul. 1 Sa. 26.

Golden Text.—"Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." Ro. 12:21. In our last lesson we saw the excellence of good companions; here we see the danger of evil companions. Saul was not a good man, and David in his association with him found continual sorrow. Jonathan rendered David good for good; Saul rendered David evil for good. The men of David would have rendered Saul evil for evil. Good for good is manlike; evil for evil is beastlike; evil for good is demonlike; good for evil is Christlike.

VII. David Brings up the Ark to Jerusalem, 2 Sa. 2-6.

Golden Text.—"We shall be satisfied with the goodness of thy house, thy holy temple." Ps. 65:4. Any kingdom is an empty thing if the ark of God be not enshrined in it, 2 Sa. 6:2; Deu. 12:10-14. The house of God is worthy of our passionate devotion, 2 Sa. 6:20-23.

VIII. God's Promise to David, 1 Ch. 17.

Golden Text.—"Thy throne, O God, is forever and ever; and the sceptre of uprightness is the sceptre of thy kingdom." He. 1:8. God's promise and faithfulness is the basis of encouragement in prayer. 2 Sa. 7:18-29. Now that David had rest from war he wanted to exchange his sword for the trowel, but God had other plans and other persons to build him an house, and God would have David look at what had been done for himself. God prizes our worship much more than our work; howbeit work in the Spirit will closely follow true

The Budget. The budget for the year is approximately $4,500.00 which is divided as follows: Ashland College (chair) $1,500.00. Kentucky Missions $1,000.00. College Library $500.00. College Endowment $500.00. Shipshewana Training School $300.00. Field work $200.00. Secretarial Work $112.50. International Council $100.00. The balance for miscellaneous bills.

Field Work. The Sunday school workers are anxious to be of service to the various schools during the year. Plans have been made to furnish each District Conference a speaker to represent the Sunday school work where it is desired. There will be no field secretary this year, but the members of the board are at your service.

Young People's Training School. This school had its beginning last July at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, where the Indiana Brethren Conference own some forty acres of ground. The plan is to make this school for our young folk of the very best type possible and much will be heard through the Evangelist during the year.

Some Changes. Some changes have been made in the Sunday school work for the coming year. Melvin A. Stuckey takes the place made vacant by J. A. Garber. To lighten the work which was formerly carried by Prof. Garber, O. C. Starn was called to be General Secretary. The Educator will be discontinued with the beginning of the new year, and one page of the Evangelist will carry the Sunday School messages.

Christian Endeavor at National Conference

The National Christian Endeavor officers for the new year are as follows: Rev. E. M. Riddle, President; Associate President, Rev. L. V. King; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Gladys Spice; Quiet Hour, Rev. Homer Kent; Stewardship, O. D. Ullom; Citizenship, Rev. C. E. Kolb; Junior, Miss Doris Stout; Intermediate, Mrs. Mont Kohser; Service, Miss Travilla Snyder; Publicity, Louis Clapper; Missionary, Miss Grace Yoder.

Rev. F. C. Vanator of Canton was re-elected by the Endeavorers to be their representative on the Home Mission Board.

At a meeting of the new officers and representatives from many societies, two items of business were passed upon in a very enthusiastic manner, namely, first, That the Endeavorers of the church center their efforts toward the Krypton mission station. There were certain limitations agreed upon that our Endeavorers will be able to do this piece of work. The Mission Board will have supervision as usual. Secondly, That we make our special effort in this work during Christian Endeavor Week, which will likely be in February, and designate it, Krypton Tithe Week.

The Sunday evening Christian Endeavor service was a good one, in charge of Brother Delbert Flora of Ashland College. The C. E. sessions were never better attended than this year. With the new appeal centering our efforts toward Krypton, rather than just to support a teacher in Kentucky, we believe the Endeavorers will rally and work for this worthy cause, even for Christ and his church.

Endeavorers, please watch the C. E. page and the Angelus.

GETTING COMMITTEES TO PLAN For Society Presidents

The Riverdale Presbyterian society, Toronto, Ont., found the following method effective in getting the committees really to lay plans for their work. Mr. H. C. Matter tells of the plan.

A business meeting was held with sentence prayers, hymns, Scripture lesson, announcements, and offering. Then the roll was called by committees. As each committee responded, the members went into an adjoining room, where chairs were placed for them, one group for each committee.

Then for thirty-five minutes these committee groups talked over their work and laid plans for the coming month.

At the end of this period the groups came together again, and the chairmen of the committees reported their plans for the immediate future.

Some business items were disposed of, and the meeting closed with hymn, prayer, and benediction.

Why Not a Citizenship Committee?

Every Christian Endeavor society should have a citizenship committee. Its duty would be to take general charge of the prayer meetings with citizenship topics and to keep citizenship before the society in all appropriate ways. One of these would be the occasional conducting of study classes on citizenship, using one of the various helpful books published or sold by the United Society of Christian Endeavor. Whenever there is need of the aid of the society for the promotion of some admirable political cause or great reform, this committee will organize the members for that purpose. Such a committee would find something worth while to do all the time.

A Little Bit

*There's a little bit of sweetness in the soul
that's sour and sad,
There's a little bit of goodness in the man
however bad,
There's a little bit of kindness in the cruel heart, you know,
There's a little bit of virtue in the woman fallen low.*

*There's a little bit of trouble in the life that seems most gay,
There's a little bit of worry strewn along the lonely way,
There's a little bit of sympathy that you and I should show,
There's a little bit of harshness we should withhold, you know.*

*There's a little bit of sunshine to scatter every day,
There's a little bit of smile that on the face should stay,
There's a little bit of sacrifice that takes a bit of time,
There's a little bit of wisdom in this little bit of rhyme.*

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for September 25)

Peeping over the Great Wall of China. John 3:16, 17

Dear Junior Christian Endeavorers:

I am a Junior Christian Endeavorer, too. Someone told me that all of you American Juniors are going to study a topic called, "Peeping Over the Great Wall of China!" Now I wish that on the evening of September the twenty-fifth, every Junior boy and girl in your whole country would come trooping over the great Wall instead of just peeping. I believe that I could promise you that we boys and girls over here would do our very best to make you happy. Of course the big folks have not been as nice as they should have been to your white people over here. I am so sorry about that, but I am sure that the big folks wouldn't object if we had a good time with you boys and girls.

I wish that I could tell you all the things that you would see if you came trooping over the Wall, but then if I told you everything maybe you would not try as hard to come. The boys and girls over here like to play and have a good time just like you do. In the olden days all the little girls had to have their feet bound up very tight so that they would not grow big, but that custom is over and little girls can run around without their feet hurting them. That makes them happier. My mother had her feet bound up when she was a little girl, and she can not walk around comfortably like I can.

Many years ago there were no doctors in our land. When anyone got sick a quack-doctor, as you would call him, was called in. This quack doctor would say, "The reason that you are sick is because you have a lot of devils in you." Then he would take some old dirty needle and stick you all around the part that hurt and he would say, "If we make you bleed the devils may come out." One time mother's little brother was sick. He had a very bad pain in his arm. I think it must have been what your doctors call rheumatism. Mother's daddy called in the quack doctor and they treated him by cutting his arm in a number of places and by using some leeches and things like that. There must have been a very great number of germs on the instruments that the doctor used, for in a few days the little boy's arm was all swollen and red. The parents did not know what to do for their little boy, so they called in the quack doctor again. His second treatment was similar to the first, and the poor little boy kept getting worse until he finally died.

When mother grew up she heard about the Missionary teachers and came to hear them. She became a Christian, and so it was that I learned about Jesus as soon as I was able to learn anything.

I am sorry that it will not be possible for you Juniors to come over on September the twenty-fifth, for there are still many people who go to quack doctors when they are sick. In some parts of our country the people still live in total ignorance, for they have not heard of Jesus nor seen any of your missionary teachers. But since I know that you will not be able to come over, at least not that soon, I am going to ask you to do something for me. At your Junior meeting on that evening, I wish that every Junior would pray for the people of my country. Pray that the people all over the country may learn of Jesus and that the wars and troubles over here may cease so that the teachers may go over all of the country; and pray, too, that good Christian doctors may go to all the people so that people will not die from the great tortures of the quack doctors.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Report of Michigan Churches

We have three churches in Michigan, only two of these are having services. The Bethel church near Cassopolis is located in the country and there are so few members they did not think best to continue and are working with a union church and Sunday school. They feel the loss of Brother Clark who kept the work going while living.

The Campbell church is also located in the country not far from Lake Odessa and is the strongest church of the three. They have a fine group of people and a good Sunday school. Brother Humbert is their pastor and is giving them full time. Their total gift to the endowment was $503.00.

The New Troy church is located in New Troy and is about 20 miles southwest of St. Joseph. They have only a small group of members here. Brother English is the faithful pastor, who is practically giving his services free to the work. They treated me with kindness and gave their "bit" to the work, while not large, yet expressed their interest. Their gift was $66.95.

The total gift of these churches was $569.95. W. S. BELL.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Vacation

The first record is of my second visit to Mathias, West Virginia Brethren church. It may be remembered that I, with my wife and daughter, spent two weeks in this very interesting place last summer. The first week was the hottest I ever experienced and the second, the wettest; so that in coming away, we felt that we had not had a fair chance at revival. So, we were happy that we had a second invitation. This was our third visit to this interesting village and people and each time our opinion was changed in a number of ways. Our first visit, little more than a call, left us thinking that the Lost River Valley was very small and the population very limited in number. The second visit dispelled this, for we found successful farmers on top of high mountains and some of the best farms and most successful members away up where you can be lost in wonderful views and amazing panoramas awaiting your look. I have been over the Rockies several times, over the Appalachians more often, but in this particular spot, there are wonders unlike I have seen elsewhere. Wonderful native trees, in their primitive glory, great gushing springs; wild life to bear, deer and wild turkeys; plenty of fish in their unpolluted streams; and withal, the wonderful Lost River, all enchant me and keep me loving this beautiful place. Each previous time, I had been much interested in the Lost River which flowed through the village of Mathias, but was prevented seeing the lostness of it. This time I saw it and photographed it. More than twenty miles below our village, this river with a volume of water as I estimated of four feet in circumference, sinks away beneath a high mountain. In times of flood, the overflow runs around the mountain and a bridge of perhaps five hundred feet in length is needed to cross this, now dry channel. Two miles below, it emerges and is called by another name, Capon. Immediately below where the water swirls into the mountain, the rocks are piled near five feet higher than the level where it enters its lost but full channel. It is a strange, interesting and beautiful sight to behold, showing nature at work, doing as other streams have been doing for centuries—even millions of years, as geologists tell us, chiseling out the wonderful caverns that make all this country famous and charming to thousands of visitors, every year. In one of them in the Shenandoah valley, we were 250 feet below the top of the cave and saw the stream working away, (they told us) 90 feet below us. (Beg pardon, this was just too interesting to keep).

The People

Well, I constantly had to revamp my opinions of them, also. The first night I stayed here, some eight years ago, I was with the pastor, Arthur Sinder, in his beautiful, almost palatial home. I knew also, that there were others, but did not know that there were so many. I did not discover it until this third time. I asked the pastor how many teachers and ex-teachers were in his congregation of more than 300 people and he estimated thirty-five. Beautiful homes and educated people where a man raised in a level country as I was, would not have thought could or would live.

Twenty-five miles from the railroad over the most terrible roads I ever saw, they are emerging, and soon will be (so they think and hope) on the lowest level route from the west to the southwest, permitting a detour from all the ranges east of Frostburg, Maryland, and saving near a hundred miles of travel to the famous Shenandoah Caverns and the famous valley.

Churches

In this little village and surrounding country, two churches are holding first place, ours and the Church of the Brethren. Within two squares of each other, and with small difference between them and with inter-relationships binding them together, it seems folly to be divided. Neither having preaching services every Sunday. I told Brother Snider that if his people had enough preaching, ours surely were surfeited. Which is right? One thing about these people, they do go to preaching. It has been more than 25 years since I saw such crowds going to church in any other place.

The Revival

Our meeting consisted of two sessions each day, one with Mrs. Bame and the children in the morning, and all of us in the evening. Spirited singing, great audiences, sometimes filling the church plus the church yard and requiring nearly half an hour to disentangle the autos and get them away, we came away after two wonderful weeks, praising the Lord for many young lives captured for the Master and offering themselves for his service. Closing with a communion service with the young people and new converts following the Master in "doing as he had done" we came away rejoicing in the Lord for all his goodness to us, and for the victory won in Jesus' name. I do not know if I can remain away from these dear people more than a year or not. It is surely a wonderful place and way to spend a part of a vacation and we have an interest here that is not passing with the days we spend with them. May the good Lord bless and help them to remain true and faithful, occupying "till he comes." I close hoping to escape the waste basket—not because I have told half. My next revival will be in December, somewhere.

CHARLES A. BAME.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The summer of 1927 marks an epoch in the history of our people in Elkhart. We are laying the foundation for a greater work and increased responsibilities in the future, and the joy of it all is to see how God's guiding hand is slowly clearing the way as we move forward. It meant much to decide that we would lay the foundation on which "to build" a new and greater church. It meant infinitely more to see carefully laid plans materialize, and to behold the foundation for a beautiful church nearly completed.

The work on the new church is progressing rapidly, thus making it possible to move out of the old into the new about the second week in October.

The dedicatory service will be in charge of Brother Rench.

Through the untiring efforts of our pastor and his co-workers we have experienced no "summer slump." They stayed on the job so that no time need be spent in catching up. Brother Duker has given his people no opportunity or excuse to scatter hither and thither.

Every auxiliary and individual of the church is working toward one common end—the accomplishment of a greater work. Each one realizes his tasks are great, responsibilities increased, and that to grow requires "united efforts."

The Sunday school shows steady growth and strength by holding her own in interest and attendance during the summer months.

The mid-week prayer services are full of interest and spiritual uplift because of the Bible lectures given by Brother Duker.

We have an unusually large attendance each week.

The young people are working in their own quiet way in the Christian Endeavor and we are expecting great results in this department.

We feel the work here is moving along in God's own way and the difficulties that seem like mountains, on their approach, have disappeared.

Ours is a full program for some weeks ahead which means united work for all, if the greater possibilities are realized.

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS, Correspondent.

CONFERENCE MINUTES

Business Sessions

The thirty-ninth General Conference of the Brethren church convened at Winona Lake, Indiana, on Monday evening, August 22, 1927. The Conference was called to order by Moderator C. H. Ashman. Greatly feeling the need of God's guidance, A. V. Kimmell led us to the throne of grace in prayer. After prayer every one heartily engaged in singing, "Blessed Assurance."

After further singing, G. E. Cone led in the opening devotions by reading from Mt. 16:13ff and offering prayer.

The regular opening message of the evening was given by Vice-Moderator R. Paul Miller on the subject of "His Offering and Appearing." Session closed with prayer by C. H. Ashman.

Tuesday Morning

Opened with song service conducted by Brother Zumbaugh. Devotions conducted by Freeman Ankrum.

The first item of business was the report of the Credential committee. There were present 62 ministerial, 127 lay and 2 co-operating delegates, a total of 190. Report accepted and committee ordered continued.

Motion carried that A. V. Kimmell be authorized, as President of the California District Ministerial Examining Board, to sign the credential of Sylvester Lowman who at the present time owned no church membership.

The second regular order of business was the organization of Conference. The following were nominated for the respective offices: Moderator, Martin Shively; Vice-Moderators, W. I. Duker, F. C. Vanator; Secretary, O. C. Starn; Assistant Secretary, H. H. Rowsey; Treasurer, N. G. Kimmell; Statistician, G. E. Cone; Committee on Committees, L. S. Bauman, G. W. Rench, H. F. Stuckman, J. Allen Miller, C. H. Ashman.

Motion prevailed that the secretary be instructed to cast the deciding ballot for the offices where but one nomination occurred. As a result, the following persons were elected: Moderator, Martin Shively; Vice-Moderator, W. I. Duker; Secretary, O. C. Starn; Treasurer, N. G. Kimmell; Assistant Secretary, H. H. Rowsey; Statistician, G. E. Cone; Committee on Committees, J. Allen Miller, L. S. Bauman, G. W. Rench.

The next regular order of the morning was the retiring Moderator's address by C. H. Ashman. He gave an able address on the subject of "The Care of all the Churches." Motion carried that the address be published in the Evangelist at once. Another motion prevailed that the address be accepted and a committee be appointed to consider the recommendations contained therein.

Friday Morning

Opened by singing several hymns. Prayer by Leslie Lindower.

Minutes of the previous business session were read and approved.

Report of Credential Committee was as follows: Ministerial 83; lay 202, cooperating 2, a total of 287. Report accepted.

Motion carried to sustain the chair in his ruling that all standing committees be given exclusive right to nominate members on the respective committees.

The following resolutions were offered by the Board of Benevolences and accepted by Conference:

WHEREAS, there has been some confusion, and the Board of Benevolence of the Brethren church has had some difficulty in determining who are eligible to pension from the benevolence fund of the Brethren church, and,

WHEREAS, difficulties have arisen in determining the amount the ministers should receive in the way of pensions on account of the fact that some have served for longer periods than others,

NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED, by the General Conference of the Brethren church that from and after the 1st day of September, 1927, no minister of said church shall be placed on the pension list nor shall receive any pension from the Board of Benevolence who has not held a pastorate of some church or churches in this denomination for a period of at least five (5) years.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, that any minister who has faithfully served this denomination in preaching the gospel in any of its churches for a period of five (5) years who shall be incapacitated for services by reason of some mental or physical infirmity, shall receive from the Board of Benevolence of the Brethren church, a pension in the sum of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars per month during the continuance of his disability.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that any and all ministers who have served the church faithfully for a period of fifteen (15) years or more, and who shall not have from any source other than the church, sufficient income from which to live, and who shall be incapacitated for service, shall receive in addition to the twenty-five ($25.00) dollars per month hereinabove provided for, one ($1.00) dollar per month for each and every year they have served beyond the fifteen (15) year period.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that these resolutions shall not apply to any person who has been placed on the pension list of said church prior to the first day of September, 1927.

Sunday School Notes

worship in the Spirit. It did in the case of David, for he went to work and enlisted the aid of Hiram, king of Tyre, and "prepared with all his might" the materials for his son Solomon to build the temple. 1 Ch. 29:2-5.

IX. Nathan Leads David to Repentance, 1 Sa. 12:1-13.

Golden Text.—"A broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." Ps. 51:17. The seeds of lust, treachery and murder which David had sown spring up in his own household, and he must reap the fatal harvest. Ga. 6:7, 8. From this time David feels himself a humbled man, his influence and authority weakened. The Psalm from which our Golden Text is taken expresses the sorrow of "a broken and contrite heart," and we ought to thank God that "He does not despise," for we too have sinned. "Many," says St. Augustine, "are disposed to fall like David; but not like David to rise again. The fall of David has been recorded that those who have not fallen may be kept from falling; and that those who have fallen may rise again."—From "The Illustrator."

X. Solomon's Wise Choice, 1 Kings 3:4-15. The king went to Gibeon to sacrifice because the Tabernacle was located there. At the close of the day of feasting and worship God offered Solomon in a dream whatever he most desired. He chose what weighed most on his heart—the wisdom to rule the people. He was given not only superior wisdom, but many other prizes that a king might desire.

XI. Solomon Dedicates the Temple, 1 Kings 8. After seven years of labor the Temple is completed. The Ark and the sacred vessels of the Tabernacle are brought into the Temple amid a vast amount of sacrificing. The Ark has found a permanent resting place and Jehovah's sanctuary becomes the center of the Kingdom. A dedicatory speech and remarkable prayer are made by Solomon. Then occur more sacrifices and feasting lasting over a period of fourteen days.

XII. The Kingdom Divided, 1 Kings 12:1-24. Upon the death of Solomon, the people demanded relief from the burdens before they gave their allegiance to his son, Rehoboam. The young king was advised by the Elders to grant the people's demand, but the young men counselled otherwise and Rehoboam foolishly followed their advice, arrogantly promising to increase their burdens. As a result the ten northern tribes seceded, choosing Jeroboam as their king. But Rehoboam ruled in Jerusalem.

The District Conference will meet at the Loree church, eight miles south of Peru, Indiana, on the Strawtown pike, beginning Tuesday evening, October 4. Those driving from the north will follow U. S. road No. 31 south of Peru until they see a sign directing them east to Loree. Those from the south will follow the same road north of Kokomo, Indiana, until they see the sign then turn east. Those wishing to come on the Union traction will come to Bunker Hill where they will be met by auto. There is a train on the steam road which stops at Loree coming from the east at 5:30 P. M. and coming from the west at 8 A. M. We are looking forward for a great Conference, and ample provision will be made for all. Don't forget the date, October 4, 5 and 6.

We are 3 miles southeast of Bunker Hill, Indiana, 5 miles northeast of Miami, Indiana and eight miles south of Peru, Indiana.
C. A. STEWART, Pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA DISTRICT CONFERENCE, OCTOBER 4-6TH

In this note we want to appeal especially to those Brethren both preachers and laymen who have not been in the habit of attending the District conferences in this state. Consider the needs of your church, its problems and future, and see if you do not think that some help could be found at our conferences for it. Think of your own life and ministry and of the possible inspiration and zeal which is here for you to receive. Did you ever hear the story of the two nuts? A jumbo English walnut kernel was lying on the table beside a hazel nut kernel. Said the Hazel nut to the Walnut, "I wonder why I didn't grow big and fine like you." Answered the Walnut, "You just crawled into too small a shell when you were young and then stayed there!" Don't you think that that is the reason many of our lives and churches are so apparently small from first to last? Don't we draw our little circle closely about us and loathe to step out of it? You may consider yourself very successful, but even then these great conferences will help enlarge your successes. Come to conference. While it is not held out as an inducement to attend conference at all, for the attraction should be on far higher grounds, yet the majority of folks coming to Philadelphia at once begin to think of the historic monuments and scenes that should be seen while here. The committee have not been unmindful of this and in order to prevent any promiscuous leaving of the conference proper in order to see these things, they have set aside one afternoon especially for it. There will be a very brief session that afternoon closing at 2:30. There will be a big P. R. T. bus awaiting to take all who care to go to see these famous places. This trip will only cost a dollar or so, but would cost several times that much if taken any other way. This will be a real and rare opportunity for the members of this conference.

Dr. Henry Ostrom, who is so popular as a great Bible teacher on America's largest conference platforms, will be with us each day from the first to last.

Pennsylvania Brethren, attend this conference and you will not want to miss another. Enlarge your fellowship among the Brethren, enlarge your vision of our work as a church, increase your knowledge of the Bible under Ostrom's rich teaching, and help us lay plans for our greatest effort for Christ before he returns!

R. PAUL MILLER,
Entertaining Pastor.

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE - IS - YOUR - MASTER - AND - ALL - YE - ARE - BRETHREN -

Spirit of God, Descend

Spirit of God, descend upon my heart;
Wean it from earth, through all its pulses move;
Stoop to my weakness, mighty as thou art,
And make me love thee as I ought to love.

I ask no dream, no prophet ecstasies,
No sudden rending of the veil of clay,
No angel visitant, no opening skies;
But take the dimness of my soul away.

Hast thou not bid us love thee, God and King?
All, all thine own, soul, heart, strength, and mind;
I see thy cross; there teach my heart to cling.
O let me seek thee, and O let me find!

Teach me to feel that thou art always nigh;
Teach me the struggles of the soul to bear,
To check the rising doubt, the rebel sigh;
Teach me the patience of unanswered prayer.

Teach me to love thee as thine angles love,
One holy passion filling all my frame;
The kindling of the heaven-descended Dove,
My heart an altar, and thy love the flame.

—George Croly, the Methodist Hymnal.

What Rally Day Should Mean

Rally Day is an annual event in almost every church, and it should be. There are those who say that we should be so faithful through the summer months that fall would require no special rally, and they are right. But while that is the ideal, it is far from being lived up to, and so long as our churches are composed in the main of average human beings with average human frailties, we shall need these times of reviewing and of setting ourselves anew to the tasks before us. Some have objections to Rally Days because such too often prove to be merely single events consisting of special programs and special efforts to get large crowds, all of which is more or less unrelated to the days and weeks that follow. That objection is valid also. A Rally Day that is only a one day spurt, that has nothing more in view, that has no aims or plans that connect it up with the future really belies its name; it is not a rally day at all. But because some churches and Sunday schools do stage such affairs and call them Rally Days is no reason why we should refuse to make use of this widely profitable event in the church calendar. We need Rally Days that really rally, Rally Days that have aim and plan, Rally Days that mean something.

Now, there are any number of things that Rally Day may mean for us—worthy aims that we may set before ourselves to accomplish, but first of all it ought to mean just what the name indicates. That is, it ought to be a truly honest Rally Day. It ought to really start an era of fresh and more vigorous activity in the church and Sunday school. Elijah conducted such a rally day on Mount Carmel, recovering Israel from apostasy, giving the people a new grip on faith in and devotion to the true God. Ezra planned and executed a real and famous rally day in Jerusalem, on which occasion he read the Book of the Law in the ears of the people from dawn until high noon. A new love for the law of Jehovah was revived and the people set themselves with renewed purpose to its obedience. Unless Rally Day stirs the hearts of the people with fresh devotion to God, with new determination to be loyal to the church and with keener concern for others it is not true to its name.

Rally Day ought to mean the calling of the church forces to a new year of work. The idea of work ought to be gotten into the minds of the people. That is an important condition to success in the church of Christ as it is in every other line of interest.
